It is not often that a publication passes the millionth milestone in its circulation, but H. L. Hastings' lecture on "The Inspiration of the Bible," delivered before the Annual Convention of the Y. M. C. Association of Massachusetts in 1881, before 1890 had reached a circulation of about 1,500,000 copies, and is still marching on more rapidly than ever, Mr. John K. Hastings having in the autumn of 1889 issued a single edition of more than 500,000 copies in London for circulation throughout the British Empire. Persons who are interested in seeing a lecture on the Bible which circulates by the million, among skeptics and Christians, and which has been commended by eminent men on both sides of the Atlantic, should send a few shillings to H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, for copies of this and the various other five-cent pamphlets included in the Anti-Infidel Library.

OBITUARY.

ANSEL LAKE died at the residence of his son, B. F. Lake, in Campton, Kane Co., Ill., January 10th, aged 78 years, 2 months and 15 days.

He was one of the first settlers in Kane county. As a total abstainer from all intoxicating liquors and tobacco he was well known, and he was opposed, also, to all oath-bound secret societies. He was an old subscriber to the Christian Cynosure, which was his favorite paper. He voted the Prohibition ticket at the last Presidential election. An upright and honest man, his memory will long be green.

LODGE NOTES.

A CURIOUS MIXTURE.—The organ of New England Methodism, Zion's Herald, starts on a New Year with the following news from Maine:

"South West Harbor.—The most extensive revival ever known in this place is in progress under the direction of Rev. W. C. Haskell, and in the M. E. Church lately dedicated. Sabbath, Dec. 29, the house was packed; Rev. O. H. Fernald, D. D., of Bucksport, preached. The whole audience was bathed in tears. After the sermon there were 30 baptisms, and 75 came to the communion. The new classes were announced, and 70 converts were arranged in them. Tuesday evening the Masons had a lecture in the church at 7:30 on 'The Antiquity and Utility of their Institutions,' the spirit and pathos of which were in keeping with the revival spirit prevailing. This was followed at 9:30 p. m. by a sermon from Rev. Bro. Fernald, on the theme, 'The Great Debt, and How to Pay It.' The church was still crowded, and scores were weeping. At 10:30 p. m. the services were changed, and three were baptized and one received in full; three having been received on the Sabbath previous. During the next one and one-half hours there were twenty-five prayers and over one hundred testimonies. Ten minutes before midnight the invitation was given, and six rose for prayers. One hundred and fifty now knelt in silent prayer while the bell tolled the death of the old year, and rang in the birth of the new year. They have had over one hundred conversions. A happy and deserved surprise came to Bro. Haskell—a fur coat, cap and gloves. May his spirit ever be warm with heavenly clothing!"

THE K. OF L. AND LABOR UNIONS.—The American Federation of Labor Unions, meeting in Boston in December, received the following resolution from a committee:

"That hereafter all conferences by the executive officers of the federation with executive officers of the Knights of Labor in relation to trade union organizations, or the mutual interchange and recognition of working cards, shall cease."

On this resolution an animated discussion took place, the feeling of the delegates being that no communication should be carried on between the Federation and the Knights of Labor in future. President Gompers spoke at length, saying: "The proposition of the Knights of Labor to recognize the interchange of cards and labels is ridiculous and preposterous. These people organized in opposition to the trade unions. We cannot recognize the interchange of cards. Outside of the unions there is room for the working people to assemble and discuss abstract questions. We proposed to the Knights of Labor that the trades districts of the Knights of Labor be discontinued, and we, on our part, would use our influence to urge our fellow-workmen to join the mixed assemblies of the Knights of Labor." Finally a motion of Frank K. Foster, "that the resolution be referred to a committee of five, of whom the president shall be one, with a request that they issue an address to the American workmen, defining the position of the Federation towards the Knights of Labor," was carried. The report as a whole was then adopted.

The Knights of Pythias are ready to canonize Justus H. Rathbone as the first saint of their order. One of their orators says of him, as published in their organ at Columbus, O.: "Republics may rise, and republics may fall, yet the order of the Knights of Pythias will live, and as centuries chase each other, the name of Lima lodge will remain as the place where passed away the one man who has done more by the organization of the order of the Knights of Pythias; who has done more for the cause of humanity, and to strengthen the arms of the young men of this land; who has done more to unite men together in the bonds of brotherhood, than any other man of the present century." And yet it is not pretended that this wonderful man was a Christian, and his only work was to get up a secret society!

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1890.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

The work for this meeting is now well begun. The N. C. A. Board at their last meeting appointed a committee to co-operate with Secretary Stoddard and push forward during his absence for a few months in New England. The call herewith printed has been signed by some of the best and most influential of the Chicago pastors, and new names are being daily added. The committee are securing its publication as widely as possible in the religious papers with the request that all pastors in the interior and northwestern States send their names to be appended to the call. In a week or two we hope to report hundreds. Such an endorsement and promise of co-operation will go far toward making a successful meeting.

But all may help to this end, for there can be no success without the blessing of God; for this the humblest may pray, and in God's providence may have the noblest part. The call reads:

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago on or about the — day of April, 1890.

Our senior editor is still in feeble health, but is encouraged by physicians to expect recovery and a renewal of his usual vigor. He desires to express his gratitude in this public manner to those whose friendly aid supported him in a great emergency. Beside those mentioned elsewhere, Division Superintendent Dyer of the Santa Fe road, Dr. Gordon and Mr. Prigmore, undertaker, and Mr. Flint and family of Las Vegas are especially remembered for their kindness. Several of those who were generously assisting him were members of the Masonic lodge, but he believes all were in heart in sympathy with his own views. Some are separated from the lodge, but pay dues only through dread of its power.

The Bottling Bill, introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Wilson of Kentucky, was for the special benefit of the distillers of that State, who produce the staple commodity and pay to the general government annually about $15,000,000. Should this bill become a law, it will practically nullify all prohibitory or even restrictive legislation. For if the distillers may put up their liquors in quart, pint or half-pint bottles, and ship and sell in the "original packages" regardless of local law (and such has been the decision of Ohio courts), then there is an end of all legal restraint. The towns and counties of Kentucky and Ohio, that have adopted local option, will be entirely helpless to resist the inflowing tide of drunkenness and crime. It remains to be seen whether a business that is destructive to the best interests of every society, shall have special favor from the general government.

The British American wants a new party built on an anti-Romanist platform, which shall contain as its leading planks, "the perpetual severance of church and state;" "the taxation of all church property over a limited amount;" "the State inspection of private schools and nunneries;" "the restriction of immigration;" "the lengthening of the time for naturalization;" "the expulsion of the Jesuits;" "the settlement of the tariff question by statesmen and scholars who are not manufacturers;" and "the denial of rights of citizenship to all who recognize the temporal authority of the Pope of Rome." But a party built on one idea, and which allows of no outside issue but the merely material one of tariff, will never win a preponderance of votes. British Americans, as a rule, have not voted with the Prohibitionists. Many of those who were born across the water still cling to their ale and beer, and often to something stronger; nor are they especially enlightened on the danger of secret combinations. Not one in ten thousand has the least idea that Freemasonry in the higher degrees is but a branch out of the old Jesuit stem, or that while secret orders are allowed at all in the land it does not particularly matter by what name they are called. The Jesuit who cannot work in a Masonic lodge as easily as anywhere else is no true Jesuit.

The death of Dr. John Joseph Ignatius Dollinger, the leader in the "Old Catholic" movement, recalls the earnestness with which many Roman Catholics withstood the introduction of the doctrines of the "Immaculate Conception" and "Papal Infallibility." These were regarded as innovations, and those who opposed them took the name of "Old," in distinction from the "New" Catholics who accepted them. With many Protestants this revolt was hailed as a new reformation, which it was hoped might take up and carry on that of the 16th century. But the movement had in it the seeds of its own dissolution. After thirty years it was almost forgotten. The Old Catholics, while denying the infallibility of the Pope, held that the church was infallible. When, therefore, a church council had decided that these were Christian doctrines, they could not escape the conclusion that they must be accepted. Old Catholics, too, denied the right of private judgment, and so cut themselves off from all claim to be interpreters of God's Word. The practical lesson of this failure is, that any reformation, in which long-established evils are to be opposed, must be based on immutable principles, be radical in its character, and in every respect logically consistent. The reformation under Luther was arrested in its progress, and has largely failed of its results because it had in it so many elements of the papal system. It was not radical and needed to be reformed. The anti-slavery and temperance reforms have had success only as they were radical measures. Slavery had to be prohibited. The elements of power in the temperance movement are "total abstinence for the individual and prohibition as the policy of the state." This is not less true of the anti-secrecy reform. All compromises and attempts at discrimination between different kinds of secret societies, tolerating one and opposing another, is worse than folly. There may be a difference between kinds of poison, but they are all poison, and should be labeled as such.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster has finally organized her non-partisan sisters. Their meeting at Cleveland last week was peculiar,—and characteristic. There was much enthusiasm, much indecision, and a little rancor. Not all the "sweetness and light" was manifested that should attend a meeting of pious and earnest women filled with a great purpose of good to men. On Wednesday the constitution was adopted, naming the new society the "American Woman's Christian Temperance League." Next day this was reconsidered, and after about half a day of discussion "National Crusaders" was settled upon as the title. But after dreaming on the matter over night, another reconsideration and debate brought about a third agreement on "Non-partisan Woman's Christian Temperance Union." This adoption of the name of the old society, with the pugnacious addition of the question on which they split, is not an augury of peace and good will. Mrs. Aldrich, of Iowa, the "evangelist" of the new movement, who believes in "muscular Christianity," moved a declaration of war on Miss Willard's friends and carried the vote. These are unhappy beginnings for a society that bears the Christian name.

THE MOODY INSTITUTE AND THE ENGLISH BIBLE.

The men's department of Mr. Moody's Bible Institute was opened Thursday evening, Jan. 16, with appropriate exercises. Mr. Moody, Dr. McPherson, Prof. Scott and Prof. Weidner addressed the large number of friends present. There are about fifty young men to begin with, and nearly as many young ladies in the ladies' department. Mr. Moody stated the object of the school to be: 1. To train young women for the foreign field. 2. To train young women for home field work, to assist pastors who are unable to do a sufficient amount of house-to-house visiting. 3. To raise up a supply of young men who can handle the Bible in a helpful and interesting way.

Mr. Moody disclaimed any intention to lower the requirements of the pulpit, and wished it understood that the school does not aim at fitting men for the pulpit, but rather for helpers in the great work of spreading the Gospel.

In the United States alone there is a demand for at least 28,000 men and women who are able to instruct their fellows in the right way of living. There are but 2,597 in all classes in the different seminaries, and the question arises, can the demand for 28,000 men be supplied by the long-course schools? It will not be surprising if some of the students from the Bible Institute and similar schools find their way to positions of usefulness and power in the pulpit. The class of instructors employed thus far—Dr. Pierson, Dr. Weidner, Prof. Scott and others equally noted—suggests that careful and thorough work is being done. To be filled with the English Bible is a rare possession even among seminary graduates. Knowledge of that version of the Bible is acquired largely, if at all, outside of and subsequent to the regular course of theology. The time of the students is so filled with other work that the seminary authorities are offering prizes as incentives to proficiency in the English Bible. There is undoubtedly a neglect of the chief implement of service among English speaking people—the King James Bible. Hebrew and Greek are important and should be taught, but not to the exclusion of the English.

This Bible Institute will offer a valuable post-graduate course to seminary men. "But when he saw the multitude, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd. Then saith he unto his disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Matt. 9: 36-38.

—Bro. Philip Bacon suggests a kind of "new departure" for the N. C. A. It is not a new thing for the lecturers in this reform to preach the Gospel for the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints; but to some friends it seems a new idea that the mission of the N. C. A. and its workers is to preach the Gospel, and especially that part of it which is neglected by pastors and evangelists. The N. C. A. cannot begin a new sect. But the suggestion of Bro. Bacon would end in that and nothing less. Let us look upon our mission as higher and nobler than that. The churches of Christ are cursed with names and divisions enough! But these divisions heal, and the parts come together just so far as we receive the Lord Jesus Christ by his Holy Spirit and become wholly obedient to his will. There is no device of the devil so potent to divide the people of God and destroy their spiritual power as that of false worship. The whole history of the church from Cain and Abel to this day is proof of this. And the false worship of this our day which are undermining and breaking down the church are entrenched and organized in the secret lodge system. While that system is permitted to work we are on the straight road to the semi-heathenism of the Asiatic churches. We might begin to save from drowning this man and that who has been thrown into a river, but our wisdom is to go and stop their being thrown in.

COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY.

The unquestioned benefits that have resulted from absolute free trade between the several States of the Union is an unanswerable argument in favor of commercial reciprocity with Canada, whose people are kindred in language and religion, and whose interests are in so many ways identified with our own. Manifestly it is but a question of time when they will either become an independent nation, or what is now probable, be absorbed in our own. This would put an end to all our disputes about fisheries and other controversies, and would be a vast benefit to them and us. But in order that this may be accomplished there needs to be greater harmony of interests and feeling. Commercial reciprocity would tend strongly to produce this result. When we can dispense with the custom houses on our northern border we may expect the international line to quickly disappear. We hope Mr. Butterworth's measure may have a careful consideration by Congress.

Next to Canada we ought to have a free interchange of commodities with Mexico and the Central American States. Their products are, in the main, such as we cannot produce, nor can they manufacture or raise those things of which we have in abundance. Tropical fruits are now largely received. These we pay for mainly in gold, which goes to Europe to pay for goods which we ourselves might send. Sugar and coffee might be received from the same source. It was the favorite plan of General Grant to secure reciprocal free trade with Mexico, and the Pan-American Congress now in session has already done much to produce a better understanding of mutual interests. If ever the dream of a republic extending from Panama to the Arctic Ocean shall be realized, it will be when these people come to understand each other, and the interests of one is the interests of all.

—Requests have come from several friends for photographs of Mrs. Blanchard. Fine ones by Hesler of this city can be had at the Cynosure office for 25 cents each.

—Joseph Cook opens the fifteenth season of his Monday lecture course in Tremont Temple, Boston, Feb. 3rd next. The course continues six weeks, and will discuss vital questions in church and state with preludes on leading reforms.

—A note from Prof. H. C. King of Oberlin indicates that his address on the secret orders will be printed in pamphlet form and placed on sale, at the urgent demand of the Oberlin people. This is better, on the whole, than to give it to the world through the Cynosure, since the publication of a portion at least is not precluded. The enthusiasm of the college and citizens of Oberlin in this matter is a notable "sign of the times" for our reform. The note of Rev. George Thompson on this address will be read on the 6th page.

—The Watchman, organ of the Young Men's Christian Associations, begins its sixteenth year as the "Young Men's Era." The change of name was made as there is another leading paper, the Watchman of Boston, with which it was often confused. It also has a new editor, Mr. H. F. Williams, who is fortunate in having an article each week from the retiring editor, Rev. S. A. Taggart. The first issue of the new management says: "The Era is the advocate of no special views of religious truth other than the faithful presentation to young men of salvation through Christ alone, and the Word of God as their only infallible rule of faith and practice, and to urge loyalty to the church of their choice."

—The Masonic Chronicle, which purports to speak truly for the lodge, says: "There is a cave near Charleston, Va., which is known as the Washington Masonic cave. It is divided into several apartments, one of which is called the Lodge room. Tradition says that Washington and his Masonic brethren held lodges in this cavern, near which he had his quarters for two years." We would hardly give place to such a statement, but to show to all men, and Masons especially, how they are continually fed on falsehood if they put their trust in lodge literature.

To show this fact more clearly, it may be said of the above:

1. That Washington held no lodges with Masons after he was 36 years old, years before the Revolution. (See his letter to Rev. Mr. Snyder, quoted by Sparks.)

2. Washington did not have his quarters two years in Virginia, if "quarters" refers to the army.

3. There is no such place as Charleston, Va., given in the U. S. postal guide.

—There is a Presbyterian minister named Williams, preaching in the southern part of this city, who is a Mason and Odd-fellow. He is so bewitched by the lodge that he gives his influence in their favor, publicly as well as in private, inviting these lodges to come as such to his church, and giving the service, even on the Lord's day, to their glorification. He continued this in spite of remonstrance, until it is understood that his session put a stop to it. We have heard of Jesuits acting as pastors to Protestant churches, so that they might better accomplish their devilish designs, and the management of this preacher makes us almost believe that he also is a Jesuit in disguise.

—It was not long since reported that a prominent Mason from California appeared in Boston, and convinced some good but unreflecting men that the lodge was the great check upon the aggressions of Romanism in that State. The power of Rome is great in San Francisco. There is hardly an American city where the Pope has more power than is exercised from the old church on the corner of Du Pont and California streets. But there is plenty of evidence to show that the lodge rather aids than withstands Jesuit aggression in that city. If this Mason is the Edwin A. Sherman who lately addressed the Committee of One Hundred in Boston, on the aggressions of Romanism, we can refute his evidence in another way. Mr. Sherman, when asked about the Chinese in California, declared them to be "the greatest curse that has ever fallen on this country." While they send out of the country," he said, "the money they make in it, they introduce even among the white youth a corruption that hopelessly poisons them for all life." Now such a speech is utterly misleading and false. Chinese prostitution in San Francisco is virtue compared with that of the whites. The free theaters attached to numerous bawdy houses, and thronged with boys and girls on such prominent streets as Kearney, are as much more vile and dangerous than the Chinese houses as they are more open and attractive. We can give witnesses enough of this matter if they are needed.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. J. G. Carson, D.D., of Xenia, O., and his wife, while riding lately, were thrown from their carriage and received painful, but not dangerous injuries.

—The Illinois agent, Bro. Hawley, being near home, spent the Sabbath with his family at Wheaton. He has appointments this week in the flourishing towns of Geneva and St. Charles on the Fox river.

—Miss Maria L. Stoddard, daughter of our General Agent, starts for New Orleans this week, under appointment from the American Missionary Association. She is to form one of the corps of teachers in Straight University.

—Rev. Prof. K. O. Lomen, professor in the Theological Seminary of the Norwegian Augustana Synod at Beloit, Iowa, died on New Year's day. He was born in Decorah, Iowa, in 1860, and was a graduate of Thiel College and the Philadelphia Seminary.

—Rev. C. H. Goss, for several years pastor of the Moody church in this city, has been obliged to cease from labor on account of ill health and overwork. He has lately started for Europe with Mr. F. H. Revell of the evangelical book store in this city.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard has gone East for a week or two, partly on business for Wheaton College. He is also under engagement to read a paper before Manhattan Congregational Association. This organization was founded by Drs. Storrs, Taylor and others, as a result of the Beecher scandal.

—Chloe Lankton is a name well known throughout Christendom. The patient sufferer who bore it died at her home in New Hartford, Conn., Jan. 16, after a week's sickness, at the age of seventy-eight. Confined to her bed since she was sixteen, her remarkable, patient, hopeful Christian spirit has made her beloved by hundreds of thousands in all lands. Two lives of her have been published and widely circulated. Though born in poverty, the comforts of life have always been provided her by her friends.

REFORM NEWS.

DISCUSSION KILLS IT.

PARKE, York Co., Jan. 23, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The week past has been filled with labors and successes abundant. Three addresses were given at Muddy Creek Forks. It was estimated that two hundred or more were present each evening, notwithstanding darkness and bad roads. Rev. S. Jamison, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, made my stop very pleasant by many kind attentions, as did his brother John, who is pastor of a neighboring church (Hopewell) where I spoke last week. I have an appointment in the Hopewell neighborhood, at Round Hill Presbyterian church, this evening. Tuesday evening found me addressing a congregation gathered in the Airville U. P. church. Rev. Aiken, the pastor, helped much in making this a success. Some years since, in a literary society in Airville, the lodge question was discussed several evenings. The result has been the two lodges then in existence have become extinct. There are but few there who uphold such things now.

At Brogueville, where I spoke last evening, I was told there would be some replies by lodge men. One man, it was reported, had bet $50 that I did not know anything about Masonry. Though ample opportunity was given, no one appeared in the lodge defence; and all the Masons present voted that I had properly represented their institution when I asked any to rise who thought I had not. A good collection showed how the majority felt. New names are daily being added to the Cynosure list, and our God is leading on. I suppose appointments are made ahead for each night this week. The snow, which is now rapidly falling, may impede somewhat should it continue long. Nearly every home has one or more sick with the "la grippe." Yours for Christ and reform,
W. B. STODDARD.

THE FLOATING MISSION CHAPEL.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The chapel, as we design it to be managed, will be the only thing of the kind on the rivers that I know of. It is no small enterprise, and we do not expect to raise it by magic. It will take much patient work yet to bring it about. I have now $260 in the bank. It is a big undertaking to raise the money, but it is only a question of time. I have no thought of failure. I shall leave the money in the bank, add to it as fast as I can, and if it is not raised before next summer, I may have money of my own to complete the amount. I do not know of anything that will add so much to the convenience in carrying on the warfare, and make it possible to do so much with the same effort and expense. It will have many advantages over the tent, and can be used in weather that would be too wet for a tent. I am out of debt, and having such an outfit of pictures, can make a work self-sustaining that could not be done with ordinary conveniences—halls and churches—without more than the entire cost of the chapel each year. We can take it almost to Wheaton, up the Illinois river; in fact, we can reach nearly twenty States with little expense for moving. Am glad to receive suggestions. Your Bro. in Christ,
I. R. B. ARNOLD.

—There are 276 college Y. M. C. A.'s in the United States, with 17,125 members.

—The number of Lutheran communicants in the United States and Canada is given, by the Secretaries of the General Council, as 1,955,000.

—Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Scudder, formerly of Chicago, have been compelled, on account of the illness of their daughter, and their own age and infirmities, to retire from their work in Japan.

THE HOME.

I'M HURRIED, CHILD.

"O mother, look! I've found a butterfly
Hanging upon a leaf. Do tell me why
There was no butter! Oh, do see its wings!
I never, never saw such pretty things—
All streaked and striped with blue and brown and gold!
Where is its house when all the days are cold?"
"Yes, yes," she said in absent accents mild,
"I'm hurried, child."

"Last light my dolly quite forgot her prayers;
An' when she thought you had gone downstairs,
Then dolly was afraid, an' so I said,
'Just don't you mind, but say 'em in the bed,
Because I think God is just as near.'
When dolls are 'fraid do you s'pose he can hear?"
The mother spoke from out the ruffles piled,
"I'm hurried, child!"

"Oh, come and see the flowers in the sky
The sun has left; and won't you, by and by,
Dear mother, take me in your arms and tell
Me all about the pussy in the well,
Then tell me of the babies in the wood,
And then, perhaps, about Red Riding Hood?"
"Too much to do! Hush, hush, you drive me wild,
I'm hurried, child!"

The little one grew very quiet now,
And grieved and puzzled was the childish brow;
And then it queried: "Mother, do you know
The reason 'cause you must be hurried so?
I guess the hours are little-er than I,
So I will take my pennies and will buy
A big clock, oh, big as it can be,
For you and me!"

The mother now has leisure infinite;
She sits with folded hands, and face as white
As winter; in her heart is winter's chill;
She sits at leisure, questioning God's will.
"My child has ceased to breathe, and all is night!
Is heaven so dark that it doth grudge my light?
O life! O God! I must discover why
The time drags by."

O mothers sweet, if cares must ever fall,
Pray do not make them stones to build a wall
Between thee and thine own, and miss thy right
To blessedness, so swift to take its flight!
While answering baby questionings you are
But entertaining angels unaware;
The richest gifts are gathered by the way
For darkest day.

SIMPLICITY IN DRESS.

Some weeks ago, having occasion to cross from Jersey City to New York, I observed on the opposite side of the ladies' cabin of the ferry-boat, in which I was seated, two young women of probably eighteen years of age, who appeared to derive excessive entertainment from scanning and criticising the apparel of those of their own sex who successively entered the cabin. Each lady, as she came inside the door, was rapidly "looked over" by the two giddy watchers, who would then exchange meaning glances, arch their eyebrows, and give way to a remark, giggle, or laugh. Evidently, dress was in all their thoughts. In noting their general demeanor, it seemed to me that those girls were such as would surrender everything that they might themselves become the recipients of the favors and bestowments of that fickle, and withall merciless goddess—Fashion. For, I have not forgotten what was said to me some years ago by a friend who had just returned from the city of Washington, when, in referring to the frivolity and the licentiousness prevailing there, he repeated the remark of a high official—that it was not in most cases mere "badness" that led so many young women astray, as it was the craving to be richly and fashionably dressed, to gratify their love of adornment and display.

A worthy woman said to my wife, when discoursing upon this subject in connection with benevolent work among the poor and the outcast, that upon a certain occasion, dressed in elegant attire, she had made a visit to a home for the fallen. Upon leaving the house, she felt decidedly pleased with herself at the orderly behavior of the inmates, and the seemingly respectful attention with which they had received her moral remarks. Afterward, however, when the matron observed that "the girls were so glad to have you come, for indeed it did their eyes good to feast on so fine a dress and to see the latest fashion," she said that she felt humbled to the dust, and as though she could sink through the floor. The lesson was never forgotten, for she has always since then been careful to dress with simplicity when duty called her to such places.

Corroborative of the above is the following: A repentant female convict in one of our penitentiaries pleadingly said to a benevolent woman visitor, that she wished the ladies who came to the prison to speak and pray with them would dress more simply; for the prisoners' thoughts were often so drawn away to the visitor's fine or fashionable attire, that they received no good impressions whatever, but rather the reverse. Her own fall had been caused by dress. A visitor to our county prison, looking upon a number of young women who had been locked up over night for disorderly conduct, wondered that she should see females so finely dressed in such a place. She was given to understand that it was the love of gay attire which, more than aught else, had been the cause of their downfall.

It is not, therefore, simply against sensuous or indecent attire that I plead, but against such attire in general as is out of conformity with what the apostle commends in his well known remarks to Timothy, that the apparel of those professing godliness needs to be of that modest character which properly accords with the "shamefacedness and sobriety" of Christian women. Probably it may seem to some that it may be a rather tame, and not a particularly direct and heroic, method of combatting the social evil—this of going counter to the generally accepted styles of dressing and adorning, and so appearing in a way which might cause one to be mistaken for a primitive Methodist or even a Quaker. Some may even deem it to be ridiculous or despicable. Nevertheless, unless there is a breaking away from this enslaving spirit of fashion, it seems to me there can be no permanent progress made in the direction of social purity reform.—Josiah W. Leeds.

WHEN MRS. HAYES TAUGHT A LESSON.

Washington correspondence Philadelphia Press: Many vivid tableaux of Mrs. Hayes in stately scenes flash before my memory; her shiny black hair, coiffured with no ornament but a silver comb; her fondness for white or cream white silk or satin dresses on occasions of state, with black silk as an almost invariable second choice; her avoidance of low-necked evening gowns, though her neck and bust showed charming womanly outlines through their soft enveloping folds of lace or silk. She also greatly disliked and discountenanced these exposures in other women. Miss Austine Snead, whose neck and arms were her best physical points, and who naturally liked to show them, told me once how Mrs. Hayes beckoned her to her side in the blue parlor, when thus attired one evening at a reception, and whispered kindly to her to go upstairs into her own (Mrs. Hayes') dressing-room and get a little lace shawl she would find in a certain bureau drawer "and cover up that bosom and those arms." Miss Snead never again appeared in Mrs. Hayes' presence décolleté.

"NOW I SEE MY JEWELS AGAIN."

The Missionary Review gives an interesting narrative of Eugenie of Sweden, noted for her self-sacrificing devotion to the relief of the poor and the suffering. It is now many years ago that she was ordered by her physicians to go to an island off the coast for her health. On that island she found a large number of wretched cripples, many of them hopelessly incurable. She could not be happy until she had done something for their relief. She would build a home for these poor cripples, where they might have loving, nursing, and sisterly care. Their number was so great that the house must be large and costly, and she knew not how to raise the necessary funds. She wrote to her brother, the king, asking his consent to sell the crown-jewels that belonged to her and to use the proceeds of the sale for God. He thought Eugenie must be crazy. These jewels were heirlooms; they had come down from past generations. But there was one phrase in her letter that her brother could not forget. Her whole plea was "for Christ's sake." At last he wrote a reply giving his consent. The princess sold her jewels and finished and furnished the hospital. Her sublimest gift was the gift of herself. Into the home she had built she went day after day, God's ministering angel to those deformed and loathsome cripples. One day a poor woman, at whose bedside day after day she had thus been a visitor, was drawing near to death. Eugenie had been wont to sit by her, holding her hand, and pleading with her to accept Jesus as her Saviour. And now as the last hour had come she raised herself in bed, bent over the princess's hand, and caressing it, said: "Lovely princess, I bless the Lord for sending you to this island, for but for you I never should have learned to love Jesus." Then she fell back and expired, but the hand of Eugenie was covered with the tear-drops from those dying eyes. Eugenie looked down at her hand, saw those grateful tears glistening in the sunlight, and lifting her eyes to God, said: "O my Saviour, I sold my jewels for thee, but I see them all restored; and how much more beautiful they are than when I formerly owned them."

DRESS.

It is said that on one occasion Cogia Effendi, a Persian sage, dressed as a beggar, entered a house where a gay feast was being held. He was pushed hither and thither, hustled by one and another, and noticed kindly by no one. So Cogia withdrew, and repaired to his home, where he arrayed himself in his most splendid style, with jeweled shoes on his feet, a robe of cloth of gold on his back, and a turban glittering with a diamond aigrette on his head. Then, having hung at his side his saber, in the hilt of which flashed some valuable jewels, he returned to the feast. His entrance was the signal for attention on all sides. The guests, who before had rudely pushed him aside, now made way for his passing to and fro. The host came hastily toward him with the words, "Welcome, my Lord Effendi, thrice welcome; what will your lordship please to take?" In reply, Cogia quaintly, but expressively, stretched out his foot so that the jewel on his shoe sparkled; and then, taking his golden robe in one hand, and holding it away from him, said, with bitter irony, "Welcome, my lord coat, welcome, most excellent robe; what will your lordship please to take?" "For," said he, turning to his perplexed host, "I ought to ask my coat what it will take, seeing that my welcome is due solely to it."—Hall's Journal of Health.

Sydney Smith says: "Never teach false morality. How exquisitely absurd to teach a girl that beauty is of no value, dress of no use! Beauty is of value, her whole prospects and happiness in life may depend upon a new gown or a becoming bonnet; if she has five grains of common sense she will find this out. The great thing is to teach her their proper value, and that there must be something better under her bonnet than a pretty face, for real happiness in life."

ELSIE'S ADVENTURE.

BY AUNT LUCY.

"Rain! rain! rain! It's too bad," exclaimed Mary just as Aunt Lucy entered the room.

"Auntie, I never saw a little girl who had so much trouble as I do," she continued.

Auntie could not help laughing at the child, standing so disconsolately by the window, with beautiful "Baby Ethel" in her arms, while round the room were scattered the doll's cradle, buggy, a trunk of the nicest doll's clothes that ever made the heart of a 10-year-old mamma glad, and other toys too numerous to mention.

"Trouble, dear? I did not know that our pet had any," she said, and gently drew Mary upon her lap.

"Why, Auntie! you know it has rained every day this week; and my heart was set on going nutting with Cousin Fred and Lucy on Tuesday. Of course we couldn't go. And now Uncle Harry was coming to take me home with him to-day; so, of course, its begun to rain again!"

"Well, it is too bad; but you will have all the more pleasure after the rain; and you have reminded me of a true story, which I am quite sure you would like to hear; so I will tell it now before I forget."

"While I was teaching in the city there was a sweet little girl in my class whose name was Elsie Brown. She was just your age, 10 years old; and was such a bright, good little girl in the school that I became very fond of her.

"She was her papa's only child, and his greatest pleasure was to gratify her wishes. Her mamma was dead, but she lived with an aunt who had no children of her own, and she loved and cared for Elsie as well as though she were her own child. She had a beautiful home, and seemed very happy indeed until the time of my story.

"One day she read a story of a poor child who had a cruel step-mother, who was so unkind to her that she could not live at home. The story told how she bought some pop-corn and a corn-popper, a little oil-stove and some oil, and went to the woods, near a railroad station, and there she lived in a large hollow tree, and sold the corn, which she popped over her little stove, to the passengers as they stopped at the station, and made enough money to buy her food and clothes.

"Poor, foolish little Elsie began to think that this silly story described her case exactly. She remembered several times lately when her father or her aunt had spoken sharply to her because of her rudeness or disobedience, and she decided to do as the other little girl did, since they did not love her at home any more. Almost all the next night she lay awake planning. She had enough money in her bank to buy the corn, popper, stove, etc., and to pay her fare on the train to Elmwood, a town twelve miles from the city, and she made up her mind to go there the next day."

"All alone!" exclaimed Mary, forgetting her own "troubles."

"Oh! yes," said Auntie, "and leave her nice home and friends. She thought there never was a little girl who had so much trouble before."

Mary looked inquiringly at Auntie, who smiled and went on.

"Elsie took the money out of her bank and went to school as usual, saying nothing of her plans, but thinking how sorry her father and aunt would be that they had been so cross to her. At school she told several of her little friends as foolish as herself, and they thought what a brave heroine Elsie would be. She wrote a note bidding her papa and auntie good-bye, which one of the girls was to take home for her after she was gone.

"After school she went with the little girls to buy her things; then they went with her to the station, where she took the first train for Elmwood, promising to write to the other girls soon.

"Her aunt was frightened when she received Elsie's note and learned that she had gone to the country alone. She sent for Elsie's papa, who was as frightened as she, and in about an hour he was on another train for Elmwood. But when he arrived was still more distressed to hear that a little girl came on the train before, but no one knew where she had gone. After inquiring sometime, he heard that a milkman had taken her two miles further into the country. Hiring a fast horse he was not long in reaching the dairy, only to be disappointed again. Elsie had been there, but was gone. The milkman said he noticed her carrying a number of bundles, and asked her where she was going. She said she was a poor little girl without friends, and did not know where to go, so he told her to come with him and he would give her a home with his children. By the time they reached the dairy it was dark, and everything seemed so strange to Elsie that she was frightened and cried and begged so to be taken home, that the man took her back to town, thinking that he would telegraph to her papa to come for her.

"In some way they missed each other on the road, and Elsie's papa, wild with grief and fear, went to town again. Inquiring at the station, he found that they had been there, but as the last train had already gone to the city, the kind man had taken Elsie to the hotel for the night. Her papa was soon there and found his little girl still trembling and crying, refusing to eat or be comforted. As quick as he entered the room Elsie sprang to his arms, crying, 'Dear, dear papa, can you forgive your naughty little girl?'

"Mr. Brown could not speak for a moment, then he said, 'My precious darling, yes. But what sorrow you have given yourself, as well as your auntie and me. Why did you do it?' 'It was all that silly story,' she said. But papa would let her tell no more about it that night; and when he heard it he could not help smiling, though he was vexed that such stories were written.

"The next morning they went home, feeling as though they had had a frightful dream; and Elsie's auntie was almost sick with worrying about her. Elsie came to school again in a few days, and said she didn't see how she could have thought that she had any troubles; and she was one of my best scholars all through the year."

Just as Aunt Lucy said the last words Mary sprang towards the window, exclaiming, 'Why, there is Uncle Harry, and it isn't raining at all!' Then, giving Auntie a hug, she said, 'How foolish I am; just like Elsie; but I won't be so any more.'

TEMPERANCE.

LIQUOR IN ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

The Kansas Supreme Court Jan. 11, handed down a decision in the Faulkner case, brought from Marshall county, to test the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors in Kansas in original packages. It is the first time the question has been raised in this court, and as the question involved is a very interesting one the decision has been awaited with considerable interest. F. W. Faulkner was prosecuted in the District Court of Marshall county upon an indictment charging him with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors at the town of Oketo, Marshall county. The testimony offered on the trial showed that the defendant sold to numerous persons what were called "prize packages," being boxes about twelve inches square, in each of which there was a jug of whisky. These boxes were shipped from Nebraska, and were sold in Kansas by the defendant in the same form and condition in which they were shipped. The defendant was in charge of the railroad depot and express office at Oketo, and the boxes were shipped by express from Blue Springs. At the close of the testimony the defendant asked the court to instruct the jury that if packages containing intoxicating liquors were sold by the defendant in the original package as delivered by him in Kansas, such sales were not in violation of the constitution and laws of Kansas relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors. Defendant's attorneys urged that intoxicating liquors transported from another State to Kansas may be sold by the importer or person to whom they are shipped in the original packages free from State control, and that, so far as our constitution and laws would restrict or prohibit such sale, they violate the provision of the Federal Constitution which declares "that Congress shall regulate commerce among the several States." The opinion, which is quite an elaborate and able one, is written by Justice Johnson, and sustains the Kansas prohibitory law in every particular. The court holds that intoxicating liquors transported from another State to a point in Kansas are subject to the laws of Kansas, relating to the sale and disposition of such property to the same extent, and in like manner as are other intoxicating liquors already rightfully existing in the State, and can not be sold at the place of destination in the original packages or other form, except as the laws of the State prescribe. The police power of the State so exercised does not infringe on power delegated to Congress to regulate commerce between the States.

WINE IN THE WHITE HOUSE.

A significant article appeared in the Chicago Tribune last week, on Presidential dinner parties. Its significance lies in the fact that the Tribune belongs to that class of papers which sneered at Mrs. Hayes' "puritanical, parsimonious notions." Now it says: "The most generous entertainer among the occupants of the Executive Mansion was President Hayes," and goes on to give a full description of what it terms "the most notable entertainment, without exception, ever given there," the reception to the diplomatic corp in 1881. It mentions that two wine barrels of terrapin were prepared and served, and that the cost of this entertainment was $6,000, "though no wines were served." Thus it shows, unintentionally, probably, that wine is not a necessity in the most notable entertainment, and that some other motive than "stinginess" dictates its exclusion. In sharp contrast with President Hayes' entertainments were those of President Arthur, where a different wine was served with each course, and during the entire dinner "a cheap claret was served instead of water." No wonder, as this chronicler relates, that "at one of these state bouts, two ladies toppled out of their chairs, whereupon Mr. Arthur raised a great hullabaloo about the room being overheated, which, he proclaimed, caused the ladies to faint." It describes another of this same President's "bouts" which began Saturday night and ended some time Sunday morning. No ladies were present, the guests, according to the Tribune, being "pot-house dandies." "The boys" considered it was a "royal time," but in the estimation of the Tribune it "was a violation of the sanctity and dignity of the home of the Presidents, which was not uncommon during that administration." With these two examples before him, we wish President Harrison had seen fit not to have had "four or five wine glasses at every plate" at his state dinner Tuesday, the very day Christians all over the land were especially praying for him.—Union Signal.

THE COMPENSATION FOLLY.

When we referred to the temperance views of Justice Brewer we had not seen his now celebrated Kansas decision. We give it up. We don't believe in any tom-foolery about temperance or prohibition. We believe that the State has the right and power to wipe out the cursed traffic, the same that it has to put out a fire in any man's house; to punish him for selling liquor, the same that it has to punish him for setting his own house on fire. The extreme delicacy of moral distinction that will punish a man for setting his neighbor's house on fire, and that denies the right of the State to punish him for setting his neighbor himself afire—his body, mind, heart and soul on fire—is something that is past our comprehension. A judge is to be respected for his opinions in so far as they are technically correct, when they are not swayed by a moral bias away from the plain principles of right between man and man before God. We lay no imputations on the decision of Judge Brewer. But we are rejoiced that the Supreme Court, on whose bench he now is to sit, had wisdom enough to upset any such transparent folly as that. The time is a mighty long way down the tracks of the millennium when the temperance men are going to buy out the liquor sellers to make them stop poisoning their neighbors. We would all want to be brewers, just to get bought out, if that decision should stand.—The Mid-Continent.

In the Senate of the United States, on January 4, Senator Frye, of Maine, introduced a bill to provide for a Commission of five persons "to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union." The bill further provides that investigation shall not continue more than two years, that the Commissioners shall receive compensation not exceeding $10 per day, and necessary expenses, and also that an appropriation of $10,000 be made for necessary expenses. This appropriation is certainly not large enough. Yet the outlook for this Commission is more hopeful than ever before, since the new Congressional Committee upon the liquor traffic is mainly composed of well-known temperance men. Among them is Major Pickler of Dakota, Messrs. Kerr and Struble of Iowa, and Mr. Anderson of Kansas, while the chairman, Mr. Taylor, is one of the staunchest Prohibitionists in the House.—Union Signal.

A Maysville (S. D.) special reports that a farmer's wife having learned that the proceeds of a mortgage on her husband's farm had gone to defray a whisky bill at one of the numerous "blind pigs," as illicit drinking places are termed there, collected seven more women and the eight sallied forth armed with pick-axes, hatchets, and other offensive weapons. Before noon the determined dames had broken up several "blind pigs" and utterly destroyed their fixtures and furniture. The proprietors offered but a feeble resistance, being taken by surprise. A large mob attended the women on their rounds and cheered them on.

THE ROYAL ARCH PIT FOR PREACHERS.

An awful crime was committed in Huntington, West Virginia, last week, in a Masonic lodge. Two ministers were being put through the exceedingly foolish child's play of initiation. One of these was a Methodist. He was being let down into a dark chamber by a rope and pulley in pretended search after knowledge. Almost as soon as he began to descend, being a large man, the rope broke and he fell to the bottom, a distance of thirteen feet, and was killed. He paid with his life for permitting himself to be duped by the sacrilegious order. The history of the case has been widely circulated, and ought to call forth a public demand for the punishment of these man-slayers as they deserve. Let light shine into these dark holes that the public may know what is done by them in secret.—Christian Instructor.

In the degree Rev. Mr. Johnston was taking, before descending into the vault the address is: "Most excellent, although it may be attended with difficulties and dangers, yet we are willing to descend at the hazard of our lives." And such it proved to be in this case. Now does it benefit a minister or professor of Christ's religion to be playing murder and passing through such symbolical senselessness as this? It may benefit ruffians and worldlings, yet they might be better employed. If any of us had told a Royal Arch Mason that they had to swing down into a pit on a rope, he would have denied it. But here is their confession agreeing with our revelations. Here is another lesson for our liberal brethren who are rushing into the lodge. They should keep off the cable-tows, the slippery slipper, and the sharp point of the compass, as an instrument of torture to the body, and the more dreadful oaths which will torture the life out of the soul. A preacher in a Masonic lodge is a moral monster, and no one should hear him preach until he repents, confesses and reforms. Christian churches should put themselves against the iniquity of the lodge, and disfellowship it, in all its protean forms. The murder of Dr. Cronin, the conviction of his lodge murderers and the self-immolation of Rev. J. W. Johnston, is the logic of events, speaking loudly against the lodge and liberalism which fosters it.—Christian Conservator.

We don't expect anything better of persons given to worldly pleasures than that they will do things contrary to Scripture; but when ministers of Christ take it upon them to commit acts that are nothing less than sacrilege, it is time for us to cry out. On Friday night, Jan. 10, the Revs. Marshall and Johnston attempted to take the Royal Arch degree in Freemasonry, at Huntington, W. Va. In Old Testament times it was sacrilege for any one to touch the Ark of the Covenant but the priest of God; if they did so they were punished with death. But these Freemasons, as if daring God's power, have a ceremony symbolical of the search for the Ark of the Covenant in the ruins of Solomon's temple, and lower the candidate for this degree down through a trap, astride of a stick of wood at the end of a pulley, into a dark room. In the corner of the dark room the candidate finds a box which he secures and is then drawn out of the room. The Rev. Mr. Marshall passed safely through the ordeal, but the rope became loosened in some way, so that when the Rev. Mr. Johnston attempted to follow, he was thrown into the dark room, a fall of thirteen feet, receiving injuries from which he died on Sabbath morning. To us this is dreadfully shocking. Is not such a symbol the prompting of the prince of darkness? He longs to touch the forbidden things of God. Such conduct, such folly, is certainly sinful.—Christian Nation.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus's first visit to Jerusalem, vs. 40-45. Though Jesus had a sinless nature, and could not have been contaminated, like other children, by scenes of vice and crime, providence ordered that he should receive his early training in a typical Jewish home, pervaded throughout with the strictest Puritan principles. Joseph and Mary were careful to keep every iota of God's law themselves, and we cannot doubt that they tried to instill into the young mind of their divine charge a like reverential obedience. If it was necessary, or at least expedient that the sinless Jesus should be brought up in such a home, much more is it needful for the frail children of humanity who have to struggle against inbred sin from the first dawning of conscience. No revival of religion is worth much that does not affect the home. The trouble with the majority of American homes is not that they are godless homes, but in their lack of any decided religious teaching. The children are allowed to follow the bent of their own inclinations instead of bending to wholesome discipline. Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., once issued a circular to young men who were non-church-goers, asking their reasons for not attending the services of the sanctuary. One of the most frequent reasons given was this, "I was not trained to go to church when a child." It is estimated that only five per cent of the young men of the country are church members, and only fifteen per cent church-goers. If a great many Christian parents had not sadly neglected their duty to their children, the lodge would not now be making such enormous gains at the expense of God's house; nor would there be so many votes cast for license.

2. Jesus in the temple, vs. 43-47. Many seek Jesus, but look in the wrong place for him. He is not always to be found among those who make the loudest professions that they know him. Often it is some lapse from duty which has occasioned the loss of his presence, and we have to turn back again to Jerusalem, and renew our vows of consecration before we find him. They found him in the temple. Ordinarily it is through God's appointed means of grace that the sinner or the saint finds Jesus. In every company of believers, however small, we have a right to expect his presence. Parents and teachers may learn a lesson from this story of Christ in the temple. Jesus was a divine child, but he was also a human child. We are told that he "increased in wisdom and in stature." Children have often a keener appreciation of divine truth than they are credited with, and great mistakes have been made by trying to talk down to them, and a still more serious one in fancying them too young to be converted. Another error into which parents and Sunday-school teachers are apt to fall is in not expecting conversions. What should we think of a farmer who plowed and sowed, and yet acted as if he had not the least hope or expectation of a harvest? Yet a faithful parent or teacher who has carefully sowed good seed has just as much right as the farmer to expect to see it spring forth and bear fruit—even a hundred fold.

3. The need of being about our Father's business, vs. 48-52. If we are God's children we too have our Father's business to attend to. A child who is faithful does the errand his father sends him on without loitering or stopping to do something he is personally interested in first. Too many professed Christians forget that their heavenly Father has a business for them to do. It is of supreme importance that we learn what it is. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" should be our daily prayer. The most obscure Christian never lived more unnoticed by the world than did Jesus for the next eighteen years. We know that he was always obedient, helpful, industrious, exact in the performance of every duty, but so far as we know his virtues gained no need of human praise. Our work may be unnoted of men, but if we are about our Father's business we have praise of him, and fellowship with his Son Jesus Christ.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

THE CHILD ABOUT HIS FATHER'S BUSINESS.—(1) The child should early consecrate himself to God, to live thenceforward as his child. (2) He will learn about his Father's business in his Father's house, and in the earnest study of his Father's Word. To study that Word is part of his business. (3) His father's business for him is to live at home, at school, everywhere, the pure, unselfish life. (4) All earthly duties—obedience to parents, daily work, recreations—are portions of his Father's business. (5) He can do much directly for his Father in leading others to Jesus, in helping the poor, the neglected, the sick, by inviting others to the house of his Father.

BIBLE STUDY FOR CHILDREN.—(1) Every child should be trained to an interest in Bible study. (2) They should be taught, not by lecture, but by question and answer. (3) Every child should study the Bible for himself, and think upon it. He should, in particular, prepare his Sunday-school lesson, and daily study, as well as read, the Word of God. (4) He should come to his teacher as a learner, but ready to ask questions.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The fine new building erected by the First United Presbyterian church of Monmouth, Ill., will be dedicated next Lord's day. Rev. Dr. Moorehead, of Xenia Theological Seminary, will assist Pastor Hanna in the interesting services. It is a beautiful and very convenient building.

—Rev. C. Spurgeon Medhurst, writing from Tsing Chou Fu, China, observes: "The men of the country have no great faith in their idols, and it is remarkable that those whose trade it is to make the images never worship them."

—The British and Foreign Bible Society reports that the sacred Scriptures were last year translated into six fresh languages. The number of tongues in which this society now publishes the Bible is thus increased to 300. Fifty years ago it was published in 150 tongues. The society distributed 4,206,000 volumes during the year.

—The superficiality and fickleness of the Japanese are the greatest trials of the missionary laboring to win them to a Christian life. Their impressions seem to be only "skin-deep." As the Japanese government has established its own schools everywhere, it is said to discourage the establishment of private or mission schools. The government has removed the tax from Christian churches, placing them on the same ground as Shinto or Buddhist temples. Shintoism, the national religion of Japan, has no idols. Its worship is simple, and consists of reverence for the deities, who were formerly famous rulers or warriors of the empire, and implicit obedience to the emperor, who is regarded as infallible, and descended from the gods.

—The Methodists have two great Book Concerns, one in New York and one in Cincinnati. The profits from these are not used for educational purposes, as is generally the case in other denominations, but is devoted almost exclusively for worn-out preachers, and the widows and orphans of those who have died in the ministry. For these purposes the Concerns last year appropriated the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, of which the New York branch furnished sixty, and the Cincinnati branch forty thousand. The Book Concerns gives fifteen thousand dollars yearly to the support of denominational interests, and in its one hundred years of existence it has contributed in this way the round sum of sixteen hundred thousand dollars.

—According to the latest reports the Presbyterians who want a revision of the Westminster Confession will have easy sailing. Twelve presbyteries, representing 499 ministers and 80,347 communicants, have voted against revision of the Confession of Faith. Thirty-three presbyteries, representing 1,198 ministers and 170,889 communicants, have voted for it.

—In 1860 there were 14 medical missionaries in the foreign field. There are now 125 with British qualifications, of whom 12 are ladies.

—The collection in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church (Dr. John Hall's) on Hospital Sunday, Dec. 29, was a liberal one, reaching a total of $9,046.88.

—Rev. J. W. Johnston, one of the most earnest and enthusiastic workers in the U. P. church, has just closed a series of interesting meetings at Conemaugh, Pa., and as a result there has been a generous addition to the membership.

—In the United Presbyterian presbytery of Monmouth the vote was against adopting the tobacco amendments. On the question in regard to ministers the vote was ten in favor and eleven opposed. On the question in regard to elders it was seven in favor and fourteen opposed.

—The British minister has directed the attention of the United States Government to the case of Rev. Mr. Joiner, an English clergyman, who claims to have suffered personal violence at Holly Springs, N. C., because he persisted in giving religious instruction to colored people.

—The session of the Second U. P. church, Allegheny, Dr. W. H. McMillan, pastor, has unanimously agreed to unite in a letter to the congregation, commending the tithe as the minimum of duty in Christian giving. Each of the ten members of session voluntarily pledged himself to practice the giving of at least one-tenth himself.

—Religious circles in Brooklyn were considerably exercised lately over the action of Rev. T. B. McLeod in withdrawing from the council called to install Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott as pastor of Plymouth church, and successor of H. W. Beecher. "I did not expect," he said, "that Mr. Abbott's statement of faith would agree with my views, but I was surprised to find that his theological beliefs were so far out of harmony with the faith of the fathers and what I believe to be the general consensus of Congregational churches. And because my vote for his installation would have been an endorsement of views which I believe to be uncongregational, unevangelical, and unscriptural, there was nothing for me to do but to ask the council to excuse me from further participation in the work for which it was assembled."

IN BRIEF.

The Iowa Supreme Court, in a recent decision, expressed the opinion that girls who habitually gad about the streets late at night have no valid claim on the courts for redress if they are ruined. That ruling may seem severe, but it is based on a law that is older than any human enactment.

A friend and admirer once said to the late Robert Browning: "I have studied long upon this passage in your poem and am unable to comprehend it. Pray tell me what is the idea embodied in it?" Mr. Browning read the passage over and replied: "Really, I can not tell; but I believe it will be worth your while to keep on studying it."

Mr. Gladstone writes: "Reflection tends to confirm me in the belief that the best basis for a law is the indissolubility of Christian marriage, that is to say, to have no such divorce or severance that allows re-marriage. Short of this I think it highly probable that the Canadian system, of which I had not previously been aware, is the best, as being attended with the least danger."—Montreal Legal News.

Equador, South America, a republic four times larger than all New England, ought to be religiously blessed. There is a Roman Catholic church for every 150 of the inhabitants. One-tenth of the population are priests and nuns. One-fourth of the days of the year are feast or fast days, and one-fourth of all the property belongs to the bishop. Yet three-fourths of the children are illegitimate, there is not a railroad or stage line in the country, and nothing common among the people which they did not have 200 years ago.

It is stated that the practice of child insurance has led to an epidemic of sudden deaths among infants in the midland counties of England. The favorite scheme is to smother the infant in the bedclothes, and then claim that it was accidentally overlain by the parents in their sleep. Hundreds of such cases have been reported, but no measures have yet been effective to put a stop to the horrible practice. This is the fearful commentary on the condition of affairs in that country and of the abominable crimes committed there.

Judge O. H. Horton, of Chicago, endeavored to obtain from the legislature a modification of the laws of divorce, in order to remove abuses. Failing in that he now proposes to insert in the decrees of divorce granted by him under the law, these words: "This decree is open to recall at any time within three years from this date." This is intended to prevent an early re-marriage of the man or woman seeking the decree, for his experience in many cases has taught him that a large proportion of divorces are sought for the purpose of a re-marriage. The third party, it is said, in a majority of cases, is the real motive of divorce proceedings.

C. W. Bowne, of Miller, S. D., writes to the Chicago News: "I was so glad to learn from your Washington correspondent that Mrs. Morton was going to lead the fashion in Washington. It is so eminently proper that we should have some one at our national capital who is conversant with the forms and formalities of court life in Europe, in order that we may keep posted on the etiquette so essential to the general welfare of the country. It must be so embarrassing for people who have never visited the courts of Europe to meet the titled aristocrats of the old country without knowing just what to do; and, no doubt, Mrs. Morton will undertake to train them in the mysteries of court life, so that one who has graduated from her school could work his or her way into the most exclusive society—that is, with the aid of a few million dollars. It must be very expensive learning real etiquette from real courts, and we, as a nation, ought to be very thankful to Mrs. Morton for taking such an interest in the welfare of her country. Now, if the dear lady would be so kind as to exert her influence with the administration toward getting us some titles from the old country to go with our court etiquette it might be conducive to the happiness of some of our blue-blooded aristocracy of New York and might do much toward putting us on an equal footing with the titled aristocracy of the old country."

The Pan-American Congress in Washington suggests to the Catholic Review the idea of a Congress of the Catholics of the Western Continent. The Review says: "The Catholics of the continent, such as they are, outnumber the Protestants largely, and it would not be at all an impossible task so to blend them on general matters as to make them masters of the religious destinies of the continent. If a commercial idea and the ability of Mr. Blaine can bring together eminent men from all parts of the country, cannot the Christian idea and the ability of Cardinal Gibbons bring together a similar body of men from the same quarters? There is no doubt that the Catholics of the North are to-day the Catholic body of the West, and, with the exception of the Germans and Belgians, the Catholic body of the world. We must lead the way in ideas and practical work. The Catholics of South America are fast asleep, not to say dead. . . . They ought to be rescued, waked up, and made alive. A visit of their leading men, ecclesiastical and lay, to this country, the education of their clergy among us, would make them acquainted with our methods, and at least trouble their consciences. Perhaps, too, it would be worth while for the Catholics of Washington to look after the Catholic delegates to this Congress and bring them into contact with American Catholicity."

By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by O. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND; OR, Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors a gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of Jesuitical priestcraft and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE GOOD HOUSEKEEPER.

Among the many qualifications indispensable to the good housekeeper, stands pre-eminent that of a good cook; because that, more than all else, affects the health and spirits of the whole family. A growing family is no small responsibility, as every mother's heart will own, and in order that the children may become strong and robust, their food should be as carefully selected and prepared as a doctor's prescription. It should be regularly served at stated hours, and placed on the table in an attractive form at all times, as outward appearances form no small part in the enjoyment of the meal. The viands served in each household are so various no rules can or should be given, except that in all cases simple, wholesome food is far preferable and really more palatable than the indigestible dainties so often placed on the table. Therefore, mothers should teach their daughters that great and truly beautiful accomplishment, the secret of being a cook.

Order and cleanliness may well come on the housekeeping list, for they also have no small part to play in the harmony of the family and the enjoyment of the household. Every cupboard, pantry and drawer should be subject to a frequent cleansing and straightening process, sufficient to keep them in perpetual order; otherwise, by a little neglect the housekeeper will have her burdens doubled, and her work sadly disarranged. Only by extreme care, where there is but one pair of hands at the helm, can the management of a household be sustained with comfort, allowing a few hours of rest and reading. In such a household everything should be done as simply as possible; no extra tucks on the pillow-shams or cases, fewer ruffles to flute, tables painted to avoid scouring, etc. Ruffles, tucks and fancy work may look well, but not half as well as a happy, contented mother, whose face is not marked with lines of care and weariness. Little will the babies care how many tucks were in their tiny dresses, when they become men and women. Better a thousandfold will be the sight of a bright mother's face than one wearied and fretful, grown cross and morose, or, may be, gone forever, with quiet, folded hands, resting at last.

Too many women who have been bright, merry maidens, sink into dull, stupid, fault-finding wives and mothers. Why is it? Some may fancy because the duties are beyond their weak bodies. And so they are. Sometimes the husband is responsible in driving his business and work, and paying no heed to be his wife's help and convenience; but in a larger number of cases the wife herself is really at fault. In nearly every household the work itself can be cut down and simplified: that is, can be, if we but overcome some of the old housewives' notions in regard to work. If they would only realize that a house can be kept, and neatly and prettily, too, without such an immense load of quilts as required months, and even years, to accumulate. Cheap spreads that are easily washed, nice new comforts and blankets are far preferable—and what a gain for hours of reading, rest and improvement; and this is only one instance; there are many more. Good Housekeeping.

NOTES ABOUT LAMPS.—It is impossible for a lamp to burn well unless it is clean and filled. This is not a matter to be attended to just before the lamp is wanted, and then done in a hurry between daylight and dark. The lamps should be taken to the kitchen and taken care of systematically every day. A great many house-keepers do not care to have the kerosene can or kerosene cloths around the kitchen where food is cooked, but make it a practice to keep them in a shed or some pantry near by, and fill their lamps and wipe them there, then bring them in the kitchen and trim the wick, being careful to pick out all charred bits of the wick that fall into the burner. Everything that accumulates about the lamp in that way causes the lamp to "burn badly." A lamp of metal

Ayer's Hair Vigor

It is the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken, and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequalled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

is to be preferred to one of porcelain or glass for durability. A lamp that is kept clean and is filled daily will burn clear and bright for many months; but finally the burner will need cleaning more thoroughly in boiling hot soda and water, using a fine brush to remove any crust of smoke. A lamp should be raised slowly when first lighted and should never smoke. If it is clean and smokes easily, the oil is at fault. No oil fit to burn gives out an unpleasant odor or smoke.—*N. CIVIL LODGE MASONRY, its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres't J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James W. Hams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD COUNTRY HIGHWAYS.

[Concluded.]

For suburban roads nothing can be better than what is known as the Macadam system with firm and well-drained foundations, six or eight inches of good crushed stone, as near as possible to uniform size, from one to two inches in diameter, very compactly pressed down by a steam roller and with a thin crust of fine gravel on top.

A broad and well-shaded street contributes more than some of us realize to the attractiveness and health of a city. What can be more beautiful than such avenues as Delaware of Buffalo, Euclid of Cleveland, Woodward of Detroit, in their best portions, the splendid and constantly improving streets of our national capital and Commonwealth Avenue and Beacon Street in our own city, affording, as they do, a most appropriate setting for the finest results of the architect's skill, each example of which leads on to greater and better efforts in a spirit of rivalry which is the healthiest sign of a city's vigorous prosperity and growth.

While the Macadam system is durable, and by all means the most comfortable and satisfactory, for its cost for streets immediately outlying the city proper and for those used principally for pleasure driving; in the central business portions, where more active traffic is to be provided for, where commerce plants her heavy foot, and the wear and tear are considerable, there are no better and more appropriate pavements than granite blocks, or perhaps the best grades of fire brick, where the streets have the roughest usage or are more liable to disturbances by those dreaded nuisances, the street gangs of the water and sewer department. And between the suburbs and the business part of the city where the traffic is the heaviest asphalt pavement will be found to be very desirable and probably the best.

In the matter of cleanliness and comfortable use, the smoother the surface the better, and for your city I believe asphalt should be used wherever practicable. Its noiselessness is a desirable feature, and its more general use in our city streets will have a very beneficial effect on the nerves, and, in consequence, the general health of our business and professional men, and all who have occasion to endure the incessant noise of the busy street.

As a result of elaborate experiments, made to ascertain the relative resistance of friction of different pavements, it has been established that while 200-pounds force is required to draw one ton over an ordinary dirt road, 100 pounds will do the same work on Macadam, 33 on best granite blocks, and 15 asphalt.

As a practical instance of this, it is estimated that in the city of New York there are 12,000 trucks, carrying an average load of 1½ tons for 12 miles on each of 300 days in the year, at an average daily cost of $4 for each truck.

The result is about 65,000,000 tons transported one mile in every year, at a total cost of $14,000,000, or at the rate of over 22 cents per ton a mile. The excessive nature of this charge is seen, when it is remembered that the same goods are now carried by rail at 6-10 of one cent per mile. On asphalt or wood pavements, the same horses could transport a load three times as heavy as on the present rough-stone pavements. If the saving in transportation is proportional to the load carried, it would amount to nearly $10,000,000 per annum. It is safe to say that at least one-half of this amount would be saved by substituting smooth pavements for those now in use in New York; and in any city where the pavements are on the average poorer and rougher than those of New York, it is clear that the proportionate saving by the introduction of the best street surfaces will be even greater.

Go to the city of Buffalo, where already, working steadily in the one direction, they have some 60 miles of the best Trinidad asphalt in the country; unquestionably at a considerable expense for the original outlays, but with results that will save them very many thousands in the long run. I am informed that the repairs necessary on these streets within the past six years has aggregated less than $100.

If Grover Cleveland had never accomplished anything else, the city of Buffalo would have abundant cause for gratitude to him for the good work begun during his mayoralty.

The city of Washington is under great obligations to the man familiarly known as Boss Shepard, who did more for the improvement of their streets than any other man, and yet for a time was cursed for the expense entailed, and now is looked upon as one of their great benefactors. Here many of the asphalt pavements have been in use for ten years, at a cost of repair not exceeding an annual average of two cents per square yard.

A thing that is worth doing at all, is worth doing well, and thoroughly, at once; and so I believe that the best thing for you to do is to determine, through the proper channels, how much it will cost to properly pave all of your most important streets; raise the amount necessary by issuing bonds running 25 or 30 years, or for longer time if it seems best.

Have the work done as it should be; remove it as far as possible from politics, under the eye of a special and competent engineer, whose business is road construction.

Let him be watched and guided by your Superintendent of Streets, or your Citizens' Committee, or whom you will, to make sure that your money is spent in the right direction.

These pavements, once laid, will last longer than you and I.

They will give satisfaction to all who use them, will bring credit upon your city, and their saving alone, annually put by in a sinking fund, will, by the time your bonds are due, be sufficient to take them up and leave a large surplus.

If you cannot accomplish this whole scheme, do what you can of it, beginning at once, and lay as much pavement in 1890 as you can raise money for; but as far as you go, do it right.

For the bettering of residence streets where asphalt cannot be afforded, the wise policy would be to lay as much Macadamized pavement as possible. You should have the improved stone-crushers, and heavy steam-rollers, which will properly equip you for doing the work in this direction in the best possible manner.

It adds largely to the value and durability of a street to keep it clean. They should be cleaned after 12 o'clock, midnight, and before 6 in the morning. Then the streets are deserted, and it can be done at less expense, and more quickly.

There is no reason why streets should be swept in the day-time, stirring up dirt and dust mixed with filth, to be blown into the faces of the passers-by; and if, in the thickly-settled part of the city, ashes could be removed during the same hours, it would be a blessing to the community, for the removal of ashes in the daytime is a source of inconvenience and discomfort to all people who happen to be on the street at the time, for, as the ashes are deposited in the carts, the wind takes a large part and distributes it through the air in the faces and eyes, and down the necks of the passers-by, causing much unhappiness and bad language.

But in order to best further the good work, and secure the sympathy and interest of the public by making all more conversant with what is being done, and what ought to be done, and the advantage and benefits to be reached, I would strongly urge upon you to form a Citizens' Street-Improvement Association; and for this you may well take as your model, the Roads-improvement Association in London, which announces as its four objects:

First—Circulating popular and technical road literature, having for its object:

a. The enlightenment of taxpayers upon a subject which vitally affects their pockets and their interests.

b. The guidance of all authorities having control of roads, and the instruction of road surveyors and the laborers under their charge as to the proper system of road repair and maintenance.

Second—Remonstrating with the responsible authorities in cases where the neglected state of the road has become a grave scandal, and, where necessary, taking legal action to enforce the rights of the public.

Third—Watching and introducing legislation with a view to bettering the existing state of affairs.

Fourth—Taking up the question of street names, signboards, and milestones, with a view to their erection in places where they do not at present exist, and to their improvement or maintenance, as may be necessary.

To this may well be added the encouragement of the planting of trees, and laying out and beautifying suitable parks and walks, and other kindred matters which shall tend to make your city an attractive place in which to live and make money.

With such an association, composed of your active and intelligent business men, you can influence public opinion in favor of this improvement in streets, and within another decade it may be said of your city that none is more attractive or better paved. Then shall those who follow after have cause to bless the wisdom and forethought of the citizens of to-day.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

At the health office, Jan. 21, 130 deaths were reported, the highest number since the advent of la grippe.

Henry Bush, who was injured on the Northern Pacific railroad, received damages to the amount of $40,000 last week in a jury trial.

Foreman Tyler, of the grand jury now in session, says that they would probably return a number of indictments against gamblers and lottery men.

The limited fast express from Milwaukee, on the Chicago & Northwestern Road, ran into a carriage in a funeral procession at Rose Hill Cemetery gate, at 3:40 o'clock Thursday afternoon, killing Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Payne, who were burying their infant child, Mrs. Repogel, a friend, and the driver of the carriage. A little girl in the carriage escaped unhurt. The engineer was arrested.

COUNTRY.

Hon. George D. Robinson, commissioner in the case of Prof. Egbert Smyth, appellant, vs. the Visitors of the Theological School at Andover, decided Monday in favor of the visitors and against Mr. Smyth.

The Elliott Cresson medal has been awarded to Ottmar Mergenthaler, of Baltimore, by the committee on science and art of the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia for the invention of the linotype printing machine.

Five Indians were drowned in Flathead Lake, Mont., Sunday, while trying to cross the lake on horseback. They were riding close together and the ice gave away.

Official announcement is made that the loss by the fire in Boston on Thanksgiving Day was $3,841,388; that the insurance involved amounted to $5,395,533, and that the loss to insurance companies aggregated $3,173,438.

It is reported that in the past two years certain persons in Mexico have coined about 5,000,000 United States dollars, which have been shipped across the border and circulated in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona, and in other districts, and that the counterfeiters made a profit of about 28 cents on each of the spurious dollars disposed of.

The managers of a number of big mills at Fall River, Mass., have been watching the result of the profit-sharing experiment at the Bourne Mill, and it is stated on good authority that a number of mills contemplate doing likewise, for the incentive offered keeps help from leaving, an evil with which every large mill has had to contend.

Chinamen are being put to work as laborers at Pittsburg in place of Italians. Twenty-five have arrived from San Francisco and fifty more are on their way.

Declaration having been made that the business of the Sugar Trust is criminal, it is believed that the Havemeyers, of New York, will resign their trusteeships in the various refineries, fearing that the grand jury may be asked to take the matter in hand.

The snow blockade in the Sierras on the Central Pacific railroad has hardly been equalled. The average depth of snow along the snow-sheds is 20 feet. Over 4,000 men were employed in clearing the track.

Miss Annie Van Schrader, aged 20, of St. Louis, said to be heiress to over $500,000, took the veil in the Dominican convent, at Newark, N. J., Jan. 26. Many prominent people from St. Louis witnessed the ceremony.

A windstorm on the divide, which blew the Rio Grande and Santa Fe passenger trains from the track at Monument Station, Col., Saturday afternoon, was so strong that the coaches were lifted from the trucks and carried ten or fifteen feet from the track and thrown upon their sides. Several passengers were slightly bruised and cut with glass, but none was seriously hurt.

A fire started on Cheyenne mountain, near Colorado Springs, and threatened to burn the grave of "H. H." (Hellen Hunt Jackson), but was extinguished without great damage.

A double explosion of natural gas at Columbus, O., was fatal to members of two families and some in the large crowd about the buildings. Six lives were lost and thirty people were injured. Five dead bodies were taken from the ruins, two of them those of an unknown man and an unknown babe. The infant child of Charles Berry was dashed from its mother's arms by the force of the explosion and almost immediately was run over and killed by a fire-department team which was running from the building.

Denver people are much exercised over the Sunday-closing law which certain citizens, ably backed by the Denver Daily News, are trying to enforce. The Daily News is indefatigable in its efforts against the law-breakers, and although its endeavor has not been met with complete success, the nuisance has been largely abated. In Denver, as elsewhere, the best public opinion condemns the Sunday saloon and looks earnestly forward to its total suppression.

FOREIGN.

The government of Germany has granted to Herr Schenck, an architect of Freinwalde, a commission to begin immediately the canal intended to connect Berlin with the Baltic Sea.

It is proposed to organize here for 1897 an international exhibition which shall be far grander than the French exhibition.

The London Times' Lisbon correspondent says the dispute between England and Portugal is assuming a more favorable aspect owing to the Marquis of Salisbury's policy of conciliation.

At St. Johns, N. F., Monday night, John Gorley and three children were burned to death. Gorley perished while making a third attempt to save his children. When found he had a child in his arms.

Capt. William Kennedy, who commanded the first expedition for the relief of Sir John Franklin, the Arctic explorer, and who has made valuable discoveries in the Arctic regions, died at his home in St. Andrews, near Winnipeg, Manitoba, Saturday.

The rioting reported at Lagos, Portugal, was not of republican origin, as rumored, but arose from the disorderly behavior of a number of soldiers who forced the gates of the barracks in order to take part in a demonstration against the British ultimatum.

About Washing Flannels

Dr. A. N. Bell, Editor of the Sanitarian, New York, writes: "Pearline has gained special ascendancy in my household and in many others to my knowledge, for cleansing flannels. Your own directions for its use are those we abide by: 'Wash flannels by hand, in lukewarm Pearline suds; rinse thoroughly in warm water; wring dry (by pressure through clothes wringer); pull and shake well; dry in warm temperature and they will keep soft without shrinking.'"

Danger As one wash is sufficient to ruin flannels, great care should be exercised as to the use of the many imitations which are being offered by unscrupulous grocers or peddlers. Pearline is never peddled.

EPPS'S COCOA BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in half-pound tins, by Grocers, labelled thus: JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists London, England.

It is reported that an English firm has just secured a consignment of many thousand mummies of cats from Egypt. They were buried in tombs as sacred animals, and are said to make the best fertilizer in the world. So also:

"Imperial Caesar, dead, and turned to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away."

At some future day the relics of the lodges of our time will be the mockery of sensible men. Out of the same Egypt they came, and to a like end they are bound.

Miss Bisland, who has just got home from her race around the world for the Cosmopolitan, writes in the current number of that magazine of the Mardi Gras in New Orleans. She says this demoralizing Saturnalia is the work of secret societies, which have existed for years for this sole purpose. The "Mystic Krewe of Comus," "Twelfth-Night Revelers," "Knights of Momus" and "Proteus Krewe" are the names of these strange organizations. It is reported that the approaching festival in New Orleans is giving the authorities of the city much trouble. Two of these secret societies propose to parade simultaneously. Each has expended thousands of dollars in preparation and neither will yield. The mayor has ordered the police to interfere and prevent the disturbance which is expected.

A section of some fifteen counties in South Dakota, where crops have failed for several seasons, are calling upon us for aid. Clothing and other supplies have gone forward liberally. Most of the destitution is along the line of the Northwestern road, and the company has been forwarding free since the first of November all relief freight. It is reported that up to Saturday, the 25th ult., the shipments thus sent over the line if paid for at the regular tariff rate would amount to $111,000. Coal has been one of the chief items, and of this fuel the company has given liberally from its mines in Iowa. Free transportation will be continued so long as there is necessity for this charity, and officials of the company, in connection with the governor of South Dakota, are arranging to supply seed wheat to the destitute farmers. This wheat will be transported and distributed without charge.

The Clan-na-Gael ruffians are adding another chapter to their record in this city. A German police captain, Schuettler, was efficient in assisting the prosecution of the Cronin murderers. He met three members of Begg's Camp 20 one evening last week, who attacked him with abuse and knocked him down. He shot his assailant, a saloon-keeper, who died Friday. The policeman was exonerated by the coroner, but the Irish secret assassins are on his track. The quarrel took place in a saloon where the police captain had no business to be drinking. Two of the Clan crowd were witnesses for the defense in the trial, and the third is an alderman saloon-keeper who is given a villainous character by the city press.

Miss Drexel, daughter of the wealthy Philadelphia banker, lately entered a convent of the Sisters of Mercy, at Pittsburgh, and is now "lost to the world" in the name Sister Catherine. She has used part of the great wealth she brought into the power of the priests, in establishing at Torresdale, near Philadelphia, a convent for the education of a sisterhood to do missionary work among the Indians and among the colored people in the South. White, Negro and Indian women will be admitted as novitiates in this institution, and "Father" Stephan, a priest who has for several years been on the watch for Rome in Washington, will be its head. The Catholic church has for some time maintained an Indian bureau at the capital to lobby for its interests among the Indians, and the large appropriations received by the priests prove the ability of Mr. Stephan. We can only pray that in this new mission his "right hand may forget its cunning" and his success fail him.

The recent installation of Dr. Lyman Abbott, editor of the Christian Union, as pastor of the Plymouth Church of Brooklyn (H. W. Beecher's), deserves more than a passing notice. The large council was what might be called composite. The majority were Congregationalists, but there were also Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians. The fact was developed that the candidate believed in "conditional immortality" and the probability of a future probation. He denounced the doctrine of a final probation in this life as unscriptural, and expressed the conviction that all who are not saved in this life will be either annihilated or saved in the world to come. One minister withdrew because unwilling to endorse such doctrines. While we dissent entirely from these views and regard them as dangerous, we think it far less strange that such a council should give them a practical endorsement than that they should sanction Freemasonry by ordaining ministers who practice that form of idolatry. That they have done so, after due enlightenment, has but prepared the way for all manner of heresies. More than twenty years ago President Finney said that since the light has come the church must speak out or suffer for her unfaithfulness. The churches have largely failed to speak, and hence practical infidelity is installed in high places.

Secretism is doing more injury to the church than most people know, and we are glad that in all directions the subject is receiving more attention. The evil is so great and is so persistent in its encroachments that it must force itself upon the notice of all who are really concerned about the welfare of Zion. The churches that will not resist the evil, but permit it to enter and spread among them, are only preparing the way for their own ruin. Christ and Belial cannot reign together.—Lutheran Standard.

THOU ART THE WAY.

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

O Father, when the tempest comes,
The tempest fierce and wild,
And all the path that we should walk
With tangled drift is piled;
When lost among the grim, cold rocks,
And in the dark defiles,
Where torrents roar with icy wrath
Among the homeless wilds;
Then let me hear thy whispered word
In gentlest accents say:
"I am the living way."

When thus perplexed with many things
I know not what to do;
When two opposing duties seem
Both equally in view;
When Worry comes with brow of care
And all her nettles sows
Within the garden where should bloom
The lily and the rose;
When night comes with her pirate flag
Where bright should beam the day,
Then Father show the way.

What am I, Father, in thy sight,
But just a little one,
Whose only hope for life and truth
Is resting in thy Son?
And not in work that I have done,
Or ought that I can do,
For all of mine that pleases thee
Thy mercy led me to;
Yet am I safe because I trust;
And joyously can say,
Thou, Saviour, art my way.

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

Any man can raise a question the wisest cannot answer. Still it is evident we must have the question clearly before us if we would give it an intelligent and serious answer. In these days of "Looking Backward," "Progress and Poverty" and "Anti-poverty Societies," it behooves us to know well our bearings ere we launch. The questions being set before us to-day are clear-cut, honest questions, and something we must be doing with them ere long. We must master them or they will master us. Let me endeavor to set before the Cynosure readers one of these questions urged from two sides.

Richard Roe is a wealthy farmer. How did he become so? By hard toil. He began in life with nothing but an honest heart and willing hands. He worked on the home-farm until he was plump 21. At this age he is advised to go, fend for himself. He leaves home with all his earthly effects tied up in a handkerchief. Dick is a good boy, a hard worker, and a neighbor offers him $20 per month and board; he accepts, and continues thus for two years. At the end of this time he goes North and takes up 160 acres of timber land. Here he works hard, battling against stumps and poverty until at last he can raise enough to support his growing family and lift his mortgage. By honesty and economy he now begins to lay by large profits each year. These he slowly uses in improvements and the purchase of machinery, until to-day Richard Roe is a wealthy farmer, loved and respected by his neighbors.

Dick has never heard of Socialism. Some one now comes forward and tells him that private ownership of land is all wrong,—that it is the source of well-nigh all our evils, and the sole excuse for poverty. Once do away with private ownership of land, says this man of the new-fangled notion, and the millennial dawn is upon us. Will Mr. Roe listen to this? Not at all. Why, on that land he has expended his labor; that farm stands for and is the equivalent of the thirty best years of his life. It is his very self. It is the standing proof of the qualities that lie hid in his bosom. He has robbed no one in securing the possession of his farm, and there is not a man living but has had a similar opportunity to become well-to-do. Richard Roe cannot listen to these arguments in favor of allowing the state to own the land.

The history of John Doe is somewhat different. He was born and bred in the city of New York in the midst of luxury. Up to the age of 21 the major part of his time is given to base ball, boating and society. He has attended school also to a certain limited extent, and has acquired habits of dissipation and shrewdness, free-heartedness and penuriousness. At the age of 21 he becomes his father's partner. His father is a capitalist and a millionaire. John suddenly comes into the possession of a million of dollars upon which he has expended no toil. Every dollar Dick Roe owned stood for so many hard knocks, and so much hard planning against drouth, and fluctuating market values and hard winters on sheep. Every dollar John Doe manages stands for another man's shrewdness and not his own. In other words, he has wealth without corresponding character. John invests half a million in railroad stock. The company receive from the government large tracts of Western land. They are given every alternate square mile in the alternate counties. They refuse to sell their land until the adjoining square miles are all settled. When they do sell, their land has multiplied in value thirty fold, because of the settlements in the alternate sections. The Dick Roes who settled it are now well-to-do farmers, but they have paid bounteously into the pocket of John Doe. And John Doe never toiled to get his money or toiled to increase it after he did get it. Dick Roe owns his farm because private ownership of land is allowed. But it is also true that John Doe, with his railroads and his large tracts of alternate square miles, commands both the price of Dick's land and the price of his produce because private ownership of land is allowed.

Another consideration is this, Dick is the producer and his work must be done. So Dick works from ten to fourteen hours a day in order that hosts of John Does may sit in their offices, speculate in lands, and bid on the price of wheat and sugar. If all men took an equal turn at productive labor we might easily have shorter hours. As it is, wealth seems determined to keep the laborer down to the point where, if he will work all day six days in the week, he may earn a livelihood.

The question I raise is not whether Henry George or Edward Bellamy is right, but whether our present economic relations deal fairly with the laboring classes. "If a man will not work, neither shall he eat," is good advice. May we put it conversely, "If a man works he shall eat?" If he toils faithfully he shall have abundance of the necessities of life.

IS DEATH ETERNAL SLEEP?

BY MRS. N. E. KELLOGG.

[See Editorial Note.]

About half a mile from the shore and in full view of the "Golden Gate" of San Francisco, is a pile of dark gray rocks, thronged with sea lions who make it their home.

When first seen it is not particularly attractive; the deep voice of the sea monsters mingled with the hoarse, dull roar of the ocean, and the wide expanse of sparkling water claim more attention. But all at once, far off beyond the rocks, a slight swell is seen as though something were coming up from under ocean. Slowly the wave approaches the rocks, growing longer and higher as it advances; suddenly a line of white appears along the crest of the wave, and with a leap forward it breaks! A moment the rocks are enveloped in a mantle of white, and then the waste of waters falls away and leaves them glistening in the sun.

This our Alma Mater is a light-house in the ocean of time and near the shore of eternity. The passions of men are like the ground swell,

"Murm'ring they move as when old ocean roars,
And heaves huge surges to the trembling shores."

During the college year now closing we have seen the heaving, surging billows of opposition and persecution rise and lengthen and leap upon our College home. For a time it seemed as if she would be swallowed up, but the strength of God was in her, and now the wave has spent its fury, and the stone walls seem brighter and dearer as the angry elements fall murmuring at their base.

We meet on this occasion as glad children returning to a faithful mother. Glad to see each other here, within these walls, which call up so many hallowed associations of pleasure. And though we ponder on sober themes, it need not infer sadness; and if we arrive at the truth, truth, like a "thing of beauty, is a joy forever."

And while science, literature, and even the secular press with its myriad writers are discussing the nature and destiny of man, it is fitting that we consider, briefly, the question which rises spontaneously in every heart, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Talmage says, "The strangest thing in the history of American and European journalism is that during the past few months it has been discussing the question of eternal punishment. The question of Turko-Russian contest, the question of silver currency, the question as to President Hayes's policy with the South,—all submerged in the question, Is there a hell?"

Why strange? What else could we expect?

Men have gone to such extremes of wickedness in their pursuit of pleasure, that in moments of reflection, when they are forced to think of the things which are not seen, they stand aghast at their condition. But though checked, their reflection is not allowed to turn them, for before the cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" can escape their lips, Satan whispers, "Death is an eternal sleep;" and the giddy whirl of pleasure and mad indulgence goes on. And some ministers of the Gospel have taught that though the good enjoy an eternity of bliss, to the finally wicked death is an eternal sleep. But if this be true, why preach the Gospel? As Justin says, "that would be a Godsend to the wicked."

"Oblivion is sweet, when the long day of arduous toil is done."

Why are we invited, warned, urged and commanded to take up our cross daily and follow Christ; to be hated of all men for his sake; to lay down our lives if need be? Shall we deny ourselves daily in this life, that we may enjoy a happy, blissful life when this is ended? Shall we fast all day that we may feast all night? If the final sentence of the wicked is to cease to exist, why not live in sin? For the more they sin, the more pleasure they take in it. It is the first steps in sin that are hardest to take. The conscience, when long stifled, becomes seared and ceases to reproach.

But more: if death ends all, why is there a Gospel to preach? "How shall we escape" what?—"if we neglect so great salvation." "There is none other name given... whereby we may be saved," from what? Why the life of sorrow, the midnight trial, the cruel scourging, the darkness at mid-day, and that agonizing cry from the one only sinless man, the Son of God? Did God so love rebels against his government; so love the murderers of his Son; so love even us, that he sent his well-beloved Son to suffer all this, that we might be saved from sleep? Impossible!

"To die,—to sleep—

No more; and by a sleep, to say we end
The heartache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to:—'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished."

Sir Walter Scott, in his life of Bonaparte, uses this remarkable language concerning one of the schemes which was carried out in the Reign of Terror:

"If fiends had set themselves to work to discover a mode of most effectually destroying whatever is venerable, graceful or permanent in domestic life, and of obtaining at the same time an assurance that the mischief which it was their object to create should be perpetuated from one generation to another, they could not have invented a more effectual plan."

At the time he speaks of, the Republican inscription, "Death is an eternal sleep," was placed over the cemetery gates. And many of the French believed and acted as if it was true, that they might defy God at their pleasure, and escape him when they chose. Nearly a hundred years have gone. But time can never efface the horrid picture which history drew of the events clustering around that Reign of Terror.

Matter may be tarnished, broken, burned, ground to powder and strewn on the winds; but it cannot be annihilated. Man may destroy the form of the body, but over the substance of which it is composed he has no power. No heat is so intense as to take away the body. The form is gone; but the substance remains. Is it reasonable to suppose that the mind, which often grows strong as the physical power declines; that the soul, which stands like the adamant when the flesh shrinks; that this most wonderful of God's created works, made in his own image, is left to be destroyed and blotted out of the universe in a moment of frenzy by a single stroke of the hand? Nor does God himself, so far as we can trace his wonderful doings, unmake anything that he has made. The forms of nature pass through various stages of development, reach perfect maturity and decay. But they will not cease to exist. And after a little while the small particles which make these, will enter into the composition of other living forms.

If, then, matter is indestructible; if there is no annihilation in the material, why look for it in the immaterial world, unless plainly revealed? But annihilation does not take place at death, for Christ said, centuries after Abraham's death, that God is not the God of the dead, but of the living, and if the first death does not end the existence of the soul why should the second?

But it is urged that the necessary result of broken law is death or destruction; and it is true. If a fish is taken from the water, it immediately begins to die, for the natural law respecting fishes is broken, and unless soon restored to its natural element, life becomes entirely extinct. But the fish is not annihilated. Man breaks the moral law, and at once the sentence of death is passed, and his moral destruction begins, and unless he is brought back to a state of obedience, and the evil already done is repaired, the eternal death of the soul is the necessary result.

But what is the death of the soul? To us physical death is opposite of life, or the separation of the soul from the body; and spiritual death is the separation of the soul from God, or the opposite of life eternal. Christ represents the judge when giving the final sentence, as saying to one class, "Come!" and it is said that they go into life eternal. To the other class the judge says, "Depart!" And when the same scene is described in the revelation, it is said, they shall be cast into "the lake of fire, which is the second death." And if the soul does not cease to exist, it must suffer forever if not in harmony with the Divine will. But says Canon Farrar, "We hurl from us representations so cruel of a doctrine so horrible, that every nerve and fiber of our intellectual, moral and spiritual life revolts at it."

But let us reflect and not speak rashly where mistake is fatal. If we were left without any escape from the penalty of our sin, or in ignorance of the consequences of it, it were indeed a dreadful fate; though we may not complain when we disobey eternal law, if we must endure the eternal consequence of disobedience. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness." If we hurl from us the light which shows us from what we need to be saved, would it be strange if we fall short of the proffered salvation. A recent writer has well said, "It is from the Scriptures that we accept the atonement, and there seems a propriety, if proprieties are to be made the basis of argument, that we should turn to the Scriptures to learn the consequences of atonement." And the Scriptures teach, not that Christ came to purchase happiness, but to save from impending doom.

Fifteen centuries before the advent of our Saviour this question was recorded, "If a man die, shall he live again?" And in all ages this same question has been wrung from the human heart. Men have watched the waning, flickering lamp of life, and when it went out have ceased to hope, and the pall of death has settled down upon the hearts of the living when no ray of light from the unseen world has pierced its heavy folds.

The Athenian philosophers, Socrates and Plato, and a few others, it is true, studied the natural works of God; saw the insect passing through changes similar to death only to put on new life, and they thought there must be a new life for man. But they went the way of all the earth and the masses soon forgot their teachings.

True, once and again the chosen people of God saw the victim snatched as it were from the jaws of death and returned for a season to enjoy or suffer the pleasures and pains of this life, and so knew that the soul did not cease to exist at death, because after that event they received their friends back full of life. But it was only to see them at last laid away with no prophet of God to call them back. And, though in all their intercourse with God himself and the angel visitants from the unseen world, it was assumed that man was accountable to his Maker, not during the few fleeting days of this life only, but to all eternity, our future was not fully understood until Christ died, placed himself under the power of the grave, and then, breaking all its bars, flung wide the portals of the unseen world, and rising, left this promise, like a benediction of light to his followers in all coming ages: "I will come again and receive you to myself."

THE CHURCH AND LODGE, OR ROME.

In Archbishop Whately's "Kingdom of Christ" the chapter on "Vicarious Religion" has this language:

"To all Christ's disciples it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. There was 'one Lord, one faith, one baptism.' And (though with diversity of gifts) one and the same spirit sanctifying the church, and dwelling in all its members. The opposite system to this—that of recognizing different degrees of access to the Deity, and of keeping certain sacred rites and holy secrets confined to a few, and set apart from the multitude—is one of the most remarkable characteristics of natural religion, by which expression I mean, not what is commonly, though improperly, so called, but, such a religious system as men naturally fall into when left to themselves. . . . I believe there is hardly any system of paganism . . . that has not some articles of faith, some religious rites, some kind of pretended theological knowledge, confined either to the priests or to some privileged order of men from whom the great body of worshipers is either excluded or exempted.

"It might therefore be expected that this character should be found (as in fact it is) in the Romish system, which I have already described as the gradual (and if I may be allowed the expression), spontaneous corruption of Christianity by the unrestrained workings of the human mind."

Our readers will have no difficulty in applying the above statement to lodgery also, which casts aside, in most cases, the idea of acknowledging Christ as supreme, and is built on the foundation of sand, viz., "spontaneous corruption," and "unrestrained workings of the human mind."

The Archbishop says that the Apostle Paul contrasts Christianity, in his first letter to Timothy, with the "ancient pagan religions in which some had holy secrets from which the rest were excluded." Not so in Christianity. But in lodgery this is its distinguishing charm, so that those in the highest degrees are dictators and the rest their tools.

"As for the pagan priests," says Whately, "their business was rather to conceal than to explain the mysteries of their religion; to keep the people in darkness, than to enlighten them. Accordingly the moral improvement of the people among the ancients seems to have been considered as the proper care of the legislator," . . . not "to the priests of their religion."

How else than pagan can we regard all lodgery, which binds its members to conceal and never reveal the best things the system can produce. But what does Christianity require? The very opposite. For the great Teacher by precept and example requires that his followers shall instruct the whole world in the best things they know, and thus freely do good to all.

T. H.

THE GRAND ARMY BETRAYED.

The original purposes of the Grand Army of the Republic are well known. As long as it shall adhere to them, the organization, like the patriotic soldiers who compose it, will be respected and cherished by the people of the Union. But the organization has been grossly abused and shamefully prostituted, and it is best for it, as it is best for the country, that the truth should be spoken concerning it, without fear, favor, or affection.

Nothing could be more contrary to the spirit of American institutions, nothing more opposed to the teachings of our forefathers, indeed, to their special warnings on this subject, nothing more dangerous in character and tendency, than a military or quasi-military organization of national extent bent upon political objects. The fact that it starts with the best wishes of all the people, without regard to party, gives it only the greater power for evil, and it is therefore the manifest duty of every citizen, whether old soldier or not, to express with the utmost freedom the condemnation which every true Republican must pronounce upon the attempted perversion of the Grand Army from its original purpose to become a mere tender of the monopoly party. If the testimony of Dalzell, of Tanner, and of those Republicans who were most aggressive in the Grand Army and have received the highest rewards for their conduct, is to be believed, then that estimable, non-partisan and patriotic association of old soldiers has been basely and corruptly betrayed to serve the immediate purposes of the trust party.

That without this betrayal Mr. Harrison's election, notwithstanding the vast amounts of money expended to secure it, would have been an impossibility, no one can doubt. The soldiers were infamously practiced upon, and were even made to believe that the entire Treasury surplus would be emptied into their pockets, without regard to the length, merit or consequences of service. We have heretofore printed the evidences of these facts, and need not reproduce them again. That, as Mr. Cleveland mostly intimates, a deep distrust of the Grand Army is abroad, and that the remedy must come from "within the organization," are beyond question.—The New York Saturday Globe.

SECRET ORDERS AND CRIME.

The mystery which surrounded the murder of Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, has not yet been entirely cleared away, but little doubt remains that he was deliberately killed to prevent revelations which he had threatened to make concerning the doings of the members of a secret order. It is generally conceded that the murder was by one or more, selected for the deed, who did not dare to disobey the allotment which fell to them. It also appears that the members of the order are under the absolute will of those over them, that death is the penalty for betrayal of the secrets of the order, and that murder is regarded as a legitimate means for the accomplishment of the ends of the organization.

In all this there is nothing new. We are startled, we are filled with horror, but the same has been before. There are those yet living who remember the murder of Morgan, and the uprising of public sentiment against the order under whose laws the crime was committed. But such crimes have become more common, and we are more familiar with the thought of assassination by order. Such scenes have marked the agitation in which this victim was himself so prominent. And in a wider field the rule, "The informer must die," is accepted as good moral law. Crime feels the common tendency to organize, and its bonds are of its own material. Men of evil purpose band together for the most infamous purposes, and then to secure themselves against each other bind themselves with penalties which shock us in the simple recital. By its nature evil calls secrecy to its aid, and finds in it both a shield and a help. This organization gives a certain dignity to crime, the dignity of numbers, and the character of a defined purpose, with a seeming rightful authority over those who have voluntarily so bound themselves. We have become so familiar with organized violence that our sensibilities are deadened, and this latest murder does not arouse us to the righteous vindication of the law as it should. Now that it is known that such a crime has been committed, there is, seemingly, less interest than before the crime was made certain by the finding of the body. Apparently it is now entering into the public sentiment that men who bind themselves with horrible obligations really forfeit their right to life when they reveal the doings of the darkness.

We do not state the whole case when we say that men of evil purpose protect themselves by combination in secrecy; the converse of this is also true; organization under the bonds of secrecy tends to evil doing. It segregates the members from the common moral sentiment into a community under laws of their own making. They are not only shut off from the ordinary moral restraints of the open-day life, but they are protected in what they may wish to do by their association. The restraint and the help of the common open life are necessary to the best living; we are so constituted that we need them. Sunlight is necessary to healthful life. When removed from the open moral influences we easily degenerate. The evil in our nature seeks indulgence under the prospect of safety. Even the better elements are made to do service in this degeneration, for loyalty and the feeling of brotherhood throw the mantle of charity over the misdoings of members, and seek to shield them from the public condemnation and the penalty they deserve.

Such an organization gives a most favorable field for persons of evil aims. They acquire position and influence, and are able to wield the order for their own ends, even against the will of the majority and the intention in its institution. In such hands a beneficiary organization becomes an agency for the wealth and luxury of a few. An association for mutual aid becomes an organization for the personal benefit of the leaders. A workingmen's union becomes a political machine, with the offices for the few. A political organization becomes a conspiracy against government. An organization to secure larger independence and better local government in Ireland, becomes, in the hands of unscrupulous men, the perpetrator of the most infamous crimes. Many members of the Clan-na-Gael stand aghast at revelations now made, but it was the secrecy into which they entered that made the crime possible. The nature of the obligations in many cases taken, and the penalties attached tend to develop crime. When a man binds himself to obedience under the severest penalties, and invokes upon himself death in certain cases, he not only surrenders his manhood and the keeping of his conscience, but he familiarizes himself with crimes, and easily, when the crime has been committed, he is ready to defend or palliate it by the plea that the victim brought it on himself, much as the burglar brings the fatal pistol shot upon himself, without guilt to the perpetrator. Under such unconscious schooling some become ready to obey when they are selected to commit the deed. That this is so the history of secret orders abundantly proves. The public mind becomes accustomed to all this, and fails to attach to such crimes the superadded guilt that arises from their being the crimes of an order, or an association.

Dr. Mutchmore says concerning India: "Secret societies have been the agents of her destruction, her humiliation, and her everlasting servitude. Society is made a very hell by its divisions and their cruelties, and these have grown so hoary that all conscience has been lost, all resistance has ceased, and the most atrocious deeds of fraud and murder are carried on with the sanctities of religion." Can the drift be otherwise here, and can the end be different? The Christian sentiment of the country should rise in its might and throw off the terrible bondage in which truth and right are suffering, and give back to all the freedom, the life, and the power which belong to the untrammelled conscience.—The United Presbyterian.

Some men are possessed with the mania for belonging to secret societies. No new order of that description comes along that they do not join it, and the number of letters that make up the list of their titles exhausts and even duplicates the alphabet. One wonders how, if they are faithful to their pledges, they have time or spirit for doing anything but attending to them.—United Presbyterian.

Talk at Washington of a big navy, composed of $5,000,000 battle ships and other expensive vessels, is going on merrily. It is all very magnificent. But the United States does not want to fight anybody and nobody wants to fight the United States. War-ships built for sums one-half greater than they would cost if it were not for the high tariff are exceedingly pretty to look at. But there is such a thing as building too many of them. It is nice to be rich, but the rich man who throws away his money is a fool. The same applies to nations. The United States is about as likely to go to war with the man in the moon as with any other foreign power.—Chicago News.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 1890.

Congressman Pickler and his wife, from the new State of South Dakota, are the most prominent recent acquisitions to the capital's circle of temperance workers. Both of them work and talk for the cause, Mrs. Pickler often following her eloquent husband in a temperance address, and showing as much enthusiasm and interest in the matter as he. They frequent the temperance meetings that are held here and there in the city, and have added interest to these gatherings by describing the successive steps that led to the adoption of the present constitution by their young State, and by relating thrilling incidents of the battle for prohibition in Dakota.

This reminds me of the admonition which the W. C. T. U., a few days since, gave the South American, Central American, and Mexican Commissioners of the Pan-American Congress, over which temperance people here have been smiling approval ever since. While the nation's guests, these Pan-American delegates, during their round of banqueting, were served with intoxicating liquors on every occasion, and it was noticed that they indulged every time without stint. The W. C. T. U.'s reprimand expressed regret at this fact, and assured the Southern delegates that no better end could be served by them, while in this country, than to study the vast benefits of a prohibitory law as practiced in eight States of the Union. Senator Blair has just introduced a petition of the W. C. T. U. in favor of his educational bill, saying it was a renewal of their petitions of last Congress with 4,000,000 names attached. He also presented a similar petition from the Afro-American League.

Since my last communication the Washington City Commissioners have been examining the retail liquor applications for license, and have rejected more than they have approved. They have determined to enforce the so-called 1,000 foot rule. There is a clause among the regulations for licensing the sale of liquors in the District of Columbia, which says that outside the city a license shall not be granted to any person whose place of business is within 1,000 feet of another place licensed for the same business, except in cases where four-fifths of the heads of families residing in such portion of the district within one mile of the premises for which such license is asked, shall petition for it. Now this seems like a very slight concession to the cause of temperance, and yet the thinning-out process must have a beginning. It is ever so much better to suppress two hundred rum shops than to license that many more.

The "Lucy Hayes Memorial" project does not move so smoothly as its promoters could wish. Shortly after the death of Mrs. Hayes, the Woman's National Press Association decided to erect a statue to the memory of this good woman. They took official action in the matter, and proceeded to business. They proposed to erect a convention hall for women, to be called the Lucy Hayes Temple, with a statue of Mrs. Hayes in front. To this end 600 personal letters, enclosing five-dollar membership cards in blank, were sent to as many prominent women in the Union. As the replies, only partially cashed, were received, it was discovered that while the convention hall was popular enough, there was considerable objection to giving Mrs. Hayes the chief glory, the objectors claiming that she had not by any particular work or act or sacrifice earned precedence of women whose entire lives have been given to the welfare and improvement of their sex. Consequently the Press Association is in a quandary. It admits that there are many other women whose life work better entitles them to stand as types of womanhood than does that of Mrs. Hayes, but these leaders whom the sisterhood would delight to honor are still living, and it is held to be in bad taste to erect monuments to or write the lives of living people who hope to have many years yet upon the earth. So it does not yet appear what will be done in the matter. Before acting further, the Press Association will have to get a consensus of female opinion.

The bill entitled "An act to prevent persons from being forced to labor on Sunday" was the subject of discussion at a mass meeting held here last evening to oppose its passage by Congress. Various speeches were made against the measure on the ground that it was unconstitutional to legislate on religious questions. It was also held that no one in this country had ever been forced to work on Sunday against his will. Resolutions were passed protesting against the passage of the bill. To-morrow the Sabbath Union opens a convention in one of the city churches for the purpose of urging upon Congress the passage of this same bill. Congress has already been asked to pass a Sunday rest law by the City Commissioners.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

SETTLED AT THE HUB.

BOSTON, Jan. 28, 1890.

The incidents of journeying from Western to Northeastern quarters were not unlike those of ordinary travel by railroad. A failure to "connect" gave us fourteen hours at Binghamton, N. Y., in which to cultivate the grace of patience and a 2 o'clock A. M. train, four hours after we should have reached our destination. Coming into Boston sixteen hours late we found comfortable rooms at No. 8 Bulfinch street, until Saturday, when we took possession of our three rooms at No. 309 Tremont street, our home and headquarters for the present. We were all weary with the journey, and Mrs. Stoddard was quite ill, but with the assistance of a stout and willing helper things are assuming shape, and we shall soon be comfortable and prepared to welcome any of the friends who may find it convenient to call.

I have been so occupied with domestic duties that I have made but few calls. Captain and Mrs. Jones gave us a cordial welcome, and such of our friends as we have met are in good heart and hopeful. The interest awakened by the December convention has not wholly subsided, as I learn from the few friends I have seen, and I hope ere long to confer with active workers within reach, and begin an aggressive campaign.

Will the New England friends who desire lectures, or who are willing to distribute literature, or to actively co-operate in carrying on the work in New England, write me at No. 309 Tremont street, Boston? J. P. STODDARD.

SOUTHERN COLLEGE WORK.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—My visit to Marion of two days was very interesting, and full of work. I reached the place late Saturday, Jan. 11, and called on Rev. M. Dinkins, pastor of the Second Baptist church, who kindly entertained me, and I arranged to preach for him the next day at 2:30 P. M. He also introduced me to Rev. A. N. Jackson, who invited me to speak in the A. M. E. church at 7:30 P. M. Thus that Sabbath became to me a busy day. In the morning I looked in on the Sunday-school of the Lincoln Normal; and at 11 A. M. heard Mr. Larkin, an Englishman, preach to the congregation there. At 2:30 P. M. I preached to a large audience, on the duty of restoring the Gospel to its original simplicity and power; by keeping the Sabbath rest; by Bible temperance; and by an utter rejection of all narrow, selfish, oath-bound brotherhoods; lest we reject the Divine statute that all mankind are made in his image, and are to be treated not only as free, but as having equal rights. The meeting-house was large and well filled; but all seemed to approve the radical position taken. Indeed, I am told that secretism has never had much sway in this region, and the evening gathering indicated the same thing.

The A. M. E. church has a fine location, facing on the public square, not far from the courthouse; and is large and well built; and it was filled with an attentive audience that evening. But I saw no marks of disapproval while I urged them to put away alcoholic wine from the Lord's table, and to bring their offerings into the Father's house, and not take them away to a secret, selfish, oath-bound lodge. As they had no tyler at their church door, to keep people out with a drawn sword, that should be their home, and the place to gather in the poor, and the widow and the fatherless; to save their bodies and their souls. There was evidently a hearty response of the audience, especially when they stood up to sing.

The next day I visited among the schools of Marion. There is a military school here where boys as cadets are trained in the manual of arms.

There are a good many such schools in the South, and they are the favorite ones of the old Bourbons. But I did not think it advisable to waste any time there, among the 'grays;' so I passed over to the Baptist Academy. The Rev. M. Dinkins is president of this institution. They have 175 students on the roll, divided into several grades, with a faithful and capable corps of teachers. It would be difficult to estimate the value of such an institution as a power to save our country from the despotism of a so-called Southern aristocracy, by training the coming generation in the knowledge of truth and duty. Going out to the Lincoln Normal, in the afternoon, I spent some time in the primary department, where I counted upwards of 90 scholars, apparently between the ages of 7 and 10 or 12. It was pleasant to see earnest and well-prepared teachers using the most advanced methods, and beginning thus early to train these young minds for the responsible work of the next generation. They have upon the list in this school, I believe, about 225 pupils and several grades.

On Tuesday I returned to Selma; and being too much affected by the climate to venture farther south at present, I passed on the next day to Atlanta, Ga.

SAMUEL F. PORTER.

ROUSING SOUTHERN PENNSYLVANIA.

NEWBURGH, Pa., Jan. 29, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I was invited to give an address in what is known as Round Hill Presbyterian church, near Stewartstown, by Mr. John Hyson. Mr. H., who is an officer in this body, kindly consulted with the session, and arranged for the meeting. The pastor, Rev. T. L. Springer, in announcing it remarked, "I shall not be present to hear this lecture, and hope no one else will. I hope he will have to speak to the bare walls." His father and some relatives belonged to the lodge. Notwithstanding this insult to his session and to an entire stranger, a goodly number gathered at the time appointed.

Finding arrangement could not be made for a lecture Friday evening in Stewartstown, because of another meeting, I hurried on to Newville, Cumberland county, stopping over one train at York.

Here, Rev. Mr. Reed, the United Presbyterian pastor, was suffering from a severe attack of the "grip," and cordially invited your agent to fill his pulpit Sabbath morning. A union service was arranged for Dr. Erskine's (Presbyterian) church for the evening. All the pastors in town were visited and requested to invite their people to unite in this service. Rev. Floyd, the leading Lutheran pastor, was opposed to the lodge, and kindly manifested his interest by subscribing to the Cynosure. He would have united in the service, he said, had not so many of his members belonged to the lodge. He thought he could have done so with safety had but few belonged. I suggested that the greater the evil the greater the need. The other Lutheran pastor (a new man) was a full-fledged Mason. When asked why he belonged to the lodge, he replied, "Because it teaches morality." I inquired if that was not what he taught in the church. He replied, "Many come to the lodge who will not go to the church." As women and children, all poor and needy are excluded from the lodge, doubtless in his estimation the church is needed to teach them morality. How much morality would a lodge teach a man who was too immoral to go to the house of God? "O consistency, thou art a jewel!" The Methodist pastor was strongly opposed to the lodge. He realized it had dragged away many members of his church. He invited his people to be present at the union service. The United Brethren pastor, Rev. Grimm, said he would invite his people to hear me; as he had been speaking every evening he would be glad of a rest Sabbath evening. For some reason unknown to me, he did not keep his promise, but held service on Sabbath evening. He is of the liberal persuasion.

Both Sabbath services were largely attended. Some three hundred were present at the morning service, and more than that number gathered in the large Presbyterian church in the evening.

As some members of this church had been duped into the lodge, I did not know but the pastor would feel timid in endorsing my work. But I was happily disappointed. Said Dr. Erskine, "Give them the best you have got. I see the lodge injures every one who joins." When I had concluded he prayed most earnestly for God's blessing upon the truth spoken.

Dr. Erskine was for some time editor of the Northwestern Presbyterian, which merged into the Interior, of which Dr. Gray is now editor. He is well known to the senior editor of the Cynosure, who spoke in his church when here visiting the son of the Anti-masonic Governor Ritner.

At this place I have spoken twice; at first on Monday evening, in the protracted meeting commenced in the U. B. church. This meeting adjourned last evening so that all might hear me in the Presbyterian church. I spoke for nearly two hours to not less than three hundred people.

Yesterday I visited Shippensburg, where Rev. W. A. McCarroll is pastor of the Presbyterian church. Owing to the fact that other meetings are being held it was not thought best to have lectures now. Rev. M. subscribed for the Cynosure, and will arrange to give me a hearing later if I can visit his town. I arranged with Rev. Wiley, who is pastor of a Presbyterian church two miles in the country, to address those who might gather this evening.

When going along the street in Newville I saw a very dirty-looking picture, intended to represent an Indian, with the words "Great Exposure" printed above, and a statement below that on that evening the "Red Men," a professed secret society, would expose their secrets for 10 cents a head to any who might be curious enough to pay it. I thought, truly this is a "great exposure." It exposes the natural unregenerate heart, "without God and hope in the world." It exposed the humiliating fact that here in the United States, with all our enlightenment, the light of nineteen centuries pouring down upon us, and God's open Word before us, men could be found who in secret chambers at midnight hours loved to practice the barbaric custom of the heathen savages. Ah, truly, here is a sad exposure! But there is one coming sadder yet! When the books of life are closed; when the guilty soul stands unmasked before the assembled gaze of a universe; when the Rev. Johnstons who have been fooling away their time in Masonic pits; when the murderers of Dr. Cronin; when Jo Smith and his colleagues, with their Masonic Endowment House oaths, and all who "love and make a lie" stand before the Great Judge. That will, indeed, be a "great exposure!" May God in mercy save us from the great wrath that will fall upon the head of the unrepentant sinner!

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE BEREIA REGION.

BEREA, Ky., Jan. 29, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Berea College was never more prosperous than at present, nor was there ever more harmony and efficiency in the working forces. Last night I attended the regular monthly scientific lecture in the College chapel, by Prof. L. W. Dodge. The attendance of students and citizens was large. His subject was the tariff, and the discussion, which was non-partisan, and in the main impartial and fair, was listened to with great attention.

Last Sabbath evening it was my privilege to preach to the one congregation of the place. Next Thursday evening I am invited to give a lecture on the subject of secret societies, in a Disciple church in the vicinity. Bro. Fee has promised to go and help. Next Sabbath I intend to preach sixteen miles from here in the mountains, to a church that stands for union in Christ and in opposition to strong drink, secret lodges, and all other iniquities. They refuse to be called Congregationalists, not because they object to government by the congregation, or for want of respect for a denomination that has done more than any other for the South, but because they want to be in union with the whole, and not a part, of the body of Christ. I am yours in the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After arranging for a lecture at Batavia, and calling upon Revs. Cesander and Abbott to confer with them in regard to a meeting at Geneva, I returned home, but soon left again to fill a lecture appointment at Kingston, DeKalb county.

Prof. Gross, the master of the Kingston lodge of Masons, had taken quite an interest in my work. At first he seemed inclined to bring on a man to defend the lodge. But the champion did not come forth, and finally the master acknowledged that the Masonic brethren would not sustain him in resorting to the manly method of a public discussion. He then indulged in the usual talk about my lectures stirring up the young men to join the lodge. Having heard the story of the boy who whistled when he went through the graveyard to keep his courage up, I was willing the master should indulge in that kind of bracing talk as far as he could with a clear conscience.

He said his brethren condemned the course of some who had refused me a place to lecture in Kingston. I suggested that they let me have their lodge hall for my lecture, but he thought that was not large enough, as it was only seated around the sides. But the Grand Army boys, he said, would let me have their hall. I asked him to secure it free of rent, and I would lecture at Kingston. Afterwards he reported that I could have it; so I sent on an appointment to lecture there on Friday night, Jan. 17. But one of the G. A. R., who is also a Mason, stubbornly refused to let me in free of rent, as the master of the Masons had assured me they would. I should pay for the use of the hall or I could not have it.

In this lecture I presented Ancient Craft Masonry to my audience as a system of idolatry when viewed from the standpoint of its religious ceremonies, and as a Christ-ignoring and rejecting religion when viewed from the standpoint of its creed and ritual of worship. I showed that while professing to regenerate and free from sin, its covenants actually bound to sin, and that the Clan-na-Gael and the Mormon Endowment House are a part of the secret society system of which Masonry is the head. The lecture was in a hall controlled by the Free Baptist church, as the Grand Army hall was in use for a dance. An interesting feature of the Kingston meeting was the singing.

The next day Bro. Worcester took me to Monroe, where I arranged to speak in the M. E. church. We then went to Lynnville and stopped over night with Bro. Dresser, and attended church with him Sabbath morning, and returned to Monroe in time to be at the 2 p. m. meeting of the Methodist church. The pastor preached an interesting discourse, after which it was announced that I would preach at night and lecture on Monday and Tuesday nights.

I was hospitably entertained and courteously treated by the Methodist church and congregation of Monroe. I formed a very pleasant acquaintance with the pastor, and with several of the leading citizens of the town. This makes two M. E. churches that I have preached in lately, giving two lectures in each.

I spoke next in the Evangelical Swedish Lutheran church of Batavia, Rev. Challman, pastor. He has a fine church edifice. The young people sang some Swedish songs, and he expressed himself well pleased with my work, and his young men aided me in the distribution of literature in the congregation.

I spent as much time as was necessary to complete my arrangements for meetings next week, and then returned home to do my writing and spend the Sabbath with my family.

The treasurer was short of funds to meet the expenses of last month's work. Will those who are interested promptly supply this lack? Let us unitedly look to Jesus for his blessing, while we strive with spiritual weapons to pull down these strongholds of Satan.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES AT YALE.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 30, 1890.

Yale Divinity School has 139 students, representing 52 colleges in America, England and other countries. Most of the students assembled in the chapel at 11:30 o'clock Thursday last to observe the day of prayer for colleges. The services consisted of song, prayer and reports from fourteen of the colleges represented. This service closed at 12:30 o'clock. At 3 o'clock p. m. the general meeting of the university, addressed by Dr. Twitchel of Hartford, was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall.

The two meetings, when contrasted with a meeting which I attended last year on the same occasion in the West, show that the Day of Prayer for Colleges means something entirely different to different peoples. Judging from the name, we would suppose it was a day set apart for prayer for a special purpose. The observance here hardly justifies the supposition. After listening to reports from colleges and the address, we are perhaps expected to go home to do the praying. The question is, why don't they pray on a day set apart for the purpose? When compared with a five or six hour service, such an observance seems a mere travesty resulting in a holiday. To be just and not too severely critical, it is safe to say that the day has not been a day of prayer here.

Reports from different colleges show a great difference in the religious life which exists in them. Here perhaps the small college contrasts most favorably with the large and old university. The following are a few of the conclusions which reports of college Christianity show:

1. That the small college has a greater proportion of Christians than the institutions which counts students by thousands.
2. That the small college has a greater proportion of working Christians.
3. That the standard of morality is higher at the school of few students.
4. That the college of few students does a greater amount of local work in proportion to the number of students.
5. That a greater proportion of students are converted in the small schools.
6. That they give greater insurance of Christian education and character and hence better fit students for usefulness in the world than the colleges of a thousand or more students and as many privileges and temptations.

I think these conclusions are thoroughly warranted by the facts; facts which in some cases may not, and in others ought not to be stated.

F. L. J.

RELATION OF THE SEXES.

MONONGO, N. Dak.

Much has been said and written lately on the equality of the sexes. If nothing were written or taught on the subject but what harmonized with the teaching of Scripture, I would have nothing to say, as I am a woman suffragist and would love to see woman elevated to the enjoyment of all her God-given rights. But in the discussion of this, as other questions, some are disposed to ignore the teaching of Divine authority, and therefore arrive at wrong conclusions. It is evident there is no equality of sexes in physical strength or endurance. It is reasonable, and is also in harmony with the laws of our being, that the stronger the physical being one possesses, the stronger will be his mental capacities. In this enlightened age, most men are willing to take upon themselves the heavier burdens of life, for which their greater strength has the better adapted them; and women are justly being promoted to positions of honor and trust which require less physical strength, but to which they are as well adapted as men. We are glad to see this growing sentiment among men to elevate woman to full rites of citizenship.

But I write to urge my fellow reformers in their zeal for the elevation of women not to transcend the authority of the Scriptures, or give any portion of the Scripture a forced interpretation, as seems to have been done by some writers, one of whom, for instance, lately wrote in the Union Signal on "A Study in Genesis." The readers of that and similar articles are advised to read and compare them with the following passages of Scripture: The word of the Lord to the woman: "Thy desire shall be to thy husband (or, as it is in the margin, subject to thy husband), and he shall rule over thee," Gen. 3: 16. Paul says, "Let the women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but let them be in subjection, as also saith the law," 1 Cor. 14: 34. Paul again: "But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man," 1 Cor. 11: 3. The 8th and 9th verses of this same chapter have the following: "For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man. For neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man." Paul, in his exhortation to the Colossians, says: "Wives, be in subjection to your husbands, as is fitting in the Lord." Again, Paul in his letter to Timothy, says: "Let a woman learn in quietness with all subjection. But I permit not a woman to teach, nor to have dominion over a man, but to be in quietness. For Adam was first formed, then Eve; and Adam was not beguiled; but the woman being beguiled hath fallen in transgression," 1 Tim. 2: 11-14. Paul in his letter to the Ephesians seems to be very explicit when he says: "Wives, be in subjection unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ also is the head of the church, being himself the Saviour of the body. But as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives also be to their husbands in every thing."

LIGHT, LIGHT; MORE LIGHT!

WARE, Mass.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The cry for "light on the dark orders of secret organizations" is constantly coming to our ears. I have just received a letter from a dear friend in western New York, saying, "If you have any papers that will divulge Masonry, send them to me, for we have one Mason in the family, and there is another member of the family not favorably impressed, and says he will never join anything he does not and cannot see into before he joins it." It seems there is great fear that surrounding influences may overcome this noble young man. I have hastily gathered up a few tracts, all I have, and some copies of the Cynosure and mailed to this friend; but I am in need of tracts and anti-secret literature for distribution in my extended correspondence.

I am glad the cry is being made, "Give us light" on this dark, vile system of heathen and pagan origin. It shows "public sentiment" is being aroused, and what little I can do shall be done to let the light shine on this dark conspiracy against Christian liberty and civilization. How many abler pens than mine are silent on this great question. Will not God hold them responsible? is the question now pending in my mind. I hope and pray that God may arouse his ministers and churches to a sense of their duty toward this great subject.

As far as I am able to learn, there never has been a time when secret orders were making such great efforts to get people into their ranks as at the present time. Ought not God's people to make as much effort to keep them out of the lodge? And I am of the opinion all that are really anti-secretists in principle will not be idle, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. May God give this work a refreshing from the Holy Spirit.

MRS. L. M. HOYT.

SUGGESTIONS.

MONTDALE, Pa.

Allow me, Mr. Editor, to make the following suggestions:

1. That a tract, carefully prepared, be written by some one of your able contributors, embracing the facts of the Cronin murder, together with the trial of the case. And let said tract contain the empanelling of the jury, cost in time and money of said trial, etc.

2. Let the late Mormon trial with the most pertinent facts, showing the imminent peril to church and to state, to all good government growing out of these oath-bound cabals of all kinds. Let these be put into convenient tracts and published by the N. C. A. for general circulation.

3. My third suggestion is that some one put in form a tract of some eight or more pages, what may be called "The Parkersburg Tragedy," embracing the published fact of the murder of J. W. Johnson, minister of the M. E. church of Huntington, W. Va. As the facts cannot be had by the public, as they would be were it not that the crime was perpetrated by Masonry, let some graphic hand give life and form to the case, in the light of the known workings of the Royal Arch degree of Masonry. Then let a pungent application be made to the ministry, with an appeal to the conscience of Christendom.

Then let these tracts be most vigorously circulated. God in his providence is turning secret societies inside out, and inviting all reformers to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

Such thunderings of Providence as we are getting all about the heavens in these eventful days, must tend to open the eyes of all candid, thoughtful persons. What stupendous wickedness and heaven-defying mockery, couched in the Royal Arch degree of Masonry! It is hard for an honest man to understand how any one can venture such mockery on God and his Book. That ministers of Christ can do it, I know not how to believe. That false ministers may get down so low, and there meet an avenging God, seems possible.

My heart is made very sad in view of the death of brother McFall and sister Blanchard. Yours for Christ against lodgery.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

PITH AND POINT.

LODGE TENDENCIES OF THE SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS.

Many years ago, while the immortal J. G. Stearns lived and wrote, I wrote him to find out the position of President Dodge of Madison University on the lodge question, and learned that he was believed to be a lodge-bound soul. Lately in the Christian Inquirer of New York I read that the young men of Hamilton were nearly all out attending the conventions of their several secret fraternities, five of which are represented in Madison University! Eld. J. G. Stearns was the valedictorian of the very first college class formed in said school. He joined the Masons, and seeing the wickedness of the craft, before Morgan's book came out promptly seceded, and wrote his first work against it. How extremely humiliating that this school of the prophets, where Stearns, Kincaid and Wade took their education, should now, in 1890, become a vassal of the lodge. What is the prospect of our rising ministry under such tutors? Let these men remember the priests who offered strange fire on God's altar.—NATHAN CALLENDER.

LODGE "CHARITY."

During "grass-hopper" times an old "Odd-fellow," who had his place mortgaged for about all that it was worth, boastfully said in a crowd, "I got $5 aid from the Odd-fellows' fund." A by-stander quickly replied, "Yes, and paid out $20 for initiation fee." He replied, with a blasphemous oath, "That is so." "An open confession is good for the soul." That was charity for a fact! That was worse than the "wicked and slothful servant" who hid his Lord's "money;" for he gave back all the principal,—"And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine."—D. K. LAWRENCE.

"GIVE THEM THE TRUTH ANYWAY."

We need your literature here very much indeed. Revivals are going on, but very little good is being done. The men do not attend church. Young women are not going. The Odd-fellows have a big revival. The K. of P. have all of the young men that the Odd-fellows and Masons have not got. The W. O. A. contains young women. The "Rebeccas" have the older women. What shall be done? If I were able to pay for papers for our ministers one year I would do it. If you have them to spare please send them. If you have other literature to be distributed, send it to me.—ROBERT L. HEARN, Portland, Ind.

KANSAS AND MISSOURI CHRISTIANS WHO ARE OUT AND OUT FOR CHRIST.

I received some of your papers from a friend near Garland, Kans., and like the spirit and tone of it. I write to let you know that all the holiness people I know of in Kansas and Missouri are straight against secrecy and in favor of temperance; and I am persuaded that the facts set forth in your paper are some of the many reasons why we do not succeed better. I was once a Master Mason, but God opened my eyes to see his truth on that line, and I have been declaring his Word on all lines against sin in all its forms. Secrecy and secretism are two of the most formidable foes God's Word and Spirit have to contend against. God's people are one in heaven and on earth, according to his Word, men's opinions to the contrary notwithstanding.—R. H. G. KEERAN, Fort Scott, Kans.

LITERATURE.

A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT. By Mark Twain. Pp. 580. Illustrated. Charles L. Webster and Co., New York.

Our great American humorist is not a Cervantes; his wit is broader; has less of "Attic salt," but more of "Yankee nutmeg," and so is happily seasoned for our free and easy times. This is a more purposeful book than Mark Twain has yet written. "Don Quixote" was enough for the windmills of knight errantry. Twain's Yankee must topple over the gilded images the whole world has been worshiping, while Tennyson has been swinging his censur as high priest, enchanting us with his perfume of praise, and bothering our sight with the smoke of his incense offered to King Arthur and his knights of the Round Table. Now comes our Mississippi humorist, with a whiff of our Western winds about him, and injects a little 19th century sense into those old 6th century myths: and this gives a grand opportunity to reflect the customs of those days from the mirror of truth, and show all the gluttony, beastiality, blood, cruelty and slavery through which our race has drawn its weary length. The sharp blade of satire cuts merrily through the titles, and "inherited rights," and pomp and regalia of modern nobility: and the author, bold and brave as the knights Tennyson shows, does not spare the hierarchy and priestcraft of the Romish church, at whose door he lays the slavery of the ages.

The humor of the book is subordinated, however, to this healthy purpose. Truth is served by wit. The sentiment that America is and must remain sui generis, adorns each page. The counts, and especially the "no-accounts," are to be estimated as men standing apart from their titles. Equal citizenship and upright manhood and not the tinsel of titles are in keeping with the dignity of thorough-going Uncle Sam. Reverence for rank and titles as such, must be relegated to dudes and dudesses; and "when a disease has worked its way down to that level, it may fairly be said to be out of this system." The book is most happily illustrated by Dan. Beard, and will be read long after most of our American humor is forgotten.

Scribner's Magazine for February contains another article in the African series, by Herbert Ward, for five years an officer in the Congo Free State. Mr. Ward gives a comprehensive and picturesque description of that vast country opened up by Stanley and his followers, from the mouth of the Congo to Stanley Falls, in the very heart of Africa—a distance of fifteen hundred miles. The author's long residence in that country has enabled him to present much new and strange material about the cruel and barbarous tribes. W. C. Church's first paper on "John Ericsson, the Engineer," has been prepared under exceptional opportunities. Ericsson's executors have turned over to Col. Church about fifteen thousand letters and manuscripts, to enable him to write the biography of the great inventor, to be published this year. The first article shows the sources of his strength in parentage, natural aptitude, education, travel, and useful friendships. The second paper, in March, will show Ericsson's intimate relations to the progress of modern invention. William Henry Bishop, in "A Day in Literary Madrid," describes his pleasant interviews with Valera, Valdes, and Galdos, the leading authors of modern Spanish fiction, whose portraits accompany the article. W. H. Mallock, not long ago, spent six weeks at a castle in the very heart of Hungary, where he had the opportunity, as the guest of an old friend, to form part of the actual life of the place. His impressions of several typical castles are recorded in an interesting article, "Through Three Civilizations," illustrated from his own photographs. Eugene Schuyler, the well-known diplomatist, relates a curious consular experience which centred about the "Minnesota Heir to a Serbian King." G. Frederick Wright points out the importance, from an archaeological point of view, of the recently discovered Nampa (Idaho) image.

The Marseillaise is for the ages. It is a song with which none other can be compared. The Scotch "Bruce's Address," which some one has said should be sung in the "teeth of the whirlwind," is a nobler strain. The French war chant is the fierce, wild outcry of people beginning to turn back from the depth of despair; who have no traditions of faith toward God to cheer, but who feel the pangs of a great deliverance upon them. The Marseillaise has been often married to reform sentiments of one kind or another, and one of the best arrangements of the kind is issued by S. W. Straub and Co. as a temperance song (price 30c.). Yet we always feel after singing it that it is always mismated, and can never be the Marseillaise except with the old words and flavor of the French Revolution.

J. J. H. Gregory issues his 1890 catalogue, and every gardener will want it. None of our seedsmen have earned a better reputation for reliable seeds; and few have served their generation better in providing new and improved products from our gardens. The present catalogue is especially rich in its presentation of new varieties. Write to Marblehead, Mass., for it.

Eric Anderson, a wealthy Swede farmer living near Victoria, Knox county, Ill., came to Peoria to renew his insurance policies, and while on his way stopped at several saloons and got quite drunk. He finally laid down on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy bridge, near Edwards Station, and was run over. Some boys tried to pull him from the track, but he clung to the rails until the train cut him in half.

LODGE NOTES.

NEW LODGES.

The number of assessment societies springing up in New England during the last six months remind one of toadstools on a manure heap.

The People's Favorite Order is a new society in the field awaiting public favor.

Royal Ark is the name of a new organization incorporated not long since in Massachusetts. It is an endowment order, paying $100 in one year. The principal office is to be located in Boston.

The Order of the World is another. The Office of the Supreme Lodge was opened for business about Nov. 20, and it is reported that no less than forty-eight lodges are in process of formation.

There are now seventy-two lodges of the Order of the Fraternal Circle in existence, and a dozen more in process of organization. This order was incorporated July 11, 1889, under the laws of Massachusetts. It offers a $200 endowment, payable in two years, a $1,000 death benefit, and all at a cost of membership of but $3.50. "This is the order of orders, and has come to stay," is the claim of the swindlers who are pushing it upon the public.

The National Benefit Union is another of the mushroom fraternity. The offices of the Supreme Union are at rooms 24 and 25, 165 Tremont street, Boston.

P. F. Y. B. O. are the cabalistic characters standing for the People's Five Year Benefit Order, incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, March 16, 1889. The objects of the order, as published, are: "To unite in the bonds of protection, prudence and peace, all acceptable persons between the ages of thirteen and sixty-nine, of good moral character, industrious habits, sound bodily health, respectable calling, and who believe in a Supreme Being." This order agrees to pay each member, lady or gentleman, $500 in five years from date of membership. It agrees to pay from $5 to $20 per week in case of sickness or accident. And it charges only $1.50 for each assessment.

Dr. Darius Wilson of Temple Place, Boston, is working his Royal Society of Good Fellows for all it is worth. The drawing features of this order are explained in the following notice in a lodge organ: "The third of the successful series of socials given by Imperial Cohort, No. 1, will be held at Caledonia Hall, 45 Elliot street, Boston, Friday evening, February 28, at 8 p. m., and will consist of a concert and entertainment, and refreshments, after which dancing will be in order until 1 a. m."

Another new secret society is called United Order of the Golden Cross. Still another is the Royal Conclave of Knights and Ladies.

Most of these upstart societies are projected by men who live by their wits, and find the most gullible of the human race are the "Jiners." Most of these Jiners belong to one, or perhaps a dozen to fifteen other lodges. For instance, a lodge paper eulogizing one of its heroes, says: "Bro. B— has been a member of the following orders and still retains his membership in most of them: P. S. of Narragansett Tribe, No. 43; Charter Member and ex-K. of R. of Tecumseh League, No. 2, O. R. M. (Red Men); Past President of the Permanent Haymakers' Association; ex-C. of Liberty Council, No. 11, O. U. A. M. (United Am. Mechanics); Charter Member and P. C. of Garfield Castle, No. 92, A. O. K. M. C.; Charter Member of Court Franklin, 7185, A. O. F. (Foresters); Franklin Lodge, No. 5, I. O. O. F.; Member of Sparta Lodge, No. 10, K. P., and Charter Member of Girard Assembly, No. 6, A. O. of M. P.

George W. Wright, ex-Supreme Treasurer of the order of Tontl, pleaded guilty at Philadelphia, Monday, to embezzling $38,666.20 of the society's funds, and was fined $1,000 and given four years and nine months in the penitentiary.

"A brother who recently visited a lodge in Colorado states that almost every member attending the lodge carried a pistol, which was left on a shelf in the Tyler's room. It is clear that 'brotherly love' reigned there."—Lodge organ. Such "brotherly love" is a counterfeit, for it lasts only so long as the revolver is out of reach.

The Freemason of Sidney, Australia, says, significantly: "Can any brother devise a scheme, not involving a resort to muscular exercise, by which grog-sodden Masonic dead-beats can be kept off one's premises? Not a week passes without a visit from one or more of these awful examples, who enter our sanctum with a heartrending story of distress, hunger and bad luck."

The assassins of Mormon lodgery are said to have resumed operations in Utah. A telegram from Fort Duchesne, Utah, gives the information that William Whitney Seymour, a prominent gentile ranchman in Ashley Valley, was found dead in his bed, where he evidently had been shot while asleep. It is believed the murder was committed by Danites. Seymour went to Utah in 1882, and was a post trader at old Fort Wornburger.

"Freemasonry," says the Voice of Masonry, "esteems God first; country, second; neighbor, third; family, fourth; and self last; and its law of brotherly love applies accordingly. Some of the craft forget this, and clearly show by their conduct that self-aggrandisement is their highest Masonic aim. They shove themselves forward on all possible occasions, and in every conceivable manner seek preferment and emoluments, regardless of the rights of others."

A spring medicine is needed by everyone. Winter food, largely consisting of salt meat and animal fats, causes the liver to become disordered and the blood impure, hence the necessity of a cleansing medicine. The best is Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

LOOK HERE, FRIEND, ARE YOU SICK?

Do you suffer from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, Nervousness, Lost Appetite, Biliousness, Exhaustion or Tired Feeling, Pains in Chest or Lungs, Dry Cough, Night sweats or any form of Consumption? If so, send to Prof. Hart, 88 Warren Street, New York, who will send you free, by mail, a bottle of Floraplexion, which is a sure cure. Send to-day.

Attention! If you desire a fine head of hair of a natural hue and free from dandruff, Hall's Hair Renewer is the best and safest preparation to accomplish it.

The Carpenter Booklet.

COMPILED BY
REV. J. E. ROY,
Western Secretary American Missionary Association.

Size, 3¼ by 5¼ inches. Pages 139.

PAPER COVER, POSTPAID, 10 CENTS.

CONTENTS:

- Biographical sketch of Philo Carpenter.
- Testimonies as to the Evils of Secret Societies, by:
 1. The American Missionary Association.
 2. Thirty Southern Educational Institutions.
 3. Many Southern Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist and Methodist ministers.
 4. Many of the best known Pastors and Evangelists of this country.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,
221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM TO BE HELD IN CHICAGO 1890.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake City and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian Church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we the undersigned, hereby give our voices in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago on or about the day of April, 1890.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1890.

THE CALL for the Chicago Conference (See previous page) is being signed by some of the best and ablest men of the Chicago churches and seminaries, and the committee is encouraged to proceed. As the time is short they urge that friends in all the States from the Ohio to the Missouri river secure the names of pastors and forward immediately to them at this office. Send name, address and denomination to W. I. Phillips of the committee.

IMMORTALITY OF THE WICKED DEAD.

Adjusting eternity for God is a "vanity tossed to and fro of them that love death." As the end of time draws near the number of schemes and schemers increase, and their activity and zeal is fearful. Whereas eternity and infinity may develop myriads on myriads of God's ways and methods which

"Nor thought can reach, nor science can define."

And we know, for the Bible tells us, that when Christ's mediatorial kingdom ends, there will be an end put to "iniquity, oppression and sin;" and rational minds in all worlds will see and say that God's "ways" have been "just and true" in that mediatorial kingdom, heaven and hell, reward and punishment included.

I have exhumed an essay before the alumni of Wheaton College, given by Mrs. N. E. Kellogg twelve years ago, and have insisted on its publication, not alone for the friends, graduates and students of Wheaton College, but for its original refutation of annihilation, and non-immortality and other theories. Mrs. Kellogg shows that these dreamers and adjustors of eternity for God make a clear denial of the whole scheme of Christ's redemption of mankind. "Everlasting redemption from what?" she says. "Why, only from the quiet of endless sleep."

I am persuaded that all who read this beautiful original essay will thank the Cynosure for it, while all who know the trials through which the College has passed will enjoy the opening illustration of the rocks, of the sea-lions, and their bright shining after the angry waves had passed away.

THE SENIOR EDITOR.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CREED.

One of the most notable theological debates of the present generation was closed last week by the Presbyterians of New York city. Some modification of their creed has for years been called for, and last November the presbytery of New York voted, 67 to 15, to present an overture to the next General Assembly. The present debate is on the report of a committee suggesting certain changes upon which that overture should be based. That report was made January 20, the discussion continued ten days, and closed on Saturday with the speeches of Dr. John Hall against the charge, and of Dr. Hastings, the ranking professor in Union Theological Seminary, and chairman of the committee, in favor of it. The opening speeches were made by Prof. William M. Paxton of Princeton opposed, and Prof. Philip Schaff of Union Seminary, in favor of the report. They were followed day after day by other members of this presbytery, which includes some of the ablest theologians and preachers of the country.

Dr. Hall is so well known as a noble advocate for a practical Christianity, full of the Gospel spirit, that his whole address will be widely read. We give a sentence or two:

"It is alleged by those who desire a revision of the confession of faith that the conditions we are living under are greatly changed and improved; that missionary work is being organized in these days for which no provision is made in the confession of faith. But it is a confession of faith of which we are speaking; it is not a confession of duty. It is what the church believes. If it be confession of duty let a new chapter be added with a section for each of the boards of the church, with possibly one on 'prohibition,' which is certainly 'in the air' in the truest sense, and one on which instruction is needed. Let us have a section devoted to the evangelical alliance, and one on the hospital, Sunday, etc. We could understand this if an ethical statement of the duty of the church were to be presented to the world; but that is not the end of the confession, which is a witness of truth against error and the bulwark of Zion."

It is impossible not to sympathize with a man who has so long stood for the truth in its simplicity and power. On the other side are ranked not only godly and able men, but descending through all grades of religious profession, the Swings, the Thomases, the Underwoods, from the liberal to the infidel—all are denouncing the Westminster Confession. Self-important scribes, who have yet to learn even the alphabet of Scripture teaching, read sermons to preachers, and load the columns of the daily press with sage advice. Infidelity glories in the agitation. Notwithstanding, if theology is to be regarded as an exact science, whose text-book is the Bible, the book unchangeable, the same yesterday, to-day and forever, it were well that its terms should be equally exact. They would be more safely stated, therefore, in the terms of Scripture; and the lawyers and divines of the old Westminster Assembly would have added both life and power to the Confession had they been less careful about the legal terms of their day and had more regard to those which are for all days and for all men.

PROPPED WITH FALSEHOOD.

Early last December the New York Herald obtained the opinions of a number of ministers in this country and England upon the use of tobacco. The most remarkable circumstance connected with the publication was the fact that the answer of Rev. R. S. Storrs, D.D., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, and president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, was made to say, over his own name, that he found "material help from a cigar when engrossed in study." This is a line added to his actual statement, which is against the tobacco habit, but guarded. Dr. Storrs immediately published a total denial and repudiation of the sentiment, which was added by a news-gatherer named Bok, understood to be the same man lately made editor of a department of a woman's journal, of whom we lately had occasion to say that he wrote like a Jesuit. It may be this person believed his cause desperate enough to be maintained by wholesale lying. At least we must believe that the tobacco evil and the fountain of lies are near together, and that one watered the other while it grew to be a defilement and curse to men.

Our Day takes up these opinions and gives some of the ablest. A few short extracts will be profitable for the Cynosure readers, and for the whole we gladly refer them to Our Day for January, page 59. Joseph Cook, the editor, notices that in twenty-seven States of the Union the scientific study of narcotics is required by law along with that of intoxicants. He adds:

More than one important religious denomination, notably the Methodist, now regularly makes inquiry of candidates for the ministry as to their habits concerning the use of tobacco. A large number of conferences refuse to accept habitual smokers as preachers. I believe there should be a reform in this matter of smoking among young men, but nothing prevents it so much as the practice of a few distinguished preachers, whose habits in other respects are exemplary, but who in regard to smoking set a bad example to the young.

T. DeWitt Talmage gives a good testimony, which we hope he will not some day preach against, as he did for the Freemasons. He gives this bit of experience:

For many years I smoked cigars, but I do not do so now. I would not now think of smoking a cigar any more than I would drink a vial of laudanum. I came to give up the habit in this way: I was living in Syracuse, N. Y., but had just been called to Philadelphia. An elder in the Philadelphia church to which I accepted a call offered, as one of the inducements to my coming, that he would give me all the cigars I wanted the rest of my life free of charge. He was a wholesale tobacconist, and would have kept his promise. At that time cigars were higher in price than they are now, and the offer meant the saving of a great deal of money to me. I was then smoking up to my full capacity,—that is, I used as many cigars as health would permit. I thought to myself what would happen if I should get them free! The thought so appalled me that I made a resolution then and there to stop smoking, and never touch tobacco again in any manner or form. And from that day to this I never have. Now, I would not take up smoking again for all the surplus in the treasury.

Dr. W. H. Ward, one of the Independent editors, never indulged in a habit which seems to him filthy and useless, and continues in a strain that does not flatter tobacco-users:

I think the practice inexcusable, except in the case of those who have begun it in an idiotic or vicious youth, and whose system is so saturated with the poison that they fear they will, through the shock the change would give the brain, revert into idiocy should they cease taking in the usual supply of nicotine.

Dr. Newman Hall, of London, says he began the use of the weed at 8 years of age, and quit it the same day. To him it is a dirty, costly, tyrannical and unhealthy habit. Dr. Thomas Armitage speaks very forcibly that the thought of associating the name of the ever-blessed Son of God with such a habit would be blasphemy, and the idea that one of his ambassadors should be under its power should be horrible. He adds:

As a rule, ministers will palliate their conduct in the use of tobacco by some semi-solemn or even comic joke, which may suffice to hoodwink themselves to the evils of the offensive practice, but such trash never hoodwinks either the holy God or sensible men. This is a mere mockery of their own shame. Adam Clark severely reproved two of his brethren for their smoking. "Yes, doctor," they said, "we are burning our idols." "Brethren," replied the indignant commentator, "if you want to please the devil better than by burning your idols, offer him, I pray you, a roast pig stuffed with your tobacco; it will be the most delicious sacrifice that you can devote to him."

Old Dr. James McCosh, whose firmness drove the secret societies from Princeton College, lays down two brief, comprehensive rules for the banishment of the tobacco evil, which we believe would be effective:

Smoking will be put down when young ladies declare that they will not look with favor on a young man who smokes, and when congregations declare that they will not take a minister who smokes.

We have no room for the answers of Bishop Coxe, Canon Farrar, Dr. Edward Beecher, Chaplain McCabe, Prof. Phelps and others. They are in like strain; and to read them would give the most obdurate tobacco-user cause for reflection.

MEAT TO ONE, POISON TO ANOTHER.

A minister, in a remote Colorado village, who has been receiving the Cynosure from our special fund for that purpose, writes that he is a graduate in "one of our largest and most Christian Eastern colleges," and was a member "of one of our oldest and most influential Greek-letter fraternities," and as such received an "immense amount of social, religious, moral, mental and physical good." As a result he is "in complete sympathy" with Freemasons, and we infer from his letter, with the whole secret society business—Mormons, Jesuits, Clan-na-Gael and all. He says the reading of the Cynosure has "increased this sympathy an hundred fold." The trouble with this friend is that he is a victim of the adjective. He began as a youth with the biggest, oldest and most influential associations that would receive him, and of course was immensely improved by them. But they have not yet improved enough upon the original. He has been reading how that Masonry is inseparably connected with the Clan-na-Gael, the Jesuits and the Mormons; how it kills men in its secret rites and allows no inquiry by the public; how the lodge is condemned by the ablest pastors and evangelists of the country, and yet the more he reads the more is he confirmed in his bad opinion. Like the single juror in the Cronin case, who early received a false impression of the case and all the evidence and all the argument of counsel and fellow jurors only fixed his opinion more firmly; so this friend has been through all the evidence we have presented against the lodge, only to be confirmed in his evil notions. Verily we may say with Paul (2 Cor. 2: 16), "to the one we are a savor of death unto death, and to the other of life unto life;" or with Peter (1 Peter 2: 7, 8), "Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious; but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed."

—The State reform school for Southern California is located at Whittier, a Quaker town near Los Angeles. The ceremony of laying the corner stone for a new building was to be celebrated on the 29th ult. The governor and many other distinguished men were to be present, as too frequently on such occasions, a number of secret orders were advertised to be on display. The Christian Worker says significantly, "The friends of this thriving community could dispense with this latter appendage."

—A consultation in the Cynosure office of representatives from the Union Park and Evanston Seminaries, will result, we trust, in a good work among college and seminary students all through the land. They propose to carry on the work by correspondence rather than by a distinct organization, of which students already have a full share. Another meeting will be called soon.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the N. C. A. College agent, now in the South, is now in Nashville, Tenn., where he will probably tarry three or four weeks.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard was in Boston last Sabbath and expected to begin the return journey home next day unless business connected with Wheaton College should detain him.

—Rev. A. W. Hall has been elected business agent of the Wesleyan churches to succeed Rev. D. S. Kinney, lately deceased. Bro. Hall was formerly pastor in College Springs, Iowa, and has been leading a movement for foreign missions for two or three years.

—Rev. Ronald D. Grant, of Beverly, Mass., whose brief, eloquent address in the Boston conference will be remembered by all who heard it, has been called by one of the Boston churches, and offered a salary of $4,000, which is twice that which he has been receiving.

—C. W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker of this city, has just resumed work in his office after an absence of several weeks because of sickness. Bro. Pritchard urges the preachers among the Friends to give their endorsement to the proposed Chicago conference.

—Mrs. Hadley, mother of Mrs. M. A. Baker, assistant editor of the Free Methodist of this city, died at the home of another daughter near Wheaton, last week, and was buried Saturday from the Wesleyan church in that place. Her first husband, Rev. Milton Smith, was a pioneer Wesleyan preacher, and a pronounced reformer. He was a strong Abolitionist, and supported our work against the lodge from the time of the Aurora convention till his death.

—Hon. William Bross, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Illinois, and one of the largest stockholders in the Chicago Tribune, and president of that company, died last Monday night after an illness of five days. He was 76 years old and had been a sufferer from diabetes during the last ten years. Mr. Bross was a man of great force of character, and in his prime was prominent in religious movements as well as in politics. He was opposed to secret societies from his youth, and, when in Williams' College, assisted in organizing an independent society to resist the assumptions of the Greek-letter fraternities. Their effort was successful and they routed the secretists. Mr. Bross was accustomed to refer to the event with enthusiasm.

—Charles Edwards Lester, a grandson of Jonathan Edwards, and biographer of Charles Sumner, died in Detroit, Mich., last Wednesday, at the age of 75. He was early in life prominently identified with the Abolition movement, having as co-laborers Henry Ward Beecher, Wendell Phillips, and William Lloyd Garrison. While in England as one of the delegates from this country to the Exeter Hall convention Mr. Lester gathered data for a work which he afterwards published under the title of "The Glory and Shame of England." This book was his greatest effort, and caused a sensation on both sides of the Atlantic. The object of Mr. Lester's book was to give England its share of credit for emancipating of slaves in the West India colonies, but to scourge her for the fearful slavery that existed at home in the factories and coal mines. Mr. Lester served as consul-general to Italy under President Pierce.

—The Herald of this city published a while since the following story of adventures, which has a lesson all editors will admire. Mark, dear readers of the Cynosure, how potent for good is the payment of a subscription: "Mary Allen West is pretty well known in Chicago as one of the editors of the Union Signal and also as the president of the Woman's Press Association.

There are few people who would not recognize her robust figure in a good-sized crowd if within hailing distance, yet a conductor who failed to identify the lady once came very near causing her some trouble. Miss West left Chicago for Dubuque on the 10:50 P.M. train, and, when the conductor came around, tendered an editorial mileage book which she had omitted to sign. The night was warm and the lady had doffed her collar; her hair was a trifle frayed at the edges, and altogether she presented rather an unprofessional appearance. At least, so the conductor thought, for after scanning her closely he said: 'This book is not yours, madam; I shall have to take it up!' Miss West simply remarked, 'Indeed!' and, leaning back, began fanning herself. The conductor passed on, finished collecting fares and presently retired to the forward car. Then the editor made a systematic search of her sachel and lunch basket, and evolved a number of letters, some of which had been written her and others that were introductions to persons in Dubuque. Loaded with these she laid for the unbelieving railroad man, and quietly flirted them in his face as he passed down the aisle. He glanced through the pile and tossed them back, saying: 'Yes, that's all very pretty, but has been worked too often. I could write you a bushel of letters myself.' And he again went away, still retaining her mileage book. Miss West resumed her fanning, and looked very cool and unconcerned; it takes a great deal to disturb her equanimity. Finally an old fellow across the aisle, who had been whispering to his wife, leaned over and said: 'This is Miss West, isn't it?' 'Yes, sir, that is my name, but the conductor won't believe it.' 'Well, ma'am, we owe you $1 for the Signal, and I guess I'll pay you now.' She thanked him and wrote out a receipt, and the Herald passenger, seeing the fun was over, strolled into the next car and put the conductor right. He went back and was very profuse in his apologies, but Miss West calmly continued fanning and said nothing."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Governor Brackett and the annual ball of the Irish Charitable Society—High License in Rhode Island—A patron saint of Masonry—A Question for our New England Christian Association to consider.

The Charitable Irish Society of Boston held its annual grand ball this week with Gov. Brackett and members of his staff as honored guests; but how much they honored the State they represented by their presence at this Irish Romanist gathering is a delicate point to gauge. The society claims to have been in existence about 150 years, from 1737 to the present date, but one naturally wonders what it could have found to do during more than half that period when Irishmen in New England were more rare than the Chinese are now. Boston might well wish that all her foreigners had as little desire to dictate in educational and religious matters as the latter much-abused nationality. They do not swell her pauper list, nor do they engage in strikes and riots, while efforts for their conversion are certainly as well rewarded as corresponding efforts for Jews and Catholics. But the latter can vote, which makes all the difference in the world as regards their social status.

Wyoming Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons in Melrose, Mass., has been presented with an elegantly designed and framed colored photograph of H. R. H. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, in his official character of Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Great Britain—a gift from Wor. Bro. T. B. Whytehead, Past Master of Eboracum Lodge F. and A. M. of York, England. This monarchical tendency of the lodge ought to show to every intelligent American that it is an institution neither of the people nor for the people. It does not seem as if the Masons of Melrose as they look upon the portrait of this princely rake which adorns their lodge room could feel much pride in such a patron saint. Lodge saints, by the way, must be a very different genus from the kind Dr. H. L. Wayland was thinking of when he gave this witty definition in his recent speech at the dinner of the New England Society in New York: "Saint: A man with convictions, who has been dead a hundred years, canonized now, cannonaded then." But it fits "as if it was made for them," many a tender heroic soul whom it has been my good fortune to know since engaging in the anti-secret work. They can afford to wait for their canonizing

"Till the earth is old
And the stars are cold.

And the leaves of the Judgment Book unfold," and as to the cannonading, they rather enjoy it.

Now friends of our New England Christian Association, shall we enter upon aggressive work this coming year? Shall we hold a convention in every State in New England, including Vermont, where none have been held as yet? Furthermore, shall we not make it a home missionary work? While we do not cease to warn men in the most specific terms against the false worship of the lodge, shall we not at the same time show them a better way by making salvation in the name of the Lord the prominent feature in all our meetings? While we seek to open the eyes of churches and ministers to the subtle infidelity and the moral corruption which the lodge is instilling into the minds of multitudes, shall we not seek to inspire in Christian believers a desire for such a baptism of the Holy Spirit as shall drive out the lodge from our New England Zion like an unclean bird of night? To this end we need more workers. We need, as a brother put it in a recent letter, men and women to go up and down through the length and breadth of the land, bearing the Gospel message in all its fullness, all its height and depth. The lodge can never be combatted successfully while the church remains thus spiritually dead. I believe that the time is near, even at the doors, for such an outpouring of God's Spirit as New England has never before seen, and there is nothing to hinder us, with those other Christian bodies who are one with us in sympathy, from being his chosen instrument for this work. All that is needed is that our faith shall rise to the level of our opportunity.

But if we have home missionaries and evangelists, they must be supported. Will not each one make it a subject for prayerful consideration how much he or she can give of his or her means to help on the work of evangelizing New England, and thus breaking down forever the lodge power? We can do it. That is not the question. It is shall we do it? We have Calebs and Joshuas in our midst ready to go up and possess the land for Christ. A golden opportunity lies before us. Dear brethren and sisters, can your money be put to better use, be the offering large or small, than to devote it to the task of saving New England? ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

The following in regard to secret societies is from the pen of Rev. C. P. Krauth, D.D., LL.D., one of the best scholars, greatest thinkers, and most sagacious churchmen of the present day. As most of our readers know, he belongs to the Lutheran church:

"It seems hard to understand how Christian men, with the light which is now spread upon the whole question of the secret societies, which are such vast and undefined powers in our time, can remain in them with a quiet mind. They strike at the root of the three divine institutions. They bring disturbance into the family, the church and the state, claiming for themselves what God has conferred on these alone. If the church cannot break down by the truth the oath-bound secret societies, they will break her down everywhere, as they have already done, virtually, to a large extent."—From the Evangelical Repository.

—In the year 1884, three young disciples in Spain were thrown into prison for not worshipping the host as it was borne past. Like Paul and Silas they prayed and sang praises even in jail, and one passing by in the street sent them five francs for their sweet singing. When the ten days of their sentence had expired, the judge demanded the fine of fifty francs. They had not money to pay it, and he sent them back to prison for another ten days. Two days later he set them free; for the priest had complained that his parishioners stood morning and evening before the prison, listening to the hymns they sang, and they were exciting so much interest that he was afraid many more would become Protestants.

—During the generations that Portugal has held the town of Zambesi, East Africa, she has never sought to send a missionary north of the river, and only does it now in order to counteract the powerful influence which has been established by British missionaries and British traders. Cardinal Lavigerie, who performed the act of consecration, referred to the splendid work of those devout sons of the church, Lieutenant Cardoza and Pinto, who have just returned from making what they are pleased to call treaties with the native chiefs. Portugal is evidently determined to make a desperate struggle to retain the belt across Africa she claims as hers.—Presbyterian Messenger.

THE HOME.

COMFORT ONE ANOTHER.

Comfort one another;

For the way is growing dreary,
The feet are often weary,

And the heart is very sad.

There is heavy burden-bearing,

When it seems that none are caring,

And we half forget that ever we were glad.

Comfort one another;

With the hand-clasp close and tender,

With sweetness love can render,

And looks of friendly eyes.

Do not wait with grace unspoken,

While life's daily bread is broken;

Gentle speech is oft like manna from the skies.

Comfort one another;

There are words of music ringing

Down the ages, sweet as singing

Of the happy choirs above.

Ransomed saint and mighty angel,

Lift the grand, deep-voiced evangel,

Where forever they are praising the eternal love.

Comfort one another;

By the hope of Him who sought us

In our peril—Him who bought us,

Paying with his precious blood;

By the faith that will not alter,

Trusting strength that will not falter,

Leaning on the one divinely good.

Comfort one another;

Let the grave-gloom lie beyond you,

While the Spirit's words remind you

Of the home beyond the tomb,

Where no more is pain or parting,

Fever's flush or tear-drop starting,

But the presence of the Lord and for all his people room.

THE GREAT ENCAMPMENT.

BY REV GEORGE THOMPSON.

Probably the world never witnessed such an one before nor since—a camp of over 2,000,000 souls, with large herds of cattle, sheep and goats, remaining in one place for nearly a year! When was it? Where could a place be found to accommodate such a gathering? God led them to the place, above all others in the world just suited for such an encampment.

The people were the Israelites, led by Moses and Aaron. The place was before the majestic Sinai, in Arabia. This particular mountain is entirely separated from the surrounding piles of peaks and ridges, by deep valleys of greater or less width. It lies northwest and southeast, and is two miles long by one wide. It is very rugged, and broken by peaks and gullies. The highest, on the south, is 7,363 feet above the sea, the northern peak is 6,937 feet, the general elevation being 6,500.

It was on the northern end the scenes of Exodus 19 and 20 were witnessed, from whence the voice of God was heard, and the law was given. How is this ascertained at this late day? We have the accounts of many travelers, and of government surveys, giving particular descriptions of the configuration of the mountain, and all the surroundings; and there is but one place in the vicinity where such a crowd could be accommodated, and from whence all could witness the fearful scenes, and hear "God speaking out of the midst of the fire." That place is at the north end of the mountain. While narrow and deep valleys surround it on all sides but the north, here is a broad and beautiful plain, over two miles long and half a mile wide, with angles adjoining of half as much more, and so located that people from every part of it could see and hear.

The plain descends toward the mountain, making a vast amphitheater "a hundred times more spacious than the coliseum at Rome, as if prepared for a great assembly and a great occasion. Never was there a spot more fitted for a scene so august."—Field.

Cook says: "There is space for the entire host of the Israelites, taking the highest calculation of their numbers; and no spot in the world can be pointed out which combines, in a more remarkable manner, the conditions of a commanding height, and a plain, in every part of which the sights and sounds described in Exodus would reach an assembled multitude of more than 2,000,000 souls."

Palmer says: "This plain more than satisfies the condition." And Sir Henry James concurs in these opinions.

Durbin, who ascended to the top and took in the whole at one view, says: "One glance was enough. We were satisfied that here, and here only, could the wondrous displays of Sinai have been visible to the assembled hosts of Israel; that here the Lord spake with Moses; that here was the mount that trembled and smoked in the presence of its manifested Creator. I read the passage in Exodus. We felt its truth, and could almost see the lightnings, and hear the thunders, and the 'trumpet waxing loud.'"

Wilson says: "We have here a mountain summit overlooking a plain, which, with its branches, contains 4,293,000 square yards, in full view of the mount, without including the mountain slopes on which large numbers of the people could have stood."

Bartlett adds: "While affording this magnificent amphitheater at its very foot, and while so facile of ascent, it rises sharp, grand and absolutely separate and solitary, a unique temple not made with hands, fit resting place for the glory of the sole Jehovah."

Says Palmer: "It rises so abruptly from the plain that you may, literally, stand under it, and touch its base. And at the base (300 yards distant) of the bluff is a long semi-circular mound, from which a select congregation of elders might obtain a nearer view of the mountain."

And Stanley says: "The cliff, rising like a huge altar in front of the whole congregation, and visible against the sky in lonely grandeur from end to end of the whole plain, is the very image of the 'mount that might be touched,' and from which the voice of God might be heard far and wide over the stillness of the plain below."

Much more might be given from travelers who have visited the spot; but enough has been quoted to demonstrate to all who will give attention to it, that the real place of the encampment of this great host has been designated. The evidence to those on the spot is overwhelming. And we who cannot visit it, and examine for ourselves, must be satisfied with the united testimony of those who have. The whole region has been very carefully explored and mapped, and described, so that nothing farther remains to be examined. The evidence is satisfactory, "And let all the people say Amen."

Oberlin, O.

WORLDLY CONFORMITY.

It is sad to contemplate the fact that so many professing Christians, for one reason or another, are led into a yielding of principle in such matters. Certainly there is nothing more expressly contrary to the very words of Scripture than conformity to the world. We are expressly told to come out and be separate from it, as the enemy of our Saviour, and the choicest servant of Satan. We are cautioned against its friendship, as being enmity against God. Our Saviour told us that as it had hated him, it would surely hate us, and it is impossible to serve both God and mammon. Yet men go on striving to find out a way in which they can take at least some part in the world's pleasures, without the loss of their souls.

The story of Solomon, which has just been studied in our Sunday-schools, is without moral, if it does not go to prove that despite his wisdom, his spiritual interests suffered from the friendship and admiration of the world. And he thinks far too well of himself who hopes that his ability and discretion will enable him to succeed where Solomon failed.

The Lord's people have always been called to separation from the world, and to expect anything else in any age of the world is quite futile. The spiritually enlightened man will say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ," and will recognize the fact that at his conversion an insurmountable wall was raised between him and the world. Then and there he became virtually dead to the world and its pleasures, for his old nature was crucified with Christ. Henceforth he is alive only to spiritual things. To hanker after earthly things is the beginning of a spiritual decline.

While the truth we have thus briefly alluded to will be acknowledged by many, they will say, "but what are we to do about our children? They do not share our feelings or our experiences. They have not yet been awakened to a sense of spiritual need—shall we interfere with their enjoyment of pleasures which are as innocent as any of those which they indulge in as unregenerate persons?"

This question is generally regarded as disposing of the question, and as being practically unanswerable. But a moment's reflection will prove that this is not the case. We endeavor to fit our children for the earthly sphere we expect them to fill. To this end we shape every effort, and frame all our arrangements. We do not expect them to become burglars, we therefore do not give them instruction in the art of house-breaking, and as we have no desire that their future associates shall be among jail birds, we use every exertion to keep them from contact with evil companions. Yet in spite of every precaution against contamination, the children of respectable parents here and there fall into the most open and awfully vicious practices.

There would seem to be no reason why we should not pursue a similar course in spiritual things. If children are kept from the fashionable world with which we ourselves think it wrong to come in contact, shall we be guilty of error? If we refuse to fit them for fashionable society, if we seek to find occupation and friends for them among God's children, are we to blame if when they come to years of independence, they refuse to walk in the path we have desired them to pursue? We cannot make them Christians. Very true. But is that any reason we should do what we can to make worldlings of them because that is in our power? The question is a most grave and serious one. It is one which is worthy of most prayerful consideration. But we believe it is one which the Christian who desires to be like Christ, and to decide as he would have done, will not be permitted to grapple with unassisted, or allowed to come to an unsatisfactory conclusion.—Episcopal Recorder.

A CHURCH MEMBER'S SOLILOQUY AND RESOLVES.

I am a member of the church. The church is mine as much as it is anybody's. Do I use it and treat it as if it were my church? The church needs me; and I certainly need the church. Besides I have obligations. I have taken solemn vows toward the church. What is my duty? Have I tried to know what it is?

What would I have been to-day but for the blessed influences of the church? Ought I not to do what I can to maintain an institution that has done so much for me? Will proper gratitude allow me to do less?

I am resolved what to do:

1. I will reckon up how the Lord has prospered me. I will count up the blessings of the church to me.

2. I will set apart and dedicate a share of my income to Christ and the church.

3. I will make the Lord's claim upon me the first, as he hath taught me to do.

4. I will not longer give to the Lord's work mere dribblets left after I have spent my money for everything else. I will first give a reasonable share to the Lord and then live more frugally within the means left. A Jew gave one-tenth from his income. I am a Christian. Is a Jew better than a Christian?

5. I will cease waiting to be prompted to my religious duties by others. I know my duty. I can and will find a way to do it of myself—cheerfully, as unto the Lord.

6. I will not be one constantly needing to be nursed and cared for in the church hospital. It is time I got out of my bed of ease and dependence, and went to work for others weaker than I, and I am resolved by God's help to do it. My example and influence shall henceforth be a help and not a drag on the church.—Selected.

TRUE TO HIS MOTHER.

"Good-bye, little mother," said Harry Carter, a tall, fine-looking fisherman, as he folded in a close embrace the woman who had taught his infant lips to lisp the word "mother," and who now was nearing the end of life's pathway.

Mrs. Carter had, all her life, lived on the banks of the beautiful river that could be seen from the open door. Out of a large family, all of her sons had been fishermen, and all of her daughters had married men who followed the same calling. Henry, the youngest of the family, was the only one who had wished to go out into the world, beyond the mouth of their busy river, on to the stormy and restless ocean. Before, however, these thoughts and wishes were formed into a definite plan, he had encountered a pair of bright, laughing eyes that had held him captive where he was, and the little home he made for himself, with those same bright eyes by his side, became the dearest spot on earth to him.

Now those eyes were closed in death, the little home was a home no longer, and once more the desire had come to try a more extended trip on the bosom of the ocean; and with this desire had come the opportunity; for a large vessel had entered the river in distress for a sailor to supply the place of one who had just died. Henry at once presented himself before the captain, who, liking his looks, engaged him, and now the time for leaving had come, and he had only a moment in which to say a word of farewell to his aged mother.

"My son," said the old lady, "a sailor's life is full of temptations. What safeguard are you taking with you?"

"The little Testament you gave me when a boy, the only letter my wife ever wrote me, and in my heart love for you, for my departed wife, and for Him who gave me such priceless blessings."

A few words more of tender farewell and mother and son were parted—she, in the solitude of her room, to offer up a prayer for him who was about to enter a life of danger, hardship and temptation; he to appear before the captain of the vessel that was even then awaiting him.

It was not long before Henry Carter became convinced that the life he had chosen suited him. He had no fears of death, and in the wildest storm, as in the most intense calm, he went about his duties in a quiet, cheerful way that won the respect of those about him.

The captain of the vessel was a man who, so long as everything went as he wished, was kind and indulgent to his crew; but when a storm overtook him, and more than usual care and exertion were needed to manage the vessel, he seemed to be completely transformed, cursing and swearing at those around him in a way that made Henry shudder. It was one of the things to which he could not make up his mind to listen, and one day, after a more than usually violent storm, he sought the captain, and quietly informed him that when they next landed he must find some one to take his place.

"Tired of the life already?" said the captain.

"No," was the reply, "I like it better than I thought I should."

"You do not like the vessel, then?"

"Oh, yes; she is much more to my liking, too, than I expected."

"Then the fault must be in me, your captain?"

Henry did not reply, and was asked again:

"Well, what is it?"

"I have only one fault to find with you as my superior officer. I have discovered that you do not speak with respect of your own Master, and it is only good servants who make good masters."

The captain sprang to his feet, and with a horrible oath demanded:

"How dare you speak so to me? How dare you call me a servant? I am owner and master of my vessel."

Quietly, and in a tone and manner that had a certain amount of solemnity in them, Henry said:

"But who is Master of the waves on which your vessel rides, of the winds that toss it about as you would a feather? Who is Master of the storms that make you tremble for its safety, of the thunder and lightning of the earth on which you live and have your being? It is One" pointing upward—"who has said, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.'"

For a moment the two men looked at each other, and then they parted without a word. For three days the vessel went on her way without any sight of land, but on the fourth an outline appeared on the horizon, that broadened and widened as they approached, until unmistakable signs of active life were visible. Then Henry Carter was summoned to the presence of the captain, who directed his attention to a square piece of pasteboard on the wall, on which were painted in large letters the words that had been so solemnly repeated only a few days before: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

"Do you think," said the captain, "that with that ever before a man who earnestly wishes to live up to it, he might in time become a good servant?"

"Not in his own strength, but with the aid of Him who gave the command, he might."

"Would you be willing to continue in the service of a man who sought that aid, and who was endeavoring to make a good servant as well as a good master?"

Henry Carter looked his companion in the face a moment, a look that was understood as well as words, and the captain held out his hand, and taking that of the sailor in a hearty grasp, said:

"You are, from the time we reach land, the mate of this vessel; but, as you look to me for orders regarding it, so I shall look to you for help in the guidance of my own life; and as you will be the instrument in God's hand for the saving of my soul, so we together will work for those around us. Your words the other day have carried me back to the days of my boyhood, and you, who have a mother, know what that means."

It was not long before the sailors found that not only had the captain given up the use of profane language, but that he expected it to be given up by those about him. Nor was it all effected suddenly, but gradually, by example and by a word in season here and there, that did much for the saving of souls and the glory of God.—Selected.

TEMPERANCE.

THE IOWA EXPERIMENT.

[From the Century.]

"How is prohibition working in your State?" is the question oftenest asked the Iowa man abroad. The inquirer, as he listens to the story his question invites, usually wears upon his face a peculiar expression which translated into words would read "I acquit this man of intent to mislead, but my private opinion is, he's romancing." A rather skeptical acquaintance of mine in the East recently said to me, "Your story of empty jails, flourishing schools, and homes of thrift and comfort that were not there before, sounds like one of Washington Gladden's fascinating dreams of an ideal 'Christian League,' but don't you think you'd find it rather difficult to verify your statements with facts and figures drawn from official sources?"

Leaving to others the picturesque features of the subject, let me lay before the readers of the Century a few suggestive "facts and figures drawn from official sources"—some of the results of an investigation suggested by my practical friend's inquiry.

Permit me to say, in passing, that Iowa, far from being "a commonwealth of temperance cranks," as an Eastern journal has it, is a commonwealth of "plain people"—to borrow a phrase from Lincoln; people who do their own thinking, and have their own way of doing, and are daring enough to believe that some things can be done which the wisdom of the conservative East pronounces impossible. Taking advantage of the fact that we have no great centers of population to dictate our policies and load us down, we of Iowa have applied to the State as a whole the identical theory for handling the social evil known as the saloon which Georgia and Illinois apply to counties, and which New York applies to townships; namely, the theory that the majority shall determine whether the evil shall be tolerated and controlled, or prohibited. At a non-partisan election held in the summer of 1882, the question of prohibition vs. toleration was submitted to the people, and the voters of Iowa, by thirty thousand majority, declared they had no longer any use for the saloon. But the constitutional amendment which then carried had not been properly submitted, and was by our Supreme Court declared invalid. A disappointed majority then turned to the State legislature for relief, and in the spring of 1884 a prohibitory law was passed. The legislature of 1886 and 1888 sustained the law and strengthened it by amendments. Thus steadfastly have the people sustained the prohibition, anti-toleration method of handling the saloon.

"But you will not deny the fact that there have been saloons in Iowa during all these years of prohibition? You cannot truthfully say there are no saloons in your State at the present time?"

The outlawed saloon does still linger on our borders; still maintains a precarious, characterless, hole-in-the-wall existence in many of our cities; but its social and political prestige is gone, and in at least 70 of the 99 counties of the State there cannot be found an open saloon.

Seven years have elapsed since the voters of Iowa formerly withdrew their sanction from the saloon. Five years have passed since the voters of Iowa, through their representatives, outlawed the saloon. Is there anything in the present situation to warrant a return to the toleration policy? Let us turn to the figures and see what they say on the subject.

I am indebted to Hon. Frank D. Jackson, Secretary of State, for advance sheets of the "Official Register of Iowa" for 1889. From this source, and by comparison with reports of other years, I discover that the total expense of the counties of Iowa, "on account of criminal prosecutions," was in 1882, the year in which the prohibitory amendment carried, $401,413.18. In 1883 the total expense of criminal prosecutions was reduced to $361,173.78. In 1884, Presidential year, there was a slight increase in criminal expenses. In 1885 and 1886, years marked by the return of the outlawed saloon and a consequent reign of lawlessness, there was a large increase, the total in the year last named being $421,024.31. In 1887, the year following the passage of the Clark (enforcement) law, the criminal expenses were reduced to $282,877.66; and in 1888 they aggregated $300,424.06 for ten months.

Compare the record of "leading crimes" in 1888 with the same in 1882. In 1888 there were 94 convictions for assault, 13 for breaking and entering, 47 for burglary, 13 for forgery, 13 for gambling, 42 for keeping a gambling-house, 148 for larceny, 9 for murder, 6 for manslaughter, 190 for keeping a nuisance, 59 for selling intoxicating liquors; total, 634. In 1882 there were 188 convictions for assault, 18 for breaking and entering, 78 for burglary, 30 for forgery, 14 for gambling, 41 for keeping a gambling-house, 215 for larceny, 14 for murder, 1 for manslaughter, 658 for keeping a nuisance, 25 for unlawfully selling intoxicants; total, 1,282—more than double that of 1888.

A few weeks ago I met Warden Barr, of the Anamosa Penitentiary, on his way to Fort Madison with a car-load of prisoners, under orders from Governor Larrabee to take these men from the State quarries to the State shops. I learned that the transfer was ordered in response to a loud call from Warden Crossler, of the Fort Madison Penitentiary, for more hands to enable him to comply with certain contracts for labor into which the State had entered with certain manufacturers. The circumstance led me to write Governor Larrabee for information as to the comparative number of prisoners in our penitentiaries this year and in previous years. From our chief executive I learn that the monthly average of prisoners in the two penitentiaries in 1886 was 696; in 1887 it was 667, and in 1888 it was 607. On the last day of September, 1888, the end of the fiscal year, there was but 535 prisoners in both penitentiaries. I am informed by those who have investigated the subject that no other State in the Union, unless it is Vermont, has so small a percentage of convicts as has Iowa at the present time.

But, going back to the counties, what say our judges? Here is a small pamphlet containing the answers of forty-one district and superior-court judges to a number of questions put to them by Governor Larrabee, one of the inquiries being as to the expediency of repealing the prohibitory law. I find that of the forty-one, 4 favored repeal, 9 were non-committal, and 28 were of the opinion that the law should stay. Let me quote several specially significant passages from these letters.

Judge Traverse, Bloomfield: "My experience is that, wherever saloons are closed, crime is diminished."

Judge Harvey, Leon: "It has reduced crime at least one-half, and the criminal expenses in like ratio."

Judge Lewis, Sioux City: "The law is as well enforced as any other, and has decreased criminal expenses at least two-thirds."

Judge Deemer, Red Oak: "In many of the counties the jail is getting to be almost an unnecessary building, and in the last three counties I visited there was not an occupant."

Judge Carson, Council Bluffs: "When in the senate I favored local option, but I am now satisfied the statute should stand."

Judge Thornell, Sidney: "I should regard its repeal as a calamity."

Judge Bank, Keokuk: "This was the first and only term in my recollection that there was no criminal business transacted in court."

Judge Wilson, Creston: "I was not in favor of the law, thinking that high license would work better. I have carefully watched its workings, and am convinced that I was wrong."

Judge Wakefield, Sioux City: "As the saloons were driven out, other business came in to occupy the vacant places."

Judge Wilkinson, Winterset: "Crime and criminal expenses have been lessened."

Judge Johnson, Oskaloosa: "The effect of the prohibitory law has been to reduce very materially crime and criminal expenses in this district."

Judge Kavanaugh, Des Moines: "It has decreased crime over 50 per cent and added largely to individual happiness."

Judge Granger, Waukon (now of the Supreme Bench): "The closing of the front door of the saloon, whereby it is destroyed as a place of social resort, has canceled nine-tenths of the drunkenness.... Our grand juries have nothing comparatively to do.... Our criminal expenses since the closing of the saloons have been comparatively nominal."

But roving correspondents for journals in the large cities about us inform their readers that prohibition is killing, or has killed, Iowa. Let us see for ourselves.

The census of 1880 gave our State a population of 1,624,615. The State census of 1885 put the population at 1,753,980—an increase of 129,365. The fact that there has been a decided increase in population since the last census (in 1885) is shown by comparison of the vote of 1884 with that of 1888. The total vote of Iowa in 1884 was 377,153, while that of 1888 was 404,130; an increase of 26,977—an estimated increase of 134,885 in four years.

Iowa years ago won, and has never since lost, the honor of having less illiteracy in proportion to population than any other State in the Union. But note the educational progress she has made during these three six of prohibition. In 1883 there were 11,789 school-houses in Iowa; in 1884, 11,975; in 1885, 12,285; in 1886, 12,444. The value of these school-houses was, in 1883, $10,473,147; in 1886, $11,360,472. State Superintendent Sabin's report to the last Iowa legislature begins thus: "It is gratifying to be able to report a most satisfactory and prosperous condition of education throughout the State. The past two years have been years of increased interest, activity, and growth.... The number of school-houses has been increased by about 500, and their aggregate value by more than $550,000. The number of teachers is increased by about 500, while our school population is 10,000 greater than the same as reported two years ago."

Another index of Iowa's increasing prosperity is the showing made by our savings-banks. The reports made to our Auditor of State show that the "total assets and liabilities" of Iowa's savings-banks were, in 1883, $8,419,739.83; in 1885, $9,618,866.97; in 1887, $12,666,347.72. Auditor Lyons informs me that on June 30, 1888, the total assets, etc., of the savings-banks had increased to $14,625,024.84. These figures show that since the adoption of prohibition the resources of these depositories of the poor man's surplus earnings have increased over six million dollars, or over 73 per cent.—Johnson Brigham.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. John's sermon to the Pharisees, vs. 7-9. This language to the religious elite of the nation was a harsh but necessary way of stirring up their torpid consciences, so that the earnest appeal which followed might have some chance to take effect. It will be found as we go on that he addressed himself very differently to the sincere inquirers. The same class are in the church to-day, "having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof," affecting great regard for the letter of the law, but ignoring entirely its spiritual meaning. "The deeds of their father" such may be expected to "do." They had the same venom, the same craft, the same capacity to blight every beginning of religious life with the poison of false doctrine. John's stern question was meant to probe and lay bare their hypocrisy. They did not seek him through any conviction of soul need. They were swayed by the popular curiosity, tinged, doubtless, with some jealousy. They wanted to know what this strange preacher could have to say on subjects to which they themselves claimed to possess the only key of knowledge. As children of Abraham they could not conceive of themselves as needing to repent like any common Gentile. Religious ancestry is a great blessing, but it may also be a great curse if it leads us to be self-righteous. We may have more of the spirit of the Pharisee than we think, and need to be told, like them, that as God was able, out of the very stones, to raise up children unto Abraham; so if native-born Americans turn aside from the principles of their fathers, God can raise up true children of those Puritan worthies out of the most despised aliens that land on our shores. The time is coming when the axe will be laid to the root of every corrupt institution in our land. The lodge, the saloon, Romanism,—all these poison-bearing trees will be hewn down and cast into the fire of divine vengeance; and it behooves every one who is sheltering himself under their shadow to accept the warning, and by timely repentance flee to the only source of safety.

2. Practical preaching, vs. 10-14. In the Acts of the Apostles we read how Paul found at Ephesus many years after some of John's disciples. From this and other incidents we can see that the fruits of his preaching were broadcast as well as permanent; that he was not a mere sensational preacher, however startling and unconventional his methods, but set in motion a vast tidal wave of religious feeling that penetrated to every part of the nation. His preaching was eminently practical; so much so that it cost him his life. He does not lash the sins of another country or another age. He did not preach against the sin of Herod to people who would have joined him in condemning it, but he goes right into Herod's court and preaches direct to the royal transgressor, careless of consequences. There are plenty of ministers who will preach against the corruptions of Rome when there are no Romanists to hear them, or against the saloon when none in their congregations buy or sell liquor; who would shrink from preaching to a rich manufacturer about his duty to his employes, or to lodgemen about the sin of rash oaths and Christless worships. He warns the people who inquire what they shall do against the same sins that beset people now. Our great national sins, which foster and keep alive so many others, and especially the legalized abomination of the liquor traffic, are love of money and love of office,—in brief, selfishness looking out for number one, and letting patriotism, humanity and religion go to the wall.

3. The baptism of Christ, vs. 15-17, 21, 22. We can never attain so high a spiritual state as to be lifted above the need of obedience, even when it pertains to outward ceremonies, if it be something God has commanded. The sinless Christ did not need the baptism of water, yet it was in that act the Spirit descended upon him. Being made like unto his brethren he must submit to the same requirements, and receive the spiritual anointing for his great work through the same channel. The most sanctified do not need less, but more to attend on the means of grace. Although it be not given to us to hear an audible voice from heaven, yet if we accept Christ and his full salvation, we become sons and daughters of the Almighty, and even in us he can say, "I am well pleased."

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELCUBET'S QUARTERLY.

JOHN'S REPROOF OF HEROD.—It is uncertain whether John administered the reproof in private, or whether it was a public denunciation of the crime. But (1) the crime was public, and John could not effectively denounce the sins of the people if he let sins in high places go unrebuked. (2) Unrebuked crime in high places teaches, indorses, and propagates crime among the people. It tends to make it fashionable and safe. (3) Herod's crime was a public insult to the law of God, to the Jewish nation. (4) It was bringing untold evils upon the people. Aretas, indignant at the affront Herod put upon him, had declared war; and at the very time of John's reproof, preparations for war were actively going on. John sought to stop the flood of horrors the war would roll upon the people. (5) John took his life in his hand when he, a poor, humble Jew, reproved the crimes of a reckless tyrant. But this was a test and proof of his sincerity, and gave great power to his preaching.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The College church at Wheaton has been depending upon supplies, generally from their own membership, for two months since Rev. A. J. Chittenden went to Grand View, Tenn. Their committee, at the very unanimous desire of the church, have communicated with Rev. A. Ethridge of Marsailles, Ill., to secure his services as pastor. Mr. Ethridge, though willing to accept the invitation, cannot at present change because of domestic engagements. The church, therefore, on Thursday evening last voted to engage Rev. Dr. S. H. Adams, a retired M. E. minister, well known in Chicago and Northern Illinois, until July 1st.

—The members of the Warren Avenue Baptist church, Boston, gave a farewell reception to their retiring pastor, Rev. O. P. Gifford, Jan. 2nd, and presented him with handsome gifts. The Brookline church, where Mr. Gifford has gone, gave him an enthusiastic reception of welcome. Dr. Gifford's eloquent and forcible speech in the Boston conference seems not to have destroyed his influence.

—Major Whittle has just closed a very successful mission in Stratford, England. He is one of the workers whom the Lord honors with abundant success.

—Rev. David Smith, a colored Methodist minister of Xenia, Ohio, and who formerly labored in the vicinity of Pittsburgh and Washington, Pa., died lately at the age of 106 years.

—The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church has over 130,000 members.

—The Theological Record reports the death of ninety-eight ministers of the Presbyterian church, North, during the past year.

—There are 276 College Young Men's Christian Associations in this country, with a membership of 17,125.

—The number of Lutheran communicants in the United States and Canada is given by the secretaries of the General Council as 1,955,000.

—The Committees on Union of the Reformed Presbyterian churches met in Pittsburgh last week. At the same time some of the brethren of the United Presbyterian church met with them to consult informally and unofficially in regard to calling a general convention to consider the question of union, as proposed by the Reformed Presbyterian church last summer.

—During the past year the agents of the Women's Bible Readers' Society have made 26,382 visits, held 13,894 religious exercises, distributed 61,116 books, papers and tracts, induced 208 persons to attend church, and 252 to attend Sabbath-school, found situations and homes for 48 persons, and secured 74 temperance pledges. Their distributions included $989.35, 399 tons of coal, 3,806 garments, and groceries to the amount of $92.80.

—One of the "Talks with Edison," which George Parsons Lathrop reports in Harper's for February, refers to the inventor's belief in an intelligent Creator, a personal God. Mr. Edison is quoted as saying, "The existence of such a God can, to my mind, almost be proved from chemistry."

—The annual report of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions gives the following statistics of the Press in Syria: The issues of the Beirut Press are found wherever there is any call for Arabic literature in the Eastern world. Arabic literature has been enriched in the year 1888 by nearly 29,000,000 pages, issued by the Mission Press. Of this vast number, 18,045,000 have been pages of Scripture. The number of volumes published is 106,900, of which 58,000 are copies of the Word of God.

—Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson is successfully prosecuting his work of stimulating interest in missions among the Scotch and English churches. This month he has been laboring principally in London. Last month was given to the west of Scotland, and arrangements are making for meetings in the northern, middle and southern counties of Scotland during the months of February and March. The Christian, speaking of the work already done, says: "Dr. Pierson's addresses were everywhere characterized by most intimate knowledge of the missionary work of the world, heart-moving appeals for increased devotion to the service of the Lord, and remarkable spiritual freshness and power."

—The American Board of Foreign Missions has received during the past year from donations $394,994, which is a gain of $426 on last year; from legacies, $153,653, an advance of $7,301 upon last year. These gifts, with the income derived from the Sweet legacy and from permanent funds, will bring the income of the Board for the year up to about $650,000.

—More than sixty years ago the first churches of Disciples of Christ were planted in Ohio. New churches have been established annually to the present date, so that the whole number reaches 467 churches, with a membership of 47,500. The Ohio Christian Missionary Society has assisted in planting 200 churches.

IN BRIEF.

One scarcely thinks of coral as growing under the ice-swept and foggy seas of the Newfoundland banks. Yet on the eastern slope of Banquereau is an area of bottom, several miles in extent, so covered with a growth of coral that trawls set upon it are rarely recovered. The fishermen call it the "stone fence," and avoid it as far as possible.

Dr. Marey of Paris has succeeded in measuring the motive power of the human body as developed in every movement. As one of the results of his studies he shows that something is gained in the power of walking by quickening the pace from forty to seventy-five steps per minute. But the latter number is the extreme limit; with a greater number of steps power would be lost instead of gained.

The builders tell a rather interesting story of a Buffalo capitalist, who was pretty summarily taken down for trying to set himself up as the end of all things in whatever he undertook. No matter what was on foot, if he went into it, he must have all the say and nobody else was allowed even a side remark. Not long ago he built a fine brick house. In this undertaking, as in all others, he was boss and all hands, dictating to builders, architects and all without the slightest hesitation. At last they grew very tired of the browbeating they had to stand, and let him have his way, whether it was right or wrong. The house was finished, and shortly afterward the owner set about building furnace fires to test his heating apparatus, when behold, there wasn't a chimney in the house!

The Report on Moral Training in the Primary Schools of France presented to the Paris Exhibition in the name of the Minister of Public Instruction, is an important document, as it deals with the question: "Can there be proper moral training under a system which completely secularizes education?" The report was prepared by M. Lichtenberger, Dean of the Protestant Faculty of Paris, after a careful inquiry in all parts of the country. While holding as beyond question the principle of religious neutrality for government schools, M. Lichtenberger finds the secular system of France far from efficient in moral training. The great fundamental principles of morality are not taught, and the "masters do not care to give moral lessons because the children are not interested in abstractions and grow dull and listless over them." The conclusion seems to be that the teaching of morality in complete separation from the life, vigor and refreshing personality of religion is so sapless, dry and dead that it interests neither teacher nor pupil.—Advance.

Andrew Carnegie lately completed the building of a mill at Braddock, one of the suburbs of Pittsburgh, expressly intended for the manufacture of heavy government work connected with ship building. There is not a single bit of apparatus in it but what is the largest of its kind in the world. The shears, which snap a bar of iron in two as though it were tissue paper, exceed anything in size that has ever been known by the sons of Vulcan. The lathes are greater, the rolls are longer and heavier than anything the remainder of the country can show, and even the steam boilers are the largest ever made by the hand of man. In the Black Diamond steel works, Thirtieth street, Pittsburgh, there is the largest steam hammer in the United States. The blow of fifty tons, which it strikes every second of time that it is in operation, shakes the earth for two squares around the mill, yet it is so easily controlled, and so nicely adjusted, that the hammerman has placed on the anvil block beneath it a delicate wine glass containing an egg, and, turning on the steam full force, would let the ponderous weight above fall until at a certain distance, and then shut the steam off. In this way the hammer has been kept for several minutes gently tapping the glass and egg without breaking them.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has been for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. L. PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason. A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

HOME AND HEALTH.

COLD FEET.

Keep the feet in a warm bath until they are thoroughly heated through and through. Remove and give them a dash of water as cool as can be used without discomfort, wipe dry and rub thoroughly with a brush or crash towel. This course persisted in will cure cold feet. The arteries and veins in the feet contract from various causes, and hence the feet become cold. Hot water baths used continuously enlarge the blood vessels until they will remain large enough to keep the feet warm, but they must not be crowded into a tight boot or be left unprotected in thin shoes and low slippers. We knew a lady who had suffered tortures with cold feet from childhood, who used hot foot-baths to relieve sick headache, and her head and her feet were alike relieved, and permanently.

THE FOOT'S ANATOMY.

A skillful anatomist says that if we wore shoes day and night our feet would become permanently and hopelessly diseased, but the airing and change they get while we sleep keep them in tolerable condition.

"The human foot is merely a hand modified for a base of structure to support the body." It is longer and thicker and narrower than the hand. Its solid parts are firmer than the corresponding parts of the hand; the movable parts less movable than those of the hand. The foot has two arches; one from front to rear composed of eight bones, and another from side to side composed of four. These arches, on account of the cartilages interposed between the segments that compose them, are flexible and give elasticity to the step and gracefulness to the gait. The largest bone in the long arch of the foot is the heel bone, and to this is attached the largest tendon in the body. In this tendon the three muscles which compose the calf of the leg, and which are of the greatest value to us in the act of walking, unite.

The more nearly the shoe approaches the form of the foot the easier it will be to walk in. High heels are nothing but an injury, not to the foot alone, but to the whole body. They flex the three muscles in the calf of the leg that give erectness of the body, throw the weight of the body on to the ball of the foot, throw the knees forward, and put the whole mechanism out of poise. This is well understood by lovers of field sports and athletics, whose shoes have hardly any heels at all.

The earliest form of foot cover was the simple sandal, secured to the foot by thongs, and often by a button, coming between the first and second toes. The material used for shoes and sandals is various, chiefly the skins of animals. Wooden shoes are much worn in Europe, and are becoming common in this country. The Japanese wear sandals of straw, and South Americans, in some localities, sandals of plaited hemp. The early Greeks went barefoot, or wore simple sandals: the Romans wore buskins, similar to the moccasins of the American Indians.

The skillful shoemaker or shoe-fitter should understand the anatomy of the foot as well as the art of making shoes, and he should be able to fit each shoe to the foot that is to wear it, but probably not one shoemaker in a million ever dissected a human foot with a view to learning how shoes should be made.

We never think of working with our hands when they are gloved, and all we ask of a glove is that it neatly fit the hand when at rest. But we never think of walking any distance in unshod feet, and what we want of shoes is not covering only, but aid in locomotion. Many a shoe is comfortable enough when one is sitting still that becomes excruciating when one walks in it. Room is not given for the play of the various muscles of the foot, the arches are pressed out of shape, the circulation is obstructed, and the exercise of walking, which should be delightful, becomes intolerable, and the gait, which should become graceful and easy becomes limping and awkward.

shaped feet one sees when traveling on the horse-cars and crossing the ferries, where the feet of wayfarers are exposed to view, there is a great deal of suffering that is not much talked about, and is probably considered incurable. But it might all or nearly all have been prevented but for ill-fitting shoes. And a great deal of this suffering might be escaped if misshapen feet were provided with shoes fitted to them and conformed to their present necessities.—N. Y. Advocate.

The claim a wholesale grocery house of St. Louis recently made against the South Shore Railroad brought to light the fact that, at least in some quarters, dirt, under the name of terra alba, is being used in candy to an almost incredible extent. It was a half dozen barrels of lozenges made by a Boston house that had been shipped, the claim being that they had been damaged in transit. The railroad company sent samples of the lozenges to a chemist, who discovered them to consist "entirely of terra alba bound together with a little gelatine or gum." Investigation showed them to yet require dipping in sirups flavored with peppermint, wintergreen, sassafras, and the like, before being ready for infantile consumption. Now, terra alba is a mineral utterly insoluble in the saliva or gastric juice—a dangerous compound to put within even a healthy stomach; and when the railroad company learned this they refused to pay any damages, and the grocery house, fearing exposure, ceased to press the claim. The Board of Trade Journal of Portland, Me., says that 6,000 tons of terra alba were recently imported through the port of New York alone.

The True Way To Reach Boils

TO CURE Eczema, Pimples, and Eruptive Diseases of all kinds is to purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Until the blood is cleansed, there can be no permanent relief from these troubles.

"Four years ago I was severely afflicted with salt-rheum, the itching being so incessant as to seriously interfere with sleep. Painful scrofulous sores appeared on my neck and the upper part of my arms, and from there the humor went to my eyes. My appetite being poor, my health rapidly failed. I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished ten bottles I regained my appetite, improved greatly in strength, and was permanently cured of the salt-rheum and scrofula. I consider that what I spent for this medicine was well invested. The Sarsaparilla has indeed done me incalculable good."—Mrs. Caroline A. Garland, Deerfield, N. H., (formerly of Lowell, Mass.).

"My little niece was afflicted with a severe cutaneous disease, which broke out at intervals and resisted treatment. At last, we tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This acted like magic. She is now entirely cured and has been in perfect health for several months."—Margaret Peyston, Clarendon, Ark.

"For a long time I was afflicted with salt-rheum, and could find nothing to relieve me. A friend recommended

And Carbuncles, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine produces such immediate and salutary results.

C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., was almost literally covered with boils and carbuncles. These all disappeared as the result of using only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This proves that the true way to reach these troubles is through the blood. "It is now over six years," writes Mr. Murray, "since I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I have not had a pimple, nor boil, nor a sign of one in all that time."

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. Another effect of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a number of carbuncles on my neck and back, with swellings in my armpits, and was tormented with pain almost beyond endurance. All means of relief to which I resorted failed until I began to take Ayer's Sar-

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

This deeply interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

FARM NOTES.

A COW AND HER FIRST CALF.

Cows are creatures of habit. With their first calf everything is new and strange to them, and they readily submit to be milked, and think it all right; but suffer them to run with a calf the first season and a habit is established that they will hardly forget in a lifetime. If they ever after submit to be milked quietly it is evidently under protest. But there is a greater objection than this—the calf running with the cow draws the milk every hour or two, so that the milk vessels are not distended with milk, though the quantity secreted in a given time may be large. And yet this is the natural time to distend the milk ducts and expand the udder to a good capacity for holding milk. When, with the next calf, you require the milk to be retained for twelve hours, the udder becomes hard and painful and the milk leaks from the teats, or, more likely, nature accommodates the quantity of the milk secreted to the capacity to retain it, and the cow becomes permanently a small milker. Much of the future character of the cow, therefore, depends on the treatment with her first calf.

HOW HORSES SHOULD BE FED.

Bearing in mind that the stomach of a horse is small in proportion to the size of his frame, he requires feeding often, and, though three times a day is sufficient, four times is better. Unlike human beings, horses should drink before they eat, because, owing to the conformation of the horse, water does not remain in the stomach, but passes through into a large intestine called the cecum. If a horse be fed first, the water passing through the stomach would be likely to carry with it particles of food, and thus bring about colic. Whatever a groom may say, let a horse drink just as much as he likes. If he be watered four times a day he will never take very much, or too much. A horse, it must be remembered, is fed on dry food, and this, with the strong work done, produces a feverishness which a sufficiency of water tends to allay.—The American Breeder.

AN "OFF-YEAR" FOR POTATOES.

In many parts of the country the potato crop was a sad failure, particularly in the immediate vicinity of New York. The heretofore profitable acres of New Jersey and Long Island—where as much work and money are expended on this crop as on most of the vegetables nominally requiring higher culture—the blight swept like a besom over the fields and the harvest was cut down to comparatively low figures. Last spring a publishing house, in conjunction with the leading fertilizer manufacturers, offered large money prizes for the best yields of various farm crops. The potatoes only concern us, as being somewhat of a garden product. In this contest many good yields were reported, the largest and the winner of $1,100 prize money, being that of Charles B. Coy of Aroostook Co., Maine, who produced 738 bushels on a single measured acre of land. As to soil and culture, the land was fairly fertile, and the culture most thorough throughout the season. Other noteworthy results in this trial are reported from Western New York 669 bushels, Maine 537, Minnesota 532, Maine 523, and 54 other yields above 200 bushels per acre, reported all the way from Pennsylvania to California. It is noticeable that the largest yield on stable manures, either alone or in connection with fertilizers, was 491 bushels; therefore, it is self-evident that high grade chemical fertilizers are, by all odds, the most efficacious in crop producing capacity. It would be interesting to have a statement of the cost and comparative market value, per bushel, of each of these competing crops.—American Gardener.

$1,000.00 TO BE GIVEN AWAY.—The Orange County Farmer says: "At the request of President Wood of the New York State Society, the editor of the Farmer judged the exhibit of vegetables under the charge of James Vick, Seedsman, of Rochester, N. Y. This firm of-in the direction of the nearest drug-store, is not too fast for a person to make who is troubled with any of the myriad forms of disease resulting from a torpid or deranged liver and its attendant impure blood, and is, therefore, in need of that world-famed and only guaranteed blood-purifier and liver invigorator known as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Every form of Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Disease, Eczema, Erysipelas, Salt-rheum, Tetter, scaly, crusty, itching, burning and tormenting forms of skin disease, are cured by this wonderful remedy as if by magic. Sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee of benefit or cure, or money refunded. All Scrofulous affections, as Fever-sores, White Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, Old Sores and Ulcers, yield to its wonderful curative properties. It promptly conquers Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It is a concentrated vegetable fluid extract. Dose small and pleasant to taste. Contains no alcohol, don't inebriate or manufacture topers; is free from syrup or sugar, and, therefore, don't sour or ferment in the stomach, interfering with digestion; as peculiar in its wonderful curative effects as in its composition. There is no other medicine at all like it, either in composition or effect. Therefore, don't be fooled into accepting something instead, said to be "just as good." If substitutes are "just as good," why don't their vendors guarantee them to do what they are recommended to, or refund money paid for them, as we do with all who buy "Golden Medical Discovery?" For the very good reason that such a plan of sale would bankrupt the manufacturers of any but an extraordinary remedy like the "Discovery." To purify the blood, invigorate the liver, promote digestion, and build up both flesh and strength, it is unequalled, whether for adults or children. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 OFFERED for an incurable case of Catarrh in the Head by the proprietors of DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY. SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. Only 50 cents. Sold by druggists, everywhere.

ferred $450 in prizes for the best and second best of certain varieties of the following six vegetables grown from seed purchased of them: Potatoes, Tomatoes, Celery, Cauliflower, Cabbage and Musk Melon. Almost every State in the Union was represented in the competition. The display was marvelous, and it was the most difficult task of the kind that he undertook, owing to the uniform excellence of the exhibits. This display attracted as much attention as any feature of the fair, and reflected great credit on both the originators and competitors."

This firm offers $1,000.00 in cash this year to be competed for at the Illinois State Fair. Every person growing vegetables should send 10 cents for a copy of Vick's Floral Guide, and learn the facts. It costs nothing to try.

The peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation of Hood's Sarsaparilla makes this medicine different from others and superior to them all. Prepared by C. I. Hood and Co., Lowell, Mass.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

In the estimates for expenses at the White House this year is an item of $5,000 to pay for the portrait in oil of Grover Cleveland. This is the first time such an appropriation has ever been asked of Congress.

Blanch K. Bruce, ex-Senator from Mississippi and ex-register of the treasury, was last week nominated to be recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, to succeed Trotter of Boston, the colored man who has drawn $40,000 for his services in recording real-estate transfers and mortgages during the last three years. This is the best-paying office in Washington, except that of the President of the United States.

CHICAGO.

Indictments were voted against ten leading gamblers last week. Other important developments are looked for.

The City Council have authorized the Lake Street Elevated Road Company to go on building as they have begun. Their structure is a simple but ponderous affair.

The grand jury has returned indictments against ten keepers of prominent gambling houses in the city or owners of the property where gambling is going on. Some of these men have been twice indicted. A third conviction under the statute means a fine "not less than $500 and imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than two years nor more than five years."

COUNTRY.

An amendment to the city ordinances against prize fighting, but permitting glove contests, under the management of regularly organized and chartered athletic clubs, was adopted by the New Orleans (La.) City Council Tuesday night.

English buyers are making an effort to purchase the sash and door factories of the country. Several mills throughout Missouri and Kansas have been already negotiated for.

The bill granting a charter to an alleged cigarette trust was repealed Friday by the Virginia Legislature.

In court at Philadelphia Friday, David Alexander, who attempted to kill Bishop Whitaker of the Episcopal church, pleaded guilty. The prisoner, in a speech, attacked the prelate for his alleged opposition to prohibition.

David Salzman, an educated Jew of St. Louis, has been converted to Christianity. While attending a Jewish wedding Sunday evening he was set upon and badly beaten by the father of the bride.

Six hundred foreigners landed in New York last Wednesday.

The trains which have been snow-bound in the Sierras began moving Thursday, resulting in popular demonstrations at Reno and other places.

The bottom of a portion of the town of Plains, about four miles from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., dropped out Friday, and with it three single houses and a double block, causing consternation among the tenants and excitement in the town.

By a party vote Thursday the Democrats of the Ohio Senate ousted Lampson, the Republican Lieutenant Governor elect, and decided to seat Marquis, the contestant. The case will be carried to the Supreme Court.

At New York Tuesday preparations were almost completed for the celebration of the centennial of the organization of the Supreme Court of the United States. President Harrison and Cabinet will be present, and it is thought this will be the largest gathering of judges ever held in America.

While Prof. Jess was making oxygen for a chemical experiment before a class in the high school at Lexington, Ill., the retort exploded. It was made in part of iron, pieces of which were blown through the brick walls of the building. A score of people were injured. The accident is charged to defective chemicals. It is likely that several deaths will result from it.

All of the overland trains which have been blockaded in Sierra snow-drifts arrived in San Francisco Jan. 31. The first train brought about 250,000 letters and about 1,000 pouches of papers. The usual schedule has been resumed on the Central Pacific, and two east-bound overland trains left that day.

A wreck on the Monon line at Carmel, Indiana, Monday last, is one of the worst disasters that ever occurred in the State. The list of the dead numbers seven, and twenty-seven or twenty-eight persons are injured, some of them fatally. It is believed that the deaths will finally number not less than twelve. The track spread, throwing part of the train down an embankment, where it took fire.

Seven thousand people, mostly Negroes, gathered Jan. 30 at Morgan, Ga., to witness an execution which was postponed. The crowd lingered, however, and there was much drinking. In the afternoon a riot began between the whites and blacks, caused by a drunken Negro striking a white child. Many shots were fired and one white man was fatally and three others seriously wounded. Several Negroes were wounded, but none killed.

FOREIGN.

The first mate of a steamer which arrived at New York Tuesday from Rio de Janeiro reports that in December forty sailors of a Brazilian man-of-war, who went ashore and shouted for the deposed Emperor, "had their throats cut for their enthusiasm."

There is much speculation as to the reason why Prince Bismarck, after going to Berlin to attend the closing session of the Reichstag, failed to appear. The Freisinnige Zeitung attributes his absence to irritation produced by a difference of opinion with the Emperor of the language used in the speech from the throne.

Advices from Astrabad, Russia, report that Persian Khorassan is ravaged by an intestinal disease of excessive fatality. Three thousand deaths are reported. At Noor, in Meshed, there are 100 deaths daily. Owing to the scarcity of doctors the nature of the disease is unknown. As Western Persia was ravaged with cholera through the autumn, and as thousands of people fled to the eastward in the hope to escape from the disease, it is regarded as possible that they carried it with them, and that this may account for the trouble in Khorassan.

The German government will shortly enforce stringent regulations to reduce emigration to America, even to refusing passports to men under 19 years of age.

John Charlton, member of the Canadian parliament, has moved a secret committee be appointed to inquire as to the extent of the "alarming" exodus of Canadians to the United States, as to the chief cause of such exodus, and the remedy to be applied to prevent it.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the diseases of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. The English language has another victory. It has been chosen for use in the recording of important treaty engagements between Russia and China. Few languages are more easily vanquished than these, to be sure, by our popular English. Kennan, the traveler, impresses us with his judgment of the perplexities of the Russian tongue, and the hieroglyphics of John Chinaman are more formidable than his great wall to the linguist. But let us make a beginning and look forward to the day when our comprehensive English tongue shall conquer round the world.

The late utterances of Daniel Dougherty and others of the same ilk seem to have been based, not only on the most barefaced perversion of history, but also on the assumption that the American people read nothing but novels and the daily paper. If they will only be roused thereby to a thorough study of history, especially of the period covered by D'Aubigne's great work on the Reformation, and next to that in interest and importance the writings of our own Motley, the speeches of Dougherty and Bishops Ireland and Corrigan are not to be regretted. It would be better than all the fashionable fads of the present day; better than Browning clubs, better than attending Miss Parloa's cooking classes and tasting her fearfully and wonderfully made dishes, —better even than learning Volapuk.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Milwaukee seems to have gotten into trouble with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of that city. When the building of the Y. M. C. A. was erected the brewers contributed; against this some of the W. C. T. U. members remonstrated, and as a result, it is said, they have been denied the use of any part of Y. M. C. A. hall for their meetings "because they are a political party." Some years ago the W. C. T. U. was obliged to give up its rooms in Farwell Hall, in this city, because it was alleged that the presence of the class of men who attended the noon prayer meetings of the Union interfered with the work among the better class that the Association was trying to reach. This same spirit has been shown at other places; while in some cities the two societies work harmoniously together, as they should.

Tremont Temple, Boston, opened again last week Monday for Joseph Cook, the brightest ornament of the lecture platform the world over. It is the fifteenth season of the Boston Monday lectureship, and will continue six successive weeks. His first prelude was on "Edward Bellamy's Nationalism." Mr. Cook bears down on the popular Boston novelist like a steel cruiser upon an overloaded lugger. "The four necessary driving wheels of labor reform," he says, "are self help, state help, school help, church help. But nationalism reduces all to the wheel-barrow wheel, a very difficult wheel to manage." The briefest statement we could make respecting Mr. Bellamy's book, which has had a "wider reading than any novel of reform since 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,'" is that it ignores moral motives. The devil has no place in his Utopia; nor, indeed, is there any need for a Saviour to set the wheels of the reconstructed moral universe moving in their right time and place. But the popularity of the book proves that it has touched a chord whose vibrations harmonize with the angels' song of "peace on earth; good will to men."

The London Freemason is authority for the statement that the Masonic Museum of that city has come into possession of the bona fide leg bone of Hiram, king of Tyre. At least, according to that paper, "the account of the finding and preservation of the precious relic is well authenticated. It is an excellent thing to have so reliable an account, as that is probably all that is reliable about the whole affair. It is interesting to note, too, that the Freemasons are following their friends, the Roman Catholics, into the bone business. Where they found Hiram's tibia may be found other parts of his skeleton. It is improbable that the Masonic fraternity will be satisfied with a single bone when more are to be had. Those of Solomon would be equally valuable, and they are surely as accessible as those of the Tyrian king. Then somewhere about the old tomb on which the truth-loving "poet laureate of Masonry," Rob Morris, cut the name of Hiram Abiff, the widow's son, a few years ago, must certainly be found some bones that will answer for those of the first martyr and saint of the lodge. With the three skeletons for capital stock, by the rules of "watering" so long practiced by Rome, there will be big and little bones enough to give one for the shrine of each of fifty thousand lodges with some to spare. This discovery certainly gives Freemasonry the pre-eminence.

The personal affliction that has come upon Secretaries Blaine and Tracy, the former losing a son and daughter in quick succession; the latter his wife and daughter, and very nearly his own life, will secure to them the profound sympathy of all people. Doubtless we ought to see in this more than a personal calamity. These distinguished men were heads of our nation. In smiting them God has smitten us as a people; and we may well pause in our mad pursuit of wealth, honor and pleasure, and especially in the bitter political strife that has characterized our National and State legislatures, and inquire why are we smitten? There may be nothing in the personal character of these eminent men that constitutes a special reason for Divine judgment; but there is one great folly in which the great mass of the people of all parties has joined, and in which Secretary Tracy has been the conspicuous representative. It is the project of building a great navy that shall equal in costliness and power any of the navies of the Old World. Such an undertaking is utterly needless and inexcusable. Besides the vast expense of construction and maintenance, it would but minister to national pride and foster the spirit of war, which might, ere long, involve us in international conflicts. God has signally blessed and protected us while we have had but the nucleus of an army and navy. Never in our entire history have we so united with all the world in bonds of mutual peace as now, and never have we had less occasion for armaments. May we not infer that the Samoan storm that destroyed our ships last year and the devouring fire at Washington were alike the rebukes of Infinite wisdom against national pride and the spirit of war?

DIEU ET MON DROIT.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

Darkness hovers o'er the mountains,
And the air is chill and damp,
And the traveler's feet are weary,
As we rest within the camp;
In the camp where tents are gleaming,
In the waning evening light;
Hallelujah! Sound the anthem:
So may God defend the right!

Long has been our march and weary
O'er the dreary desert plain,
But the land we seek is brighter—
Must we seek for it in vain?
In the camp the soldier sleepeth;
Up! arouse thee for the fight—
Hallelujah! hallelujah!
Thus our God defends the right.

Foes we've met upon our journey,
But they've fallen by the way;
Tell me, comrades, shall we falter?
Are we not as brave as they?
In the strength of Him we'll conquer,
He who clothes the hills with light;—
Hallelujah! hallelujah!
So will God defend the right.

O'er the desert march we onward,
Past the hills our fathers trod:
Past the shadow of life's mountains,
Towards the starry rest of God;
Towards the starry rest of heaven,
Where the skies for aye are bright,—
Hallelujah! hallelujah!
So the ways of God are right.

A BATTLE OF THE GIANTS.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The discussion of the Tariff, in the January number of the North American Review, by Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Blaine, is a most able presentation of both sides of an important question, by two of the most prominent men in the world's politics. Both have had ample opportunities for careful investigation, and both are eminently patriotic. That they reach so widely different conclusions is due in part to the different standpoints from which they regard the subject, but also from the intricate nature of the problem to be solved.

In one respect Mr. Blaine had the advantage. His was a reply, and a reply to one who spoke for the interests of another nation. Mr. Blaine does not take issue with Mr. Gladstone on any of the propositions he lays down. He only denies their application to our country. He neither admits nor denies that free trade may be good for England, but claims that the circumstances of our nation are widely different.

There is a marked contrast in the manner of discussion. Mr. Gladstone writes as a philosopher. He considers the question mainly in the light of the principles of political economy. Mr. Blaine considers mainly isolated facts. Mr. Gladstone speaks for humanity; Mr. Blaine for his nation. Mr. Gladstone holds that principles are of universal application, and that what is for the best interests of any one nation is for the best interests of all. Mr. Blaine holds that these interests are often, if not always, in antagonism, and that the good of one is the injury of others. The spirit of the one writer is pre-eminently humanitarian; that of the other, while unmistakably patriotic, is of that sort of patriotism that stops at national lines, and feels no obligations or philanthropic desires for those beyond certain boundaries.

Each sustains his points by an array of facts, but it is quite probable that in either case these facts are misleading. It is said that "figures will not lie," but on this question they certainly do most grossly misrepresent. The reason is that the results stated come from a number of causes, while but a part of these causes are given. We can make no greater mistake than when we conclude that events come from the facts that precede them. Mr. Gladstone says that England and her people steadily increased in wealth and comfort from 1833, when they adopted free trade, up to the present. He attributes this to cheaper food and easier production. In part this is true; but there are other causes that have contributed to this result. He concedes that as a nation ours has outstripped all others in increase of wealth, but thinks this was in spite of our protective system, and that our tariff has all along been an incubus on our prosperity. This, I think, is true, but I think he does not prove that our manufactories would have grown up and prospered without some protection. Our millionaires could be counted by tens until we began to have high tariffs. Now we count them by hundreds. It is questionable whether this is a national good.

Mr. Blaine fails to explain (though he attempts it) why we had a period of unexampled prosperity from 1846 to 1857 under a low tariff, but he attributes the financial crisis of '57 and '58 and the subsequent low condition of our national credit to this cause, viz., the low tariff. But we had a precisely similar crisis in 1873 under our highest tariff. Nor do the great fires of Chicago in 1871, and Boston in 1872, account for it. The losses by the war were vastly greater, yet they brought no financial crisis. Why Mr. Buchanan had to pay 12 per cent interest on national obligations was due solely to the fact that a dissolution of the Union was imminent, and no one knew whether there would be a nation to pay any per cent.

Mr. Blaine combats the assertion of Mr. Cleveland that a tariff adds to the price of manufactured goods by the amount of duty laid on the imported article, and he brings an array of figures to show that the reverse of this is true. He seems to prove that the price is actually diminished. This is strange reasoning, for if the tariff both increases the cost of production by adding to the price of labor, and diminishes the profits by a reduction in the price of the article manufactured, why should the manufacturer desire it? If a tariff on wool and sugar reduces the price of those articles, and makes clothes cheaper, why is it that the farmers and sugar planters clamor for high tariff on what they produce, while the manufacture wants wool free? When Mr. Blaine can explain how an extra large toll dish, filled from the hopper, will make the grist larger, he will be able to convince people of common sense that they are benefited by being taxed two cents on a pound for all the sugar they consume, and this because it cheapens the price.

Mr. Blaine does not attempt to refute Mr. Gladstone's statement that the price of all the articles that we export depends on the foreign and not on the home market, and hence the building up of manufacturing interests in no way benefits the corn, wheat and cotton growers. Never has the relative prosperity of the farmers been at so low a stage as now. If a high tariff would make them rich, they ought to have unbounded prosperity. Mr. Gladstone considers the moral relations of the subject. There is no better proof of the immoral tendencies of the system of protection than of gigantic trusts that grow out of it.

It will be remembered that the hideous Molly Maguire conspiracy in Pennsylvania existed within the Ancient Order of Hibernians. Members of that society in the village of Westchester, a suburb of New York, are now implicated in a dastardly attempt to prevent one of their order from being punished for a cold-blooded homicide. The object of their solicitude is an Irish constable who, while intoxicated, shot and killed another man for perpetrating a feeble witticism about "McGinty" in his presence. The coroner who held the inquest was probably a member of the Irish society. At least he summoned a jury composed entirely of members of the order. That jury, on the strength of a certificate from two physicians, one of whom was a member of the order, exonerated the constable from all blame for the murder. Though the dead man's intestines were torn in seven places by the bullet, the official declaration was that he had died of "acute congestion and oedema of the lungs." The decent dwellers in the community, indignant at this outrage against justice, have taken the matter up and hope to secure the punishment of the Irish constable. The coroner and the two physicians are reported to have been induced by threats to shield the man who did the killing. If the Ancient Order of Hibernians goes into this sort of business the Clan-na-Gael may have to look to its blood-besprinkled boys.—America.

THE CHRISTIAN'S DUTY CONCERNING THE LODGE.

BY REV. G. M. ELLIOTT.

We are plainly and pointedly taught in the Word of God to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." It ought to be plain to every one who has even the most superficial knowledge of the lodge, and of its workings, that it belongs to the unfruitful works of darkness.

In this passage of divine truth (Eph. 5: 11) we are exhorted to two things: First, "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Second, "reprove" the unfruitful works of darkness. This injunction entails a two-fold duty with regard to the lodge. It is not enough not to enter the lodge, but there is the duty of reproof. The Christian must enter his protest against the whole system of lodge practice. He should study its practice and requirements in the light of God's words. When he does this, certainly he will find much that should be reproved. We have known persons that never returned to the lodge after they were initiated. The mummery and mockery and blasphemy connected with initiation thoroughly disgusted them. They at once saw that it was no place for a Christian.

It sometimes takes more courage to reprove the lodge after coming out of it than it does to remain out altogether. I have known some who left the lodge, but they came out and forever held their tongues. They were either ashamed of those things that are done by them in secret, or they were afraid of the censure of the institution. So they preferred to come quietly out and say nothing. But we are told to reprove "the unfruitful works of darkness." Condemn them before others. Convince others that have not yet been ensnared, that they are purely of the world and have the spirit of the world, and hence are antagonistic to the Spirit of Christ. They are to teach others that fellowship with the lodge is incompatible with fellowship with Christ and his church.

The Scriptures say in another place: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" The exhortation then is: "Come out from among them and be ye separate," (2 Cor. 6: 14-17).

The spirit of this language is plainly against all those oath-bound organizations that ignore the Lord Jesus and that mutilate his Word, and that receive into their fellowship men of the "baser sort," whose lives utterly disregard our Saviour and the teachings of his holy Scriptures. In the lodge bar-keepers, whoremongers, liars and thieves are all brought into the closest fellowship with professing Christians—yea, with ministers of the Gospel. Professed Christians who go into the lodge cannot avoid this if they remain there: neither can they deny that they are brought into such fellowship. In the lodge room they must call this class of men brethren. Is the lodge then a place for a Christian? Above all is it the place for a Christian minister? When this Christian minister officiates in the lodge he is bound to use prayers from which the name of Christ is studiously omitted if he adheres to the forms given in the lodge ritual; and also use passages of Scripture that have the name of Christ cut out.

No Freemason that is familiar with the literature of his own order can deny this and assert what is true.

Every one then who becomes a member of the Masonic order is virtually bound to deny the Lord Jesus Christ. He may not think he is doing so, but he does it all the same. Is not this an awful thing for a professing Christian to do? Let such read Matt. 10: 32, 33. With these facts the Christian's duty becomes plain. It is to remain out of the lodge, or come out if he has been entrapped and gone in, and then testify against them as both evil and unchristian.

"PROGRESS IN AFRICA."

BY BISHOP WILLIAM TAYLOR.

"The extent of European territorial annexation of Africa, provisional, protective and positive, is quite surprising." "The London Times says that of the 11,000,000 of square miles in Africa, six and a half millions are attached to some European power, and of the four and a half millions unattached half lies within the desert of Sahara." (See African News, p. 332.)

In its territorial dimensions this progress is enormous, beyond all parallel in the history of land grabbing.

Not to speak now of the motives and methods by which 6,500,000 of square miles of Africa's soil have been "annexed to Europe," we have to accept the fact, and anticipate the progress that may be expected to follow in two directly opposite lines—the one deteriorative and deadly—the other renewing and life-giving.

The development of material progress, opening the highways of commerce for steam, both by water and by land, will give the right of way to both. These great arteries of commerce just opening are already charged to the flood with rum and gin of the most poisonous and deadly sort.

From a single city in Germany the steamers of one steamship company carry to Africa "6,000 tons per month, or 72,000 tons per year." Some of the steamers of another company carry from the same city "10,000 tons per month," or 120,000 tons per year—not gallons, but tons by measurement. These are index facts—mere rills of a Mississippi of rum.

A powerful line of steamers to the West Coast and to the Congo, a French line, two Portuguese lines, two powerful English lines to the west and southwest coasts, and two more to South and Eastern Africa, besides many ships belonging to private trading companies, aggregating more than a 100 steamships, carry from nearly all the European nations, and from England, more rum and gin than of any, if not of all, useful articles of commerce. And the devil is so anxious to implicate our own America in the guilt of this nefarious traffic that, at this moment, he has a vessel from Boston sneaking in with a freight of 250 tons of rum.

We talk about the horrors of the slave trade, but the depths of its horrors we never can fathom; yet in the overruling of God's kind providence, we see, as a result, six millions of Africa's sons and daughters in the United States of America alone, born to freedom, and to the privileges of a free Gospel, and of an advanced Christian civilization; but the countless millions of unsuspecting men and women in Africa now being victimized by rum, which, if not checkmated, will precipitate them to a drunkard's hell, beyond the reach of providential intervention or relief.

What can we do?

The difficulty of securing State "prohibition" in America, and municipal "local option" in England, may indicate the greater difficulty of persuading all the interested States of Europe to pass an effective prohibitory law for Africa.

In America our progress in effective prohibition is hopeful, though small yet, but our progress in voluntary personal total abstinence is great and growing, and gives promise of widespread prohibition as one of its own achievements.

This, with the power that gave it birth, and the source of its health and fruitfulness, viz., an open Bible, a preached Gospel, with its churches and school-houses, is the hope of America, and this hope of America is the only hope of Africa.

Holiness people of my country, do you see? Philanthropists of my beloved country, do you hear me? Patriots of my great country—men of mind and might and money—I am sure you cannot be indifferent spectators of this scene! How can we keep out of it? We don't want the African's country, but can we not come to the rescue of the African himself? Can we not, on a scale characteristic of American breadth and genius, adaptability, push and patience, panoplied from heaven for this great work, plant a hundred thousand industrial schools and churches in Africa, and man them, and lay the foundation of Christian communities, composed of saved African natives, well instructed in the Scriptures, and in all the industries essential to the development of a holy, healthy civilization?

My missions in Africa are but in their infancy, and yet we have already several stations entirely self-supporting, and have more than a hundred natives who give good proof of the saving power of God in their hearts, by Christian lives, and by the honest industry of their hands. Oh, my countrymen, will you not help me, rapidly to plant and develop industrial self-supporting schools and churches in far interior Africa? I know of no plan so well adapted to the wants of Africa as this. I have left behind all else that is dear to me, and have given the best end of my life to this work, and this way of working. How much will you give for this same work?

Let your gifts be made to God for Africa, and forward any amounts, small or great, to T. B. Welch & Son, Vineland, N. J., who will acknowledge them and forward to the Treasurer.

My regular annual reports will indicate the onward march of the movement.

Steamship Matadi, off Grand Canary, Dec. 11, 1889.

THE TARIFF TAX.

Since the year 1860, the people of the United States have paid to the officials of the custom houses the enormous sum of $4,600,000,000. This money represents the tax known as a "customs duty" upon commodities coming into this country from abroad which entered into the daily consumption of the people. The sum is appalling, and well calculated to make the advocates of a "protective tariff," so-called, but which is nothing better than a swindling tax upon consumers, feel like hiding it from sight. In order that the people may fully appreciate the blessings of the tariff tax, they should know what this sum of money amounts to, and that they may know this a few comparisons are here made: If all the gold, silver, copper and nickle coins of all denominations, that have been coined by the United States mint from 1793 up to the present, were laid side by side with the tariff tax paid at the custom house, the total amount would fall short of that tax by more than $2,000,000,000. If all the money that is annually appropriated to support the public schools in all the States and Territories, was put into a sinking fund until the amount would reach the amount of the tariff tax, it would require the appropriation of $71,000,000, the present sum, for the next sixty-five years. It exceeds by $2,100,000,000, the total value of all the horses, mules, milch cows, sheep, swine, oxen and other cattle in the United States. It represents a sum of money nearly four times greater than all the pension money paid during the past twenty-four years. It is $2,221,000,000 more than the bonded debt of the United States was on August 31, 1865, when the interest-bearing debt had reached the highest point. It is equal to the total valuation of the entire wheat crop of the United States and Territories for the past nine years; and exceeds the total value of our annual production of corn, wheat, rye, barley, oats and buckwheat by the sum of $3,400,000,000. It is equal to what would be the receipts of the Western Union Telegraph Company for the next 230 years at $20,000,000 a year, the present annual receipts of that corporation. It is equal to the sum of the net earnings of the whole combined railway interests of the States and Territories for the past twenty years, and exceeds by the sum of $3,236,000,000 the total amount of deposits in all the savings banks in the country.

Now, what has all this tax done for the people, and who is the gainer by it? It has made millionaires like Carnegie, Gould and certain other men, but how about the thousands of tramps, the mortgaged farmers, the insolvent traders of limited capital, the striking workmen, and the general materialistic spirit which is fast supplanting genuine Christianity? Is it not time these taxes were taken off or reduced?—Harrisburg Patriot.

TWO MASTERS FOR AMERICAN CATHOLICS.

[Rev. I. J. Lansing in Our Day.]

The official claims of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity in the United States are self-contradictory. Many questions, therefore, growing out of the utterances of the recent Catholic centennial celebrations at Washington and Baltimore urgently demand an answer.

The eloquent Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia, in his sermon on the morning of the centennial, affirms in noble phraseology the loyalty of his church to the Constitution and the Republic, and her equal devotion to freedom, to science, to education, and to pure religion. In the same sermon, however, he pronounces an unqualified panegyric upon the Society of Jesuits, its principles, its methods, and its influence, tracing to his devotion to this society much of Bishop Carroll's excellence. Does Bishop Ryan include in his praise of the Jesuits any explanation of the unspeakable indecencies of their moral theology, which cannot be printed in English, in this country, because its obscenity puts it under the ban of the common law? Does he ignore the fact that the Jesuits have been banished from almost every European state in succession, because they were the dangerous enemies of the freedom and progress of the people? And will he explain to us why the Jesuit society for many years was under the ban and anathema of the infallible Pope, who abolished the organization "for all eternity?"

Archbishop Ireland, in a sermon much of which is in the highest degree eloquent and praiseworthy, urges, in an extended passage, that America must be made Catholic (Romanist). If he means, as all Protestant preachers do, made Christian by the agency and co-operation of all Christians who labor with brotherly love and mutual respect for one another, we can agree. But if he means that America must be subjected to dogmatic Romanism, accepting the papacy, infallibility, purgatory, and the like, we beg to ask him how he proposes to do it? Will he, will they, open the Bible, enter the field of argument and pious devotion to God and man, and trust to make this country Romanist by such means? If so, we welcome them to friendly competition. But if the historic methods of Romanism are to be employed, such as she has used for centuries in the Netherlands, in France, in Spain, in Italy, in Mexico, in South America, and especially in the papal States, the methods of persecution and inquisition in a thousand forms, we protest, we reject, we abhor his purpose. Will he kindly tell us which we must do?

Bishop Ryan once speaks of persons outside the Roman church as "separated brethren," and Bishop Ireland urges that earnest measures shall be taken to convert such. We would know whether they also approve the papal bulls excommunicating all Protestants, together with the papal sanction to the murder of all excommunicated persons? These laws, for seven hundred years and more, have received the sanction of the infallible heads of the church.

With these preachers, and with several laymen who addressed the congress, we fully agree that religion is at the basis of morality, and morality at the foundation of social order, and that religion is an essential part of education. But by religion do they mean dogmatic Romanism? If we understand them aright, they do so mean, and if they do, we differ from them by celestial diameters. Romanism is neither the foundation of morality, nor the friend of civil liberty, nor the basis of social order. Let him who doubts read the history and statistics of crime and vice in the papal States under the popes.

They tell us, as did Bishop Gilmour at the dedication of the university, that the church is the friend, the nurse, the mother of learning, and that she fears not, but rather fully favors, the dissemination of knowledge. We ask why, if this be so, the lands where she has for centuries had the fullest control are the most notoriously illiterate?

Declarations of utmost and unqualified loyalty to the Constitution and government of the United States appear in almost every utterance of the speakers; in their address to President Harrison, in their platform, in their papers and sermons. Nothing is left to be desired in the phrasing of these declarations, and in them we should be glad to rejoice and hope. But we must be pardoned if we ask the speakers how to harmonize these declarations with the infallible Encyclical and Syllabus of Pius IX., given in 1864 and later, which anathematize a free press, free speech, liberty of conscience, state education, civil marriage, a free church, and many other of the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States? Within a few weeks the president of the Mormon church has declared, in almost the exact phraseology of these prelates and laymen, that Mormons are devotedly attached to the Constitution of the United States, no one more so, and he protests against all attempts to cast a doubt upon their loyalty. Yet we cannot accept his protestations. How, then, can we believe these of Roman Catholics, whose constitutions antagonize our government in twenty particulars where Mormonism does in one?

All their speakers lay great stress on their growth and numbers, this being apparently the most exalting thought before them. Their lowest estimate was nine millions (this was Bishop Ryan's), their highest twelve (by Judge Dunne). How do they attain these figures, by counting or guessing? If they count, whom do they count? By the most careful estimates from their own year books, Dr. Dorchester, that prince of statisticians, shows us that in 1886 there was, approximately, a Roman Catholic population in this country of 7,200,000. Add to that, for the three years since, the average growth per annum of the six years preceding, and to-day, of Romanists of all sorts, there are probably in this country about 7,700,000. Reckoned as Protestants count church-members, there are probably one-third of that number. Why do they boast so much, without facts or figures to support them? Is it a game of brag to impress American politicians? Is it to excite to extraordinary exertion their superstitious followers? If so, with what intent? What is the object of this wholesale juggling with numbers which leads them to put their lowest estimate nearly a million and a half above the truth, and their highest estimate four and a half millions too high?

Many times their speakers boasted that Roman Catholics, first of all people in America, passed a law granting religious toleration in the colony of Maryland. We are glad that American Romanists appear to think that religious toleration is a fit subject for congratulation. We, too, think so. But did they really believe that their boast in regard to Maryland Roman Catholics was truthful? Strange hallucination! Examining probabilities, we ask them where in the world, in any land, in any century, can the papacy show an instance, or dare to allege any other instance, of Romish toleration of any other than Romish worship? We know of no case. Rome's intolerance is universal.

If they passed any such act in Maryland, where in any papal edict, mediæval or modern, is any law for such toleration suggested or recommended? All papal utterances in this century to Mexico, Nicaragua, New Granada, the papal States, Sardinia, Piedmont, Austria, are directly opposed to the toleration of any other than the Romish religion by the state. Do they depend on history? Bancroft says that in Maryland the Protestants far outnumbered the Romanists. Gladstone says that in the assembly passing the toleration act, the Protestants outnumbered the Papists two to one. The right to manufacture history is a Romish assumption, but to attempt to palm off their pretensions when manufactured on the American people, cannot create public confidence in them. Rome is always in favor of toleration when she is in a minority; never otherwise! If she ever has been, when and where?

The congress, pronouncing in favor of education and the Republic, but to the last degree hostile to our schools, the "Freeman's Journal," commenting on the session, makes this determined opposition the "watchword" of their centennial gathering. This portion of the subject is very familiar to our readers, and as the self-con-tradition in their affirmations is obvious, we need not dwell upon it.

Astounding treason to American liberty is involved in their abundant declarations of loyalty to the Pope as a temporal ruler. As Charles J. Bonaparte said in his paper on the "Independence of the Holy See," the Pope is "to answer at no human judgment-seat." The same speaker said, "Catholics will never accept any law which considers the Pope a subject." This sentiment was indorsed with great applause. The Pope amenable to no law, the Pope ruler everywhere, is holding the first and highest allegiance of loyal Americans! We do not need to ask if this is not a contradiction, an impossibility. If Catholics are loyal to America, as they profess to be, they cannot bear such allegiance to the Pope. It is easier to believe the Mormon president.

We ask a final question: "Everywhere at the new university the papal flag was intertwined with the American flag; so say reports. What does the papal flag represent? Whose flag is it? What is its significance? It represents no nation, no state, no constitutional or civil ruler. It represents no race, no people struggling for freedom. It represents only an ecclesiastic, a hierarchical pretender. The only suggestion of civil power about it is the memory of the misgoverned papal States over which it was last flaunted, when they were notoriously the worst governed part of the continent of Europe. Why this ecclesiastical rag is now in existence, and why it is tied by any hand around the free folds of the star-spangled banner, let the prelates and laymen explain.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

What the masses read—Matters educational—Remarkable statements of Mgr. Satolli—An Anti-masonic pastor called to a Boston charge—The American Protective League does not want a public discussion—A proposal from J. Wallace Gladwin, the faith missionary of India—Let the women of the N. E. C. A. think it over.

The custodian of a public library in one of our great cities has stated some interesting facts as to the kind of reading preferred by different sexes, ages and nationalities. "Working men prefer, as might be expected, history and biography; and their favorite 'lives' are those of Washington, Julius Cæsar, Napoleon, Mary Queen of Scots—though why hers in preference to other and far greater female sovereigns it is hard to tell, for if not the worst she was certainly one of the weakest that ever lived—and Frederick the Great. The list would be a better one if it took in more of the world's real heroes. Germans are said to pick the soundest and best reading, and American girls (oh, the pity of it!) the poorest; nearly always selecting novels, and an inferior class at that. This is partly the fault of our public libraries which crowd their shelves with the flashy, ephemeral literature of the day, that is not literature in any true sense of the word; but it is more the fault of parents and guardians who so seldom exercise any surveillance in this matter over those under their charge. When the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan came also among them; and where martyrs and prophets, philosophers and sages, all the wisest and best of our own and other eras are gathered together in one goodly company with whom the poorest and most obscure may walk at will, then comes Zola and Ouida and Rhoda Broughton; and as Mrs. Browning, who has spoken the truest words on this subject that were ever penned, well says—

" . . . The wicked there
Are winged like angels. Every knife that strikes
Is edged from elemental fire to assail
A spiritual life. . . .
 . . . Would you leave
A child to wander in a battle-field
And push his innocent smile against the guns?
Or even in a catacomb . . . his torch
Grown ragged in the fluttering air,
And all the dark a-mutter round him? Not a child."

Yet this is precisely what is done by those parents and guardians who turn children and youth into a public library and let them read indiscriminately what they will.

High license in Rhode Island is not working to the satisfaction even of its warmest advocates. The Providence Journal, much as it did to defeat prohibition, and great as was its exultation when the rum party won the day, is beginning to complain. The Pawtucket Gazette and Chronicle of January 10th thus refers editorially to the effect which high license has already produced in that city: "Our streets swarm with drunken men, and the policemen in some cities seem to think it is not their business to meddle with drunkards unless they are boisterous." It looks now as if the Scriptural punishment was being meted out to those citizens of Rhode Island who voted for the repeal of the Amendment,—"They shall be filled with the fruit of their own doings."

Something good sometimes comes out of Harvard. A young graduate of that institution is getting up a series of five and ten cent concerts in Boston to keep the poor out of the saloons. The admission ticket entitles the holder to a bun and a cup of coffee.

There has been a rather foolish movement to establish gymnasiums in the public schools, but the two branches of the city council, with an unusual display of good sense, have decided to leave this matter to Mother Nature herself, who has taught gymnastics very successfully to all the children who have come into the world for six thousand years, without any distinction of race, and free of expense either for apparatus or instruction.

In matters educational one of the most important things that have lately come up is the measure introduced by Dr. Mecuen, a newly elected member of the School Board, which provides for inspection of all parochial schools within the city limits; and if the instruction is not up to the public school standard, the Board will have power, on refusal to correct the defects in their system, to close said schools. This order was referred to the committee on legislative affairs. If it becomes a law it will, in proper hands, prove a great check to Romish aggression on our free schools.

The British American publishes an interview between the representative of the Pall Mall Gazette and Monsignor Satolli, the papal envoy to the recent Romish Congress at Baltimore, in which he expresses himself as delighted with the reception given him by the American people, and pays Harrison the compliment of not being favorable to the Catholics, yet at the same time makes a statement which, if true, shows that he is deplorably deficient in backbone, viz., that he pledged himself to Archbishop Ireland to make concessions to the Catholic schools, when the latter represented that unless he did so all the Catholics would withdraw their votes from him. Mgr. Satolli also added the statement that "the public corporations in America are only too ready to fulfill the wishes of the bishops even before they are expressed." But as a reverse side to the shield, Evangelist Leyden preaches to full audiences composed largely of Romanists, and through the labors of him and others, the number of reformed Catholics are constantly increasing.

Rev. Ronald D. Grant, of the Baptist church, Beverly, Mass., one of the few Anti-masonic pastors of the country who dare to preach against the lodge, has received a unanimous call to the Harvard Street Baptist church, Boston, with a salary of $4,000—just double what he now gets. Holding unpopular views is not always a bar to success. Three different times during his ministry he has received and refused calls where the salary was double what he was then receiving.

The latest fraternal order to claim attention is the order of the Royal Ark; but what Ark and why it is called "Royal" has not yet been explained—at least to ignorant outsiders. Readers of the Cynosure will remember Rev. Mr. Savary's reply to a lodge official's criticism of his sermon against the secret endowment orders. The lodge seems chary of taking up the gauntlet. It was said that the management of the American Protective League would invite a discussion by inviting Mr. Savary to address them at their next public installation. Mr. Savary said he should be delighted to go. The meeting was held, but he was not invited, and lodge members who have been anxiously waiting for some kind of a reply to his charges are inquiring, "What can the matter be?" The matter simply is that these "grand," "imperial" and "royal" officials do not care to have a public discussion before their deluded dupes, knowing that reason and mathematics are both on their opponents' side.

There is a movement in behalf of an American College for girls at Constantinople, and a bill is already in the Massachusetts Legislature, granting a charter to Mrs. Durant, widow of the founder of Wellesley College, and other prominent ladies connected with the cause of foreign missions. Apropos to this, let me bring before the Christian anti-secret women of New England, a proposal which I have only to say emanates from W. J. Gladwin, the veteran faith missionary of India, to bespeak for it their prayerful consideration. At the table of a Christian brother who had not attended his mission lecture the previous night because "he had to attend the lodge," but whose wife went and was deeply interested, he was led to speak of his former connection with four secret orders, and how he had found them useless for good but powerful for evil; and when he noticed the cautious, half-suppressed, yet earnest assent of his hostess it flashed over his mind, "what multitudes of noble women in America are in pain and bondage on the lodge question!"

I cannot do better than to quote verbatim from Bro. Gladwin's letter, which I hope will be printed and sent round as a circular: "They hate the system that so robs their homes and divides the family, yet the strong man holds them in subjection. They do not know of your great anti-lodge agitation, or if they do they are powerless to co-operate. This stirred me deeply. What can I do? Almost daily I am pleading for India's oppressed women—can I do anything for these oppressed daughters of the Lord in America?"

"Then it came to me. Let the ladies of the N. C. A. issue a monthly tract and send it out to thousands of homes all over America—particularly to the wives of lodgemen. Let it be especially adapted to guide, to inform and to move to wise activity the multitudes of women who are fettered and fretted by the home-breaking lodge system."

He adds the following practical suggestions:

1. Let each one to whom this proposal comes pray especially about it for some days.
2. Let them say how they will help, what self-denial, what giving up of useless luxuries, ornaments, etc., to help this noble work of God.
3. Determine that God's daughters shall carry forward this work without any tax on the N. C. A.
4. Issue a small monthly paper at cheapest possible rates, and near the size of the Oriental Evangelist. Better have four pages fortnightly than eight monthly. You need a small pioneer sheet to advertise your way into 10,000 of homes.
5. It should be a registered monthly paper to secure widest and cheapest circulation.
6. Begin at once. Send out a special circular. Let thousands of ladies say in reply how many dollars worth of the paper they will order, or what donation they will give to start it. Let each giver pray without ceasing for God's blessing upon this simple labor of love in his service.
7. It needs to be a lively little sheet, good variety, always an item for the children, and a pioneer to open the way for the Cynosure and N. C. A. books.
8. Let it be called the Home Guard or some name of similar import, for it is to guard the hundreds of thousands of homes of our land from the lodge serpent.

Beloved anti-secret sisters of New England, here is a chance if you will but seize it to help those wives and mothers who are daily seeing their husbands and sons drawn into the lodge, yet are powerless to prevent. In many cases they could prevent it if they had more accurate information. In regard to the lodge more than almost any other evil under the sun can it be said in the words of the prophet, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Let your tiny sheet be wafted on the wings of love and prayer into lodgemen's homes, and thousands of mothers will begin to teach their young sons, and thus the youth of our land will grow up imbued with hatred and fear of all secret associations. It will strengthen unutterably the hands of these women who are seeking to keep their husbands and their brothers and sons out of the lodge, as well as those who have the harder task of trying to get them out when once in. Many a Christian wife prays daily for her husband's salvation, without knowing that "he has a religion of his own" which unless she can induce him to give it up will keep him forever away from Christ. I believe this devoted missionary has been led by the promptings of the Divine Spirit to make this proposal.

What will you do about it?

First, let me beseech you, pray over it. Then say what you feel able to give to start such a monthly, and write either to Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, 309 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.; or to the New England Secretary, who will consider the matter further in a future letter.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE FOX RIVER TOWNS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After the Batavia meeting I lectured two nights at the Swedish Lutheran church of Geneva, of which Rev. Cesander, who gave an address on Odd-fellowship at the Sycamore meeting, is pastor.

The pastor of the M. E. church of Geneva, with some of his people, was present the second night. He came up after the lecture and conversed with me. He had nothing to say in defense of the lodge system. He believed Masonry and Odd-fellowship to be wrong, but he queried whether all the minor orders should be included in the same condemnation.

I replied to his question by saying that "if good men combine for the promotion of a good object, they should not adopt that form of organization that bad men of necessity adopt when their purpose is evil and criminal." If they are doing truth they should come to the light, that it may be manifest that their deeds are in harmony with the will of God.

A son of a Protestant Episcopal clergyman was present, and he also came to me after the lecture and said, "My father is a Mason and the chaplain of his lodge, and I feel sure that he does not understand the religious philosophy of Freemasonry or he would not favor the order." He noted down several quotations from Masonic authorities, that he might call his father's attention to them.

I also lectured twice in the Swedish Lutheran church of St. Charles. The pastor expressed his wish that the people generally might have heard my lecture. The Free Methodist minister was present and aided in the introductory services the second evening. I reached home after my work for the week was done at 10:30 Saturday night. Yours for Christ and his glorious Gospel, and in opposition to the Satanic counterfeit presented in the universal religion of Freemasonry,

C. F. HAWLEY.

AMONG THE MOUNTAINS.

PINE GROVE CHURCH, Jackson Co., Ky.

About one mile from Berea stood the old Glade meeting-house, where John G. Fee first began the work which resulted in the founding of Berea College and town. A few rods from where this old building stood there are now two houses of worship, each owned and occupied by a church of "Disciples," the one white and the other colored. One would have supposed that real "Disciples of Christ," especially those who believe in "one Lord, one faith and one baptism," would not have divided on the color line, but rather have saved the expense of two churches and two ministers.

Some time since Bro. Fee received an invitation to lecture in the colored church on secret societies, and on the 30th ult. I went with him to fill the appointment. The pastor, an amiable man, is a Mason, and was greatly surprised that his order should be called in question. As I was frequently interrupted by questions, it was more than an hour and a half before I could finish my remarks. Bro. Fee followed with a statement of his experience, which was all the more impressive because the people know and honor him, and remembered the facts. He had been repeatedly mobbed and once driven from the State, but had been assured that he would be protected, if he joined the Freemasons. He did not choose to purchase freedom at so dear a rate. The congregation were deeply interested, and insisted on another lecture.

Next morning, accompanied by a guide, I started for Jackson county in the mountains. A gentle, sure-footed pony carried me over the terrible mountain roads. I discovered, too, a sure cure for rheumatism, from which I had suffered for about three weeks. It was riding on horseback, through the rain, over paths where I felt that life (except as God kept me) was in great danger. I charge nothing for the discovery.

The Glade region, in which Berea is situated, is geologically depressed. The limestone, which underlies the entire Blue Grass region, is more than 200 feet higher, and constitutes the high cliffs in the sides of the mountains. As we rode south-eastward, we gradually rose above this great mass of rock and came into the carboniferous region, where there are numerous veins of coal more or less worked. We soon passed the divide that separates the waters of the Kentucky river from those of the Cumberland. The streams in all this region have numerous sinks and entirely disappear. Farther on we came into the pines, and after two or three miles on a sharp mountain ridge, we reached Pine Grove church and school-house, sixteen miles from Berea.

I had been here nine years ago, and since then the house (of logs) has been enlarged, covered with siding, painted and provided with all the fixtures of a well-regulated school building. We found our way into the little valley where I had stopped before. The brother, whose hospitality I had shared, received us kindly. Besides a considerable addition to the size and number of his children, his house was enlarged, and there are two rooms instead of one. At night we rode to the church, where a considerable congregation had met in the rain and listened with excellent attention to my talk. Next day at 11 A.M. we met again. It was raining incessantly, and, moreover, the leading man in the church and community, Elder John Drew, had died that morning. So our meeting was small. But at night a goodly number met at the house of mourning and I preached again. Next day, Sabbath, was occupied with preparations for the funeral, and it was nearly three o'clock before the large congregation met in the house which Bro. Drew had caused to be built, and for which he had contributed largely of his means. Meantime the skies were cleared, and the kindly people for miles were gathered. It was a great pleasure to mingle my sympathy with theirs, and to preach to them the plain, simple Word of God. A good many Christians here cannot read, and yet they know more of the Bible than of any other book. It was a privilege to hold up before them the character of a good man, whom they all knew and honored.

Bro. Drew had for a good many years tilled his mountain farm and preached the Gospel to the poor. He had but a limited education, but was familiar with his Bible. He was the earnest friend of education, a Prohibitionist, and opposed to all secret societies. He held that there ought to be no schism in the body of Christ, but that all Christians in any locality should come together as the church of that locality. The church here of about 100 members is of that sort, and is distinguished from other churches in the mountains in that it refuses to be regarded as a party in, but rather a part of, the great household of faith. Another small church in the vicinity holds to the same doctrine.

But very little wheat is raised in this mountain region. The staple food is corn bread, bacon and sorghum molasses. Very little sugar is used, and I think very little butter. The people are large, strong and healthy. They raise large families. The country is sparsely settled, and schools are unfrequent and generally poor. This accounts for the general illiteracy. The internal revenue of 90 cents per gallon and the Government license of $25 for sales, leads to a great deal of illegal distilling. The willingness of the people to conceal the deeds of the "Moon-shiners," and the facility for hiding, makes the evasion of the law common and easy. As there is no kind of farming that can be carried on to profit here, it is not strange that the people should take to whisky-making. There is much wealth in the timber and coal, but without better roads its development is impracticable. There is doubtless improvement, but it is slow. McKey, the county seat of this county, is a little village, and no larger now than twenty-five years ago. There is one Masonic lodge at Clover Bottom, three miles from here, and another at McKey, twelve miles distant. I do not know as there are any others. There are more Moon-shiners than Christian ministers. The people nearly all vote the Republican ticket, and have done so since the war. They never had any interest in slavery. A few of them are Prohibitionists. A large percentage are unable to read, and there are but very few books or papers. I have preached here six sermons, and could not ask for a more careful and attentive hearing. What the people need is more and better schools, and especially the preaching of a pure and intelligent religion.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

LIFE OF A GODLY WOMAN.

BOSTON, Feb. 4, 1890.

Bro. John A. Conant, of Willimantic, called this morning at Boston anti-secrecy head-quarters in good health and heart. From him I learned some interesting facts concerning Mrs. Conant's mother, recently deceased. Mrs. Mary Brown, whose maiden name was Lamphere, was a native of Hopkinton, R. I. She early professed faith in Christ as her Saviour and united with the M. E. church. Her first husband, James W. French, was a nephew of General Wadsworth, of Revolutionary fame. On the death of her second husband, H. P. Brown, Esq., she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Conant; and, after a patient, cheerful and helpful life of near sixteen years, with her only daughter and her grandchildren, in the typical New England home of her son-in-law, Bro. Conant, she passed, after a few hours of serious illness, peacefully to her reward, Dec. 17, 1889, in the 78th year of her age.

Inheriting patriotic blood from a New England ancestry, she proved her devotion to her country by giving three of her four sons and a son-in-law to the army, in the late war. When she learned the merits of the anti-lodge contest, she took a deep interest in its progress. Having enjoyed very limited educational advantages she sought to make the most of what she had, and so carefully employed her spare moments in reading and study that she had opinions and was able to speak intelligently of almost any topic of public interest. She rests from her labors, and the many who knew and loved her in life will cherish her memory now that she has gone.

SOUND WORDS FROM MISSOURI.

LA PLATA, MO.

DEAR EDITOR:—It has been some time since we have written for your valuable paper, which we have hailed as a welcome visitor for more than two years. We have been engaged in general missionary and reform work in Iowa and in this State, and in preaching a pure Gospel we must necessarily speak out against the secret lodge system,—monarchy under the cloak of republicanism, the wolf of idolatry in sheep's clothing of a handmaid to Christianity, the spirit of anarchy under the cloak of benevolence.

Just now the Farmers' Alliance is being organized and carrying away the minds of the people of the West. Masonic ringsters and monopolists are hoodwinking the farmers in secret alliance under the pretence of an effort to break down monopoly; when the leaders know very well that secretism is the very thing that will prevent them from accomplishing their desires. What have the secret temperance orders done in Iowa and Kansas in enforcing the prohibitory laws? Comparatively nothing; while the open work of the W. C. T. U. and the Prohibition Alliance was the power behind the throne, and furnished the work and the money to carry on the conflict to victory. Here in Missouri we have local option for counties and cities, and the law is being well enforced, but not by secretism.

We are handling religious and reform literature, and in the last two years have sold a number of expositions of Masonry, etc., to actual members of the orders, and they are the men I like to sell to. Many of them are slow to believe that their secrets are revealed. I would like to correspond with Bro. M. N. Butler and others of this State as to what is being done here. I have been a member of Iowa State Christian Association, and would be glad to attend some conventions in Missouri, and lend a helping hand in this great work. We need a more thorough system of organization, and it ought to be the work of every State agent and lecturer to organize county and township auxiliary associations, and thus secure a hearty co-operation of all in sympathy with the cause, with at least monthly meetings in which the subject of secretism and other reforms could be discussed, and thereby the fire kept burning continually, and the people enlightened on the live issues of the day; and by county or township solicitors the treasury could be supplied with funds to carry on the work more successfully.

Brethren, let us hear from you on these lines. Pray for us. Our hearts are cheered when we read of the Boston Congress and of the great men who are falling into line; but what are we doing at home? Let us rally round the standard and strike for freedom, justice, liberty, and open, thorough, organized effort against the secret monsters of Masonry, Mormonism, Monopoly, Rum, Romanism or Jesuitism and Rebellion, all of which combined form a monstrous alliance too formidable for the ablest efforts of man, without Christ and the Holy Ghost to help us.

H. HULL.

A PAIR OF BIRDS HATCHED!

We are told that Babylon-Rome has "become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." The last hatch in the Romish nest that I have noticed is a pair of secret societies. They are called by the sweetly innocent names of "Young Men's Institute," and "Young Woman's Institute." In a Roman Catholic paper on the Pacific coast I saw reports of these societies. They have the usual bristling initials, "D. D. G. P.," "I. D. G. P.," "P. S.," etc. Items are, "Open meeting," "Six initiations," "The new ceremonial," "G. P. will pay official visits to Nos. 11 and 27." They have a "Death Benefit Association," and the paper gives a "Directory" of the lodges.

The fable that Rome opposes secret societies is forever exploded. The purple-scarlet-and-gold-decked women opposes only those things that she cannot control or manipulate. She is the mother of secret societies, a cage of lodgery.

The only way of successful conflict with her is clearly given: "They overcame by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony, and they loved not their lives to the death."

WALLACE J. GLADWIN,
Missionary of Miles, Iowa.

A CALL TO YOU, PENNSYLVANIA.

CUSTER CITY, Pa.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—How disgusting it is to every patriot to see so many secret society badges displayed on his fellow man,—Christian professor and the libertine, old and young. Secret societies seem to be the order of the day in this region. Flaming bills are displayed every little while announcing a grand ball, a supper, or something else grand—for secret societies are supremely grand in their announcements—for the benefit of, or under the patronage of some secret order. The churches instead of frowning on them as burdens on the body politic, as a menace to our free institutions, seem almost as benighted with regard to them as were the Ephesians in Paul's time toward their nature worship, and are as ready to cry, "Great is the god of Masonry."

It is but a few weeks ago I heard of a D.D. in this vicinity playing an instrument in a secret lodge for the members to dance. If such was a fact (I am inclined to give it credence), how high can we expect the blood-stained banner of Him who in secret said nothing, to be held in the church that pastor feeds.

A Methodist D.D. of Bradford, who has an anti-secret reputation with some, is said to have declared himself very forcibly on the action of his late General Conference in the matter of the election of a bishop and an editor, saying they were forced on the church by secret cliques here and there; yet he has secret society members in his communion. * I don't hear of his making them uncomfortable by declaring to them the whole counsel of God.

A faithful officer in the Bradford W. C. T. U. said a few days ago, "I don't know what to do with our women, they are as bad as the men; they are so taken up with the lodge they've neither time nor money for temperance." The county chairman of the Prohibition party expressed himself unable to understand the Prohibitionists of this county,—“They don't work.” I believe him a Mason. If he would take off his Masonic goggles he would understand. I wrote him some time ago explaining our anti-secret work, and asked his views. He either hadn't any for me, or had lost them.

The Masonic temple in Bradford is approaching completion, and the heathen ceremony of dedication will be held shortly. The corn, oil and wine will be poured out; the gaping crowd will look on with awe and talk of the impressive ceremonies. The Y. M. C. A. will walk into its previously engaged rooms in this heathen temple, and the world will apparently wag on as usual; but how will the God of Sabaoth look down upon the paradoxical sight? "Christian" Association in a full-blowing heathen temple! Christ and Belial in concord? A "Christian" concern helping in the running expenses of sun worship by renting three rooms in the building,—a Christian-heathen influence. I suppose if any of the Bradford Y. M. C. A. should pick up the Cynosure from the table of the Bradford reading room and read this letter, he would lift his hands in holy horror that the suspicion should enter any mind that he was in a league with hell and a covenant with death; yet such is actually the case, for two can not walk together except they be agreed. Without question Masonry is sun worship. Rob. Morris' dictionary, under article "Sun," says: "The Worshipful Master himself is a representative of the sun. As an emblem the sun is used enclosed within the compass, as the jewel of the Senior Deacon." Christianity is to open eyes struck with moral blindness and not traffic with the moral cancer. Cannot our Washington agent be present to enliven the proceedings? It seems to me it would be a good opportunity to sow seed in this part of the State.

I fully expected to have this county organized by this time, but I find it needs a person to give his whole time and keep striking to keep the iron hot, or it cools in one place while he works, as opportunity offers, in another. The people expect the leader to keep pegging away at them, and should he not be able to do so, they think he has cooled off and fall back into the old rut. The next time they are asked to organize, they reply, "Why, yes, I stand where I always did. We should organize, but I supposed you had given it up." Brethren, there is too much apathy; too much willingness for the willing horse to work; we haven't self-denial; we don't feel the worth of immortal souls, or we would not rest and take our ease while our neighbors and their children are having coil after coil of the lodge serpent put on them. The same serpent is trying to charm our own children and put on them its crushing power. "To arms! To arms, ye brave!" or it may be too late to do our part and we be found wanting before the Judge of all hearts and the Searcher of all reins.

Reader, what are you doing to perfect the Pennsylvania organization? Answer your own prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." This is one branch in ushering in the Lord's kingdom. Is the motto, "In union is strength," a dead letter? Is it harder to break one stick than a bundle?

Dear brethren, before this feeble effort cools on your conscience, WRITE, TALK, ACT. Correspond with our indefatigable secretary, Edward J. Chalfant, York, Pa., and cheer him in his labor of love. I bless God his courage does not flag, but works as true as ever. J. C. YOUNG.

PITH AND POINT.

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. BLANCHARD.

I met her first in Cincinnati in 1845, at the great Southwestern Anti-slavery Convention, Hon. James G. Birney presiding. Her husband was then pastor of (if I am not mistaken) the only anti-slavery church in the city, and the only church open to me for my Abolition songs.

I met Mrs. Blanchard last in the winter of 1888, in New Orleans, ministering to her sick husband, whom we feared might go before her. But he was spared, and now she is taken! The younger called up higher, while the older is left, we hope for years of usefulness yet. But we "sorrow not as those who have no hope!" For we know "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them!" From the first to the last of these forty-five years past I have known the departed, it has been but to respect and admire her unassuming, unostentatious, but unfaltering devotion to every high and ennobling principle, and to every righteous and humane cause. Long and sincerely will her loss be mourned, and by many hundreds who have known but to love her.

—“And her memory's light,
While it shines through our hearts will improve them;
For worth shall look fairer, and truth more bright,
When we think how she lived but to love them!”

—GEO. W. CLARK, Rochester, N. Y.

JOSEPH HOAG'S VISION.

I want to call your attention to the vision of Joseph Hoag, published in the Cynosure October 11, 1883. We are now come to the latter part of the fulfillment of the vision. We are now being governed by the Secret Empire, which is monarchical, which rules church and state. I shall want the Cynosure as long as I can read. May peace and prosperity attend you, soul and body.—WM. KNIGHT, Hulberton, N. Y.

TURN, CRANKS!

All reformers are called cranks about here. I think we altogether should apply these cranks to the shafts of reform, and give it a turn or two—and what next? The crank of destiny will begin moving, the universal wheels of time will revolve, the centrifugal force of Truth will burst on the world in glorious light, throwing down the walls of secretism and despotism. We want the wisdom and zeal of the reform society; we want the height and depth of free thought on this question, and then pour it in at the right place. Will the press give us petitions enough to carry three millions of voices to the doors and windows of Congress, and giving to those that have long desired to do for the cause of temperance?—JAMES HART, Monroe, Iowa.

THE PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN IN NEBRASKA.

The great need of the Cynosure is seen everywhere here, and many pastors don't know of it. The prohibition fight is warming up, and promises to be very interesting. The press, as in other States, is largely against the amendment. The non-partisan work is seeking to kill off the Prohibitionists. They call this a non-partisan fight, yet many of them say if the Prohibitionists run a ticket this fall they will vote for liquor. It is non-partisan for Republicans and Democrats. The churches are falling in, praying and working. We only can work, pray and await results next fall.—L. G. JORDAN, Omaha, Nebraska.

LITERATURE.

The midwinter (February) Century is notable among other things for the final installment of the Lincoln biography. The chapters include the "Capture of Jefferson Davis," "The End of Rebellion," and "Lincoln's Fame." Two poems on Lincoln follow the close of the life (one by Stuart Sterne, and the other by James T. McKay), and supplementary papers on the "Pursuit and Capture of Jefferson Davis," by General Wilson, who commanded the Union cavalry, and by William P. Stedman, of Company B, who was an eye-witness. The Lincoln life has run through forty numbers of the Century Magazine, and is one of the very ablest and most reliable contributions to the history of the late war. In this number is begun the publication of the artist La Farge's letters from Japan, with illustrations prepared by the author. Two extremely timely papers are on what Milton calls "The Realm of Congo." The first describes a trip made by the United States Commissioner, Tisdell, in 1884, and the second gives an idea of the Congo River of to-day, by E. J. Glave, one of Stanley's former officers. Mr. Tisdell's narrative is weak and pitiful, showing what inroads are already made on the poor natives by the rum traffic. This commissioner himself made free use of rum in his trip. In the way of timely discussion nothing could be more to the point than Prof. Thorpe's paper, in which he gives his reasons for thinking that Washington and Montana have made a mistake in their constitutions; and Commissioner Roosevelt's defence of the Merit System versus the Patronage System. Prof. Fisher, in the third paper of his series on "The Nature and Method of Revelation," describes the differentiating of Christianity from Judaism, and devotes a good deal of space to the work of the Apostle Paul. Prof. Fisher says that Paul "took a stand at Jerusalem like that of which Luther took at Worms." He adds that "but for Paul there would have been no Luther."

The January Statesman has one of the most comprehensive and clear-cut arguments in defence of the home, and warding off from that citadel the insinuating attacks of some advocates of female suffrage. It is an article by Professor R. N. Roark, of the Kentucky State Normal School. Mr. E. J. Wheeler, former editor of the New York Voice, writes with equal discrimination on "Personal Liberty and Prohibition," but his argument has the appearance of being fore-shortened. Mr. C. C. Bonney, of this city, who is a leading patron of the Law and Order Leagues of the country, explains the fundamental principles of this great movement. "The Federal Government," by J. C. Simonds, "The Organization of Federal Government," by Prof. O. G. Craig, and "Philosophic Basis of Political Parties," by C. M. Moss, are papers presenting briefly different views of the constitution and functions of the Republic. M. M. Dawson writes of the brutal Henry VIII. under the title, "An Odd Reformer;" and Henry N. Hoyt discusses "What are Morals?"

J. D. Tallmadge & Co., of this city, have begun the publication of a monthly, the National, Speaker, Reciter and Reader, at $1.00 per year. The first number is devoted to prohibition, and comprises a large number of selected and original pieces on this topic, short and easy, well adapted to the use of children.

The brother of President Harrison's private secretary, Mr. A. J. Halford, has written for the March number of the Philadelphia Ladies Home Journal, an article on "Mrs. Harrison's Daily Life in the White House," prepared with the consent and assistance of Mrs. Harrison. A portrait of the lady of the White House, especially taken for this article, and a view of the upstairs family rooms of the Executive Mansion, are among the illustrations which will accompany Mr. Halford's first magazine effort.

A company in Nashville, Tenn., deprecating the fact that there was no paper in the South of high literary merit which was not a religious or political organ, have arranged to begin in that city a weekly publication called The Round Table, early this month. It will contain articles on politics, religion, science, art, the leading topics of the day, serials, short stories, etc. The writers are to be such as can speak from large acquaintance with the topics with which they deal. It is designed to give expression to the best thought of the South, and to cultivate Southern literature. Among its contributors, also, will be many eminent Northern writers.

The February St. Nicholas tells "The Story of the Great Storm at Samoa," by John P. Dunning, who was correspondent at Samoa for the Associated Press when the great disaster occurred. It is an improved, enlarged and more carefully written version of the dispatch which all the world admired at the time, and it is richly illustrated from photographs and with drawings. Prof. Chas. G. D. Roberts, of New Brunswick, tells a historical story of the "United Empire Loyalists," called "A Bluenose Vendetta," an interesting episode of minor history. In "Two Ways of Having a Good Time" Frances E. Willard draws an instructive parallel and suggests a shrewd lesson, by showing that "it is better to make a little go a great way than a great deal go a little way" in the amusement of young or old. Prof. Frederick D. Chester has another sort of lesson. In "Every-day Bacteria" he gives a clear and popular account of the troublesome little forms of life that are responsible for so many of the ills that flesh is heir to. "The Launching of a War Ship," by J. O. Davidson, is a short and clever sketch with pen and brush, describing the christening day of one of our new cruisers.

OBITUARY.

Died, at her home in Elkhorn, Wis., Jan. 25, 1890, MRS. MARIA C. HAND, aged 75 years and 6 months.

The deceased was the wife of the late Osborn Hand, the notice of whose death appeared in these columns. She had walked by the side of her husband more than 51 years, and had reared a family of seven sons and daughters, all of whom are Christians and Christian workers, and all but one of whom were educated at Wheaton College.

Mr. and Mrs. Hand were pioneers in a Wisconsin home at an early day, and have also been pioneers in the national reforms of this century. At an early day they were pronounced Abolitionists, and the despised colored man was a frequent guest in their home. No less earnest were they in their warfare against secret societies, Mrs. Hand's father being one of those who left the Masonic fraternity immediately after the death of Morgan. The great temperance struggle has also found in them, from its incipency, determined and earnest workers. Both by precept and by example have they taught, during all their lives, total abstinence and total prohibition to all intoxicants.

Their adherence to right principles for the good of humanity has uniformly been strong, self-denying and unwavering. No less has their zeal led them to seek by prayer, efforts and contributions, to send the light into the dark places of the earth. Especially in Mrs. Hand has the cause of missions found a warm and devoted friend. The poor and the needy were sought out by her and helped in wise and generous ways. During her long invalidism she was a patient sufferer, and the Bible was her constant companion. The fruitage of her life can only be measured by Him whom she served so devotedly.

A large circle of sorrowing friends mourn her loss. Her entire family was present to lay her away, where her body awaits the final resurrection. A great light has gone out of the home, the church, and the community where she had so long reflected the light of the Sun of Righteousness. Heaven is the richer, this earth the poorer, for the departure of such a life.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

The Winter Term of Wheaton College is now fairly opened, and most of those who are to be with us during the term are here. We have over one hundred and fifty students in College and Preparatory School, besides those who are taking music, drawing and painting exclusively.

The subscription toward the east building is now more than $8,000, and it is expected that the addition will be put up during the next year. This will furnish some very much needed room for our work.

Mrs. Bryant, of Chicago, has begun to give instruction in vocal music. Her work is highly appreciated by the students in that branch. She was for two years an instructor in the musical department of the State Normal School at Potsdam, New York. Those who wish to make a specialty of voice culture, or chorus work, are invited to correspond with her or any member of the faculty.

Prof. Lowe, together with Prof. Butler, of the Illinois State University, has just issued a Preparatory Latin Work based on new methods, which he has used in the College for the past two years. It is expected that a second book of the series will presently be published.

Prof. O. E. Excell has given us one hundred copies of his "Triumphant Songs, No. 2." They are much enjoyed, both for their music and the concert exercises which they contain. The subscription toward the pipe organ, for use in worship and instruction, now amounts to more than $1,000. The instrument has not yet been ordered, but will probably be selected soon. It will be helpful to those who study with us.

Mr. Duncan Mackay, of Morrison, who has been our benefactor during life, left $1,000 to the College in his will.

Commencement exercises occur this year on Wednesday, June 18. We hope that all those who are interested in the college work will plan beforehand to spend some time with us during Commencement. Especially do we request all those who have ever been connected with the institution as pupils to make their plans for such a stay.

If we can know a little beforehand of the coming of friends, it will be a pleasure to the people of the village to provide entertainment for all who will come.

A SUDDEN CHANGE OF WEATHER will often bring on a cough. The irritation which induces coughing is quickly subdued by BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, a simple and effective cure for all throat troubles. Price, 25 cents per box.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1890.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago on or about the — day of April, 1890.

This call has now been signed by members of the faculties of Chicago (Union Park), Baptist Union (Morgan Park), McCormick, Concordia and Xenia theological seminaries, Northwestern University (Evanston), Capitol University, N. W. University (Watertown, Wis.), Lawrence University, Tabor, Wheaton, Ripon, Penn and Augustana Colleges, De Pauw University and the Norwegian theological seminary at Parker, Minn. Also by scores of pastors and evangelists, until the list numbers over 150 and new names received daily.

The N. C. A. Board at a called meeting Monday afternoon fixed upon April 21 and 22 as the time, and the First M. E. church of Chicago as the place.

THE OBERLIN DISCUSSION.

In the last College year the Oberlin faculty appointed Prof. Henry C. King to lecture to faculty and students on the secret orders. Prof. King delivered the lecture January 9th in the College Chapel. The discourse of thirty-six pamphlet pages evinces extraordinary ability, extensive research, entire candor, and utter detestation of the lodge system. He says: "I believe that the institution of Freemasonry is detestable." (pam., p. 17.) Both the large churches of Oberlin omitted their weekly prayer-meeting and listened to a repetition of the lecture.

We have already given a brief notice of the discourse. We have since carefully considered it, and we regret, excellent as it is, to find in it some serious omissions, if not fatal mistakes.

There are two beings and two classes of beings revealed in the Bible, who have come out of the unseen realms and acted upon this earth, influencing the conduct and destiny of nations and of men. These are:

1. JEHOVAH, "the true God," his ministers and angels.
2. "The devil and his angels." Matt. 25: 41.

These four are all that are revealed to us outside of our earth, who deal with men and determine their fate.

Professor King but incidentally alludes to these four classes of beings. He takes his facts from men and his conclusions from human authorities, excellent in themselves, but not divine. Hence he concludes: "I have no belief, either, that there is in any or all of these orders any general conspiracy against society. I frankly confess that too much seems to me to have been claimed by anti-secretists in this respect." This is because he is dealing with the dupes of these orders and not with their designers. Of the masses of Freemasons and secretists this may be true. They are beguiled by Satan and "sifted as wheat," only one in five, as he says, habitually attending the meetings of the lodges. But when Prof. King shows that Freemasons, who are but a tithe of the voters, hold three-fourths of the offices of the United States, does not this prove Freemasonry a "conspiracy" against the world of outsiders? And when he proves their charities paid to themselves, does not this show the principle of the lodge to be partiality to their members and proscription to those who are not? And is not this conspiracy?

Again Prof. King says, "Oberlin does not believe... this is the supreme reform of the day;" and, "I do not believe that the lodges are the greatest evil of the times;" and yet he endorses, by quoting approvingly, Dr. Pentecost's declaration that the false alliance of her members in the lodges hurts the church more than "any other one enemy of Christ."

Now if the church be the pillar and ground of God's truth, containing the light of the world and the salt of the earth, is not the worst enemy of the church the worst enemy of the times, and its removal the chief of all reforms?

Then when from Webster, Seward and others Prof. King shows the lodge to be as fatal to the State as it is to the church, does not this prove it the worst evil of the times? He finds "Masonic buncombe" in the declaration of the Grand Lodge of Missouri in 1867, that Masons are aliens to all governments but their own. But the New York declaration by Seward, Fillmore and others confirms the Missouri declaration as truth.

We may hereafter notice further this excellent address, but a published discourse at our national convention at Pittsburgh in 1875 (seven years after addresses were made in the same city by Pres. Fairchild of Oberlin and the now sainted Henry Cowles), asserting that Freemasonry is a conspiracy against the true God, against Christ the mediator, against the family and the state, has never, we believe, been controverted or its truth denied. While regretting these imperfections, we rejoice in this address of Prof. King as an epoch in our reform. And when the roused attention of the people shall settle into the conviction that "gentile worship," declared by Paul to be the "worship of devils," meant then, and means now, all worships without the Messiah or Mediator; and when all see that the worship of devils, condemned by Moses (Duet. 32: 17), and in the Psalms (106: 37), and mentioned in the woes of the Apocalypse (Rev. 9: 20), underlies and makes up all the false worships of this earth, which antagonize Christ, it will be understood that the secret lodge system, of which Freemasonry is the mother and model, is the "greatest evil of our times," and its removal the chief of all reforms. We respectfully beg this honored and beloved professor to consider his present lecture as a mere introductory to this great discussion, and that he will soon devote another lecture, if possible, to the Bible argument, showing that as the seven hundred false altars, introduced by the political wives of Solomon, dissolved the United States of Judea under his successor, so the false altars now crowding into this country are surely bringing the wrath of God on the United States of America: and nothing will save us from the doom of Palestine but the purification of our churches by humiliation, prayer and fasting, "the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony."

THE STUDENT MOVEMENT.

It has been a pleasure to note several times in the past the interest taken in the discussion of the secret societies in the University of Montreal. The University Gazette, published by the students of the institution, for Feb. 3, contains an editorial on "College Unity" which has candid words of condemnation for the college secret societies. There is also a report of a debate in one of the literary societies which says briefly:

"A regular meeting of this society was held on the evening of the 24th, the president in the chair. The subject of debate was: Resolved, 'That Secret Societies are Wrong in Principle and Pernicious in their Results.' The Affirmative was supported by Davidson, Warne, (J. S.), and McDougall, (G. W.). The speakers on the Negative were Tolmie, Ellenwood and Taylor. The decision was unanimous in favor of the Affirmative. The reading for the evening was given by R. S. Hall, and the essay, which was on Secret Societies, by S. W. Mack."

A letter from Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., last week called for documents to aid in preparation for a debate on the lodge question. These are cheering proofs of a movement among our students which must expand in power and influence. Last Saturday representatives from three theological seminaries in Chicago and vicinity and one college met in consultation and resolved to form a bureau of correspondence that should be a means of intercommunication between students interested in this subject. Their plan of operation is soon to be agreed upon and their important and far-reaching work will begin.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC ESTIMATE.

The Catholic Review takes the late Boston congress as a text upon which to read a lesson to the sanguine Romanists who were so forward for embracing all sorts of lodgery within the folds of the papal church. In the editorial quoted below, the Review is too comprehensive in its claim. The popes have condemned Freemasonry, but when of late years have they done else than embrace Jesuitism? When have they spoken against the Mormon abomination, or when have they contended with the secret societies in defense of American institutions? or, indeed, in defense of religion except that represented by the papacy? And the very same number of the Review, editorially, ridicules the Cronin trial and its decision as the result of a public sentiment resting upon mere newspaper evidence; thus laboring to create sympathy for the Clan-na-Gael. The remark of the Review, therefore, is very wide of the mark, which assumes that the condemnation of secretism at Boston was a copy of papal decrees. But the article itself reads thus:

We are gradually coming to it. The Congress of Churches, held recently in Boston, has found serious fault with the secret societies. In its resolutions it declares that "the various orders bound to secrecy in all their multitudinous forms and names, Mormonism, Masonry, Jesuitism, the Clan-na-Gael, etc., are incompatible with true Christianity, with the obligation of American citizenship, and with the free institutions of America, and that they should be met and overthrown in the name of republican government, and of true religion." This is a remarkable expression of opinion. It is almost the exact language used by the popes of Rome for over a century in describing and condemning secret societies. The gentlemen of the Congress may not have been aware of this fact, but their resolution will be felt as a severe piece of historical irony by those enthusiastic Catholic Americans who started a rumor of Catholic conversion to secret societies. The disgust of the ministers with secret societies is easily and thoroughly accounted for. The expression used by Rev. Mr. Grant gives the reason of that disgust. He protested against Masonic services at the grave of a friend, because he would not permit a Freemason lodge to take the place of his pulpit. Masonry has been taking the place of the Protestant pulpit for so long a period that protests are rather late, though not, we hope, ineffective. Masonry is really a religious sect; it has usurped all the functions of the sects, and being utterly devoid of cant, has been more agreeable to American feelings. We are glad to see the earnestness with which the Congress attacked the secret societies; they are not necessary in America, if ever they were necessary anywhere, and in ridding the country of them we are saving ourselves from the assassinations that have disgraced civilization in all ages through the secret societies. We commend the proceedings of the Congress to our large-minded brethren, who lately distinguished themselves by their foolish mouthings in behalf of secret societies.

Dr. E. P. Goodwin preached last Sabbath on "The Spirit of the Early Church." In a thorough and powerful review of the course of the church he took occasion to make some timely suggestions as to present needs. In substance he said: Those Swedish brethren who are in full sympathy with the Congregational form of church government are undecided about uniting with the Congregational body. They give, as the reason of their hesitancy, the low state of living in our churches. There is some truth in that statement. Far too often are the things of this world set before the things of the kingdom. The reason the Gospel has no more power in the world is that worldliness is harbored when the Gospel pure and simple ought to be. There will be no power in the church till there is a distinct line between it and the world. Dancing, gaming and drinking, if un-Christlike, are also un-churchlike and un-Christianlike. Speaking of the fellowship of the Early Christians, he said: There is a deal of Gospel in a hand shake. Men drop away for want of sympathy. When one man begins to say, "Oh, what is the use," another man's golden opportunity presents itself. Concerning giving also, he said: We must get back to the fact that giving is a fundamental principle of Christianity and not a matter of impulse. Seldom do we hear words so positive and piercing. Every Christian heart cries, "Nearer my God to thee," and there is a dangerous element in that heart, and there is pressing need of the prayer,

"Break down every idol, cast out every foe;
Now wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."

Ever since the legislatures of Wisconsin and Illinois passed laws to make education of children in the English language compulsory, there has been a great outcry among certain classes of our foreign-born citizens. These laws, they say, are despotic, we will resist them, and if need be organize politically to defeat them. Such an effort might in the end result in good, by establishing the fact that this is America and not Europe. It is a misunderstanding on the part of some excellent people that puts them in a position of hostility. The laws require only that proper instruction in the common English branches must be given. This may be done either at home, or in the parochial or the public school. Only it must be done, and parents are liable to prosecution if the duty is neglected. The law in this respect seems just and reasonable. We are an English-speaking nation, and those who come from abroad will better enjoy their citizenship the sooner they and their children learn our language.

The political campaign which closed last Saturday night was one of the most hotly contested in the history of Salt Lake City. Mormonism is still the issue. The last election for the legislature resulted in a victory for the Gentiles of 41 in the city. The Mormons, called the People's party, have been using every effort that cunning could devise or despotic power enforce to regain their lost footing. If they lose this city election, all is lost for their political supremacy; and that being gone their lying legends and lodge oaths in the Endowment will be weak bands to hold their young men under the control of the priesthood. It is a life and death struggle. The election took place Monday and the result we therefore cannot give till next number. One of the tricks reported to break down the American vote, was a plot to get some of the leading Gentiles into some compromising position. John Bonfield, late police captain in this city, and a Freemason, is understood to be in the pay of the Mormons to bring about this conspiracy.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. E. W. Shaw writes from Howell, Michigan, of six appointments in that vicinity, and is much encouraged by the outlook. Later word comes of lectures near Howell which were well attended.

—The Independent Christian, of Wellesley, Mass., of which our talented Miss Flagg is office editor, publishes the address of Rev. Isaac Hyatt at the New Hampshire State convention in October last.

—At last the life-long friend of Christian reform, David West, of Sycamore, Ill., is dead. After a prolonged sickness and partial paralysis he fell asleep last week Tuesday. He was a man of faith and love to God and his fellow men, and was not afraid to do his duty. An obituary will appear in our next.

—The current number of the Wesleyan Methodist contains the full account of the death of Rev. J. W. Johnson, the Methodist preacher who was killed by a fall while taking the Royal Arch degree in Masonry, at Huntington, W. Va. In an editorial it says: "It is the height of folly to prate against the position the Wesleyan Methodist Connection has taken on secret societies. We are largely a unit, as a people, on this question, and this righteous disciplinary law is to stand through all time."

—Rev. W. J. Gladwin wrote us last week from Pasadena, California, where he is enjoying the hospitality and friendship of the Quakers living there. He writes from the home of James Townsend, who was a personal friend of John Brown. He will probably also make the acquaintance of brethren Bufkin and Hollingworth, who have been long enlisted in the Cynosure army. Bro. Gladwin has so long lived in India that he dreaded our ordinary winters. This with other reasons led him to undertake the California trip.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard addressed an audience of about six hundred in Asbury M. E. church (colored), Washington, D. C., Sabbath evening, Feb. 2. After the address a collection of over $159.00, for the poor pastors of that denomination was made. While waiting in Washington he met Rev. Keefer, pastor of the Church of God at Highland, Pa., who reports that four members of his church have withdrawn from the lodge as a result of the lecture given in Highland last May. Bro. Stoddard speaks next at McAlevy's Fort, Pa., before going on to Pittsburgh.

—Rev. H. W. Bolton, pastor of the First Methodist church of this city, is a fast friend of the secret societies. He belongs to a number, and is often making speeches for them, either in his own church or elsewhere. When he learned the other day of Dr. Gifford's manly address in Boston, he wanted to know when the latter left the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, insinuating that the Boston pastor was playing double with us. If Mr. Bolton used to know Dr. Gifford in these lodge relations, if his heart was right with God he should be well pleased to know that he was now turned from such cruel vanities, and was serving the Lord only. We hope the Chicago pastor's conscience condemns him for taking sides with the world, the flesh, and the devil in the lodge. He is mentioned as candidate for the chief office of the G. A. R. in this State. While his judgment is warped by lodge oaths and ambitions he is not in a fit state to judge of a man who takes a stand for Christ as did Dr. Gifford.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5, 1890.

It has been a long time since the capital was awakened to the news of such a horrible tragedy as that which desolated forever on Monday morning last the elegant home to the Secretary of the Navy. The news of the catastrophe spread with the rapidity of lightning. Newspaper extras were cried about the streets in a couple of hours after the fire had done its ghastly work, and the entire city seemed unnerved by the shock, and overwhelmed with horror and sympathy.

To-day Secretary Tracy is lying ill and grief-stricken in one of the second story bed-chambers of the White House, to which he was removed at the solicitation of the President. His married daughter and grand-daughter, in a still more seriously injured condition, caused by jumping from the windows of the burning house, are being cared for at the house of some friends. The lifeless forms of the Secretary's wife and youngest daughter, a young lady of 20 years, lie side by side in the center of the East Room of the White House.

For several hours after the Secretary was carried, by some brave firemen, insensible and asphyxiated, from his burning residence, he hovered between life and death. Gradually recovering consciousness he opened his eyes, and recognized the President and Vice President, who, with the physicians, were standing beside him. He first asked if he were going to die, and was told that he would not, that he would be all right as soon as the smoke was gotten out of him. Then he asked, "How is my wife?" to which the physician replied that he had not seen her yet, being unwilling to break to the enfeebled man the news of his terrible loss. "For God's sake let me alone and go to her," pleaded Mr. Tracy. He improved rapidly, and became so anxious to learn of his family, that it was no longer possible to keep him in ignorance of the facts. He said to the President, "They are dead. I know they are; are they not? Is my wife dead?" The President, who had been bending over the patient holding his hand, averted his face and covering his streaming eyes with his handkerchief, bowed with a sob, "She is." The shock overcame the suffering Secretary, and he sank back upon the pillow in a swoon. When he recovered he asked to be told all, and he was informed of his daughter's death also. He seemed to bear up under it strongly for some hours, but toward nightfall began to despair and lament, and pitiful hours followed. Later an anodyne was given him, and he fell asleep.

Thus, at the same time, two of the Cabinet families are visited by the most dreaded and overwhelming of all calamities, death. It is true the desolation of Secretary Tracy's home was much more sudden and horrible and complete than the affliction visited upon the Secretary of State. Still Mr. Blaine's sorrow was also sudden and unexpected. Only two weeks ago he stood by the open grave of his beloved son, his first born, and to-day he is beside the bier of his eldest daughter, whose funeral takes place this afternoon. It was only a few weeks ago that Mr. Blaine lost a brother, and about the same time Mrs. Blaine was summoned to the bedside of a dying sister.

Indeed, this has been a stricken administration. The Presidential household was visited by death in the person of Mrs. Harrison's sister at the beginning of the present season, and scarcely a week has passed that it has not entered some official household of the gay capital, and for a short time restrained the social festivities of the mansion invaded. For a short time only, for soon the mad rout goes on.

A daily paper of this city in giving an account of a discussion on the question of Masonry and the excitement produced by the calm and logical arguments of the church people in Lebanon, Mo., against the lodge, heads the article with the words, "Are Fighting Fanaticism!" It does seem somewhat fanatical in members of the lodge becoming so much excited in defending a human institution of recent origin, being not yet two hundred years of age, as though it were both ancient and divine. However, if our paper meant it in that way, we are not surprised by it calling Masons fanatics; because in a recent editorial it gave as one reason why a certain officer of this county would not be punished for wrong doing, that "he is a Mason." We believe that there are more fanatics, or in other words, excitable, unreasonable and bigoted members of the lodge than there are in the Christian church, or among the opponents of secret societies. There are more persons who are inclined to be fanatical or bigoted in defending human organizations, open or secret, social or political, than there are among those who are working for reforms. There may be, and we believe is, more fanaticism in defending evil than in maintaining right and promoting the good.—The Midland.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—Marshall Field has given ten acres for a site for the new Baptist University in Chicago. It lies between Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh street, on the South Side, between the two South Side parks. Cable cars run within one block. It is worth from $100,000 to $200,000, but does not count by terms on the $400,000 which must be raised by Chicago Baptists to secure the $600,000 offered by Mr. Rockefeller.

It is announced that the Methodist church intends to found a national university in Washington, D. C., and that arrangements are making for the purchase of a ninety-acre tract of land near Oak View, ex-President Cleveland's country home, as a site for the university. Bishop Hurst, whose residence is in that city, is at the head of the movement, and has a paid option of $1,000 on the property, which is to be sold for $100,000.

—The Northwestern University (Evanston, Ill.) catalogue for '89 and '90 gives proof of the power of this great center of Methodist influence and intelligence. In the several departments there are in attendance 1,692 students. Of these 182 are in the Garrett Biblical Institute. The thirteen different departments of this great institution are: The College of Liberal Arts, Woman's College, Colleges of Medicine, Pharmacy, Dental Surgery and Law, Astronomical Observatory, Preparatory School, School of Oratory, Art and Music, the Biblical Institute and Swedish Theological Seminary.

—The feeling against the faculty of Washburn College, Topeka, Kan., which has been quite intense during the present year, culminated lately when it was known that the faculty had decided that on no account would the young ladies boarding at the cottages be permitted to attend the State oratorical contest at Lawrence. This privilege has been enjoyed by all students alike for the last three years. It is said that the rules in regard to social matters are becoming more stringent every day. The students have repeatedly petitioned for a redress of grievances, and last Wednesday morning blood-red flags bearing the inscription, "Rebellion," "War Declared," etc., printed in black letters, floated from all the principal buildings and high places on the hill. It is thought that the work of the institution may be seriously interrupted if feeling continues to run so high. It is generally understood that the next concerted action will be a petition to the trustees asking for the removal of certain members of the faculty who are especially obnoxious. Washburn College is the State Congregational institution.

THE HOME.

ONE LESS AT HOME.

One less at home!

The charmed circle broken—a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place;
But, cleansed and saved and perfected by grace,
One more in heaven!

One less at home!

One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word unspoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more—
One more in heaven!

One less at home!

A sense of loss that meets us at the gate;
Within, a place unfilled and desolate;
And far away our coming to wait,
One more in heaven!

One less at home!

Chill as the earth born mist the thought would rise,
And wrap our footsteps round, and dim our eyes;
But the bright sunbeam darteth from the skies—
One more in heaven!

One more at home!

This is not home, where cramped in earthly mold,
Our sight of Christ is dim, our love is cold:
But there, where face to face we shall behold,
Is home and heaven!

One less on earth!

Its pain, its sorrow and its toil to share;
One less the pilgrim's daily cross to bear;
One more the crown of ransomed souls to wear,
At home in heaven!

One more in heaven!

Another thought to brighten cloudy days,
Another theme for thankfulness and praise,
Another link on high our souls to raise
To home and heaven!

One more at home—

That home where separation cannot be,
That home where none are missed eternally,
Lord Jesus, grant us all a place with thee,
At home in heaven!

THE HEBREWS AND THE DESERT.

BY REV. GEORGE THOMPSON.

How could two million people, with their large droves of cattle, find support, for forty years, in the deserts of the Sinai peninsula?

We are liable to think of that country as a dry, sandy, dreary waste, with but little sustenance for man or beast. With such a view we may well wonder how that vast body were supported there. We know how the people were sustained. God fed them with manna, and quails, and water from the rock; and they may have gathered something along the way—the natural produce of the valleys. But the poor cattle—how could they find pasturage in a desert for forty years? This question I propose to answer.

The northern part of the peninsula is largely desert, an elevated plateau from 1,000 to 2,500 feet above the sea. The direct route to Canaan would have been over this; but they were led southward. The central and southern portions are, largely, rocky and mountainous. The ridges and mountains are piled up in great confusion, from 2,000 to 9,000 feet high. There is no regularity in their formation, but they are mixed up in a wonderful manner, of all shapes, and in all positions.

Mr. Wilson says, "The peninsula of Sinai is one of the most mountainous and intricate countries in the world. Tracts of sand are rarely met with, plains are the exception, and the roads, for the most part, run through a labyrinth of narrow, rock-bound valleys. The mountains exhibit every variety of profile. Great rounded bluffs, isolated peaks, and pinnacles, and seriated ridges rise up to stupendous heights, and, blending in wild confusion, present views of the most grand and impressive character." Prof. Palmer says: "The granite mountains lie in such a rugged, tumbled chaos as scarcely to admit of classification."

These mountains, generally, are barren of vegetation. At the time of the Exodus there was much timber on them, but this has been mostly cut off by the Arabs, so that they are now largely barren and bleak.

THE WADIES.

Winding about in every direction among these cliffs and mountains are the "wadies," valleys where mountain torrents rush down with great force when storms burst on the highlands. Some are quite narrow, only a few rods wide, with walls of rock on each side, rising almost perpendicularly from 100 to 2,000 feet. Others are from half a mile to two miles wide. The bottoms, generally, are comfortably smooth for footmen or wagons. But some are so rough it is difficult for camels to traverse them. Footmen can get along without much difficulty. By following these twisting, tortuous wadies, some broad and some narrow, Mr. S. C. Bartlett says, "A carriage can be driven all the way from the 'Wells of Moses' (opposite Suez) to Mt. Sinai, 153 miles, and most of the way a good road." These wadies are a great network. There are a number of principal ones into which a great number of smaller ones enter, and zigzag in every direction.

Some of these wadies are very fruitful. In some of them are springs and running water for some distance. And wherever water exists, vegetation is abundant. Grasses are found in many where no water is seen on the surface, affording pasture for flocks and herds. These valleys were much more fruitful in the days of the Exodus than now, because there was more rainfall before the country was denuded of its timber. But still travelers give glowing descriptions of some of them.

Edersheim says, "It is a mistake to suppose that the Wilderness offered no means of support to those who inhabit it. Even now it sustains a considerable population; and there is abundant evidence that before neglect and ravages had brought it to its present state, it could and did support a very much larger number of people. Nor could the Israelites, any more than the modern Bedouin, have any difficulty in supporting, in the desert, their numerous herds and flocks. These again would supply them with milk and cheese, and occasionally with meat."

R. P. Smith says: "Even as late as the sixth and seventh century numerous inhabitants existed in regions now utterly desolate. And even now the rain fall is not inconsiderable, but nothing is done to husband it."

Poole says that the large wady at Sinai, in the sixteenth century, "was a vast green plain, but is now entirely bare." Wilson says, "Wherever there is running water abundant vegetation is found. The gardens in the valleys around Jebul Musa (Mount of Moses) are all stocked with fruit trees; and in the lower valleys are fertile and beautiful oases (green places), such as the great palm grove in Wady Feiran" (half way from Sinai to the Red Sea), and half a dozen others named. "At certain seasons there is a considerable amount of vegetation on the upland plains." And he mentions various names of plants, "and other almost sapless herbs and shrubs peculiar to desert soils found at different altitudes, affording sufficient pasturage for the Bedouin flocks and herds."

Post says: "In every wady which descends from the mountains to the Red Sea, is a long line of vegetation; and almost everywhere, in these wadies, water, more or less potable, may be obtained by digging. In many places springs exist, from which camels and Arabs can drink. And, in addition to the springless regions which have moisture enough beneath the surface to support the growth of trees, shrubs and herbs, there are a number of oases in which are gardens, wells, and even streams of limpid, drinkable water." In other places are "plateaus, from which, in seasons when rain falls, abundant harvests can be gathered." And he adds, "There is considerable animal life in the desert. The ibex, and gazelle, and many small mammals, and lizards, and snakes exist among the mountains of Sinai. And birds of many kinds abound in various regions of the Wilderness. The Arabs raise large droves of camels, asses, sheep and goats. For all these animals there are watering places, and they all find pasturage."

Field says of the wadies, "Wherever the moisture had touched there were signs of vegetation."

At Sinai the Israelites camped eleven months. Of course there must have been sustenance for such numbers of cattle, for so long a time, in one place. And so we find it from those who explored the region. Wilson says, "There is in this vicinity a better supply of water and pasturage than in any other part of the peninsula. Besides six perennial streams there are several large and good springs; and the numerous gardens show what can be produced by a little cultivation. And everywhere among the mountains there are small basins in which grass and other vegetation grow in great profusion." And Bartlett adds, "With regard to the water supply, there is no other spot in the whole peninsula which is nearly so well supplied as the neighborhood of Jebul Musa. Four streams of running water are found there. One of them waters a succession of gardens for more than three miles in length, and forms pools in which I have often had a swim."

No longer may we have any doubt about the capability of the desert to supply pasturage for so many flocks and herds, and much more in the days of the Exodus than now. We know that Jethro, the Amalekites and other tribes inhabited it in the time of the Exodus. The above might be largely expanded.

SCRIPTURE HISTORY CONFIRMED.

"Now at least," continues Prof. Delitzsch, "the following dates are recovered to science with absolute certainty: 854 B. C., battle of Karkar between Shalmaneser II. and the twelve allied states of Chatti, 'Ahab of Israel' being amongst them; 842 as one of the years of Jehu of Israel; the years between 742 and 738 for Menahem of Samaria and Azariah (Uzziah) of Judah; 734 for Pekah of Israel and Ahaz of Judah; 722 for the fall of Samaria; 701 for Sennacherib's campaign against Hezekiah of Judah. That the Jewish chronology of the time before Solomon is not real chronology, that, indeed, it makes no claim to be such, has never been difficult to see. Babylonian chronology, which has itself until the present time been in many respects obscure, is now beginning, thanks to Hormuzd Rassam's wonderful discoveries, to be cleared up. Especially by the recent recovery of the authenticated date 3750 B. C. as the date of Naram Sin, and so of about 3800 B. C. as the date of his father, Sargon I., there opens before us a new and wide perspective to the history of Semitic peoples and of mankind in general. It is a remarkable coincidence that Egyptologists claim nearly the same date for the oldest historical king of Egypt, Menes—a date almost as old as that at which Biblical chronology fixes the creation of man. As for history, I mention Sargon II., whose name had been preserved only in Isaiah 20: 1, and whose very existence was thirty or forty years ago a matter of dispute; he is now one of those grand Assyrian monarchs whose deeds and lives are known to us even in the smallest details. Belshazzar likewise has been proved by the Babylonian monuments to be a historical personage. As if by a magician's wand the history of all the Western Asiatic nations, large and small, is unrolled before us in the vast cuneiform literature. Babylon and Nineveh, with all their customs, manners, institutions, literature, art and religion, awake from the sleep of twenty-five centuries and live before our eyes. The few traces which the Old Testament preserved of many long-cherished peoples are now supplemented by fuller cuneiform accounts, and the fragmentary sketches which we possessed before are assuming more and more the form of an imposing picture full of life and color, or rather of a grand panorama extending from beyond 3000 B. C. down to the times of Alexander and Antiochus the Great."

DON'T.

A true Christian never snubs anybody, and yet the habit of lightly snubbing, or looking down upon less fortunate acquaintances is common enough to make the following advice given by the Albany Journal to its young readers very timely:

Don't snub a boy because he wears shabby clothes; when Edison, the inventor of the telephone, first entered Boston, he wore a pair of yellow breeches in the depth of winter. Don't snub a boy because his home is plain and unpretending; Abraham Lincoln's early home was a log cabin. Don't snub a boy because of the ignorance of his parents; Shakespeare, the world's poet, was the son of a man who was unable to write his own name. Don't snub a boy because he chooses an humble trade; the author of the Pilgrim's Progress was a tinker. Don't snub a boy because of physical disability; Milton was blind. Don't snub a boy because of dullness in his lessons; Hogarth, the celebrated painter, was a very stupid boy at his books. Don't snub a boy because he stutters; Demosthenes, the great orator of Greece, overcame a harsh and stammering voice. Don't snub any one: not alone because some day they may outstrip you in the race of life, but because it is neither kind, nor right, nor Christian.—Ex.

TWELVE GOLDEN RULES.

- I. When called, to rise without delay;
- II. To think before and while I pray;
- III. My tongue and temper well to sway;
- IV. No low or ribald word to say;
- V. To tell the truth, let come what may;
- VI. To catch "odd moments" ere they stray;
- VII. Without an answer to obey;
- VIII. To sulk no more when friends say Nay;
- IX. About no task to lounge or stay;
- X. To know my lessons ere I play;
- XI. To take my share of giving way;
- XII. And read my Bible every day.

"HE DIDN'T LAUGH AT ME."

Edith is our six-year-old baby. She had spent the vacation delightfully. One of her greatest enjoyments was swinging in the hammock with her pet dolly during the long, pleasant afternoon. It was a great trial for her to think of going to school alone this year without her oldest sister, Pansy; but Pansy had been ill, and could not go. So Edith went off by herself very bravely.

She is our little sunshine, and her merry laugh makes sweetest music in her home. But she cries almost as easily as she laughs, and she can not bear to be teased in any way. The boys annoy her in this way, and laugh when they make her cry.

This does not make her feel kindly toward the boys, and she is not slow to express her opinion of them.

"Mamma," she said once, "I don't like boys. I'm glad I haven't a little brother."

"Why, Edith?" asked her mother with a look of surprise.

"Because they tease little girls so, and make them cry, and then laugh at them."

"Do all little boys laugh at you when you cry?"

"Yes, all but Robbie Shriver. I fell down at school the other day and hurt my head, and they all just laughed at me but Robbie, and he came and helped me up, and said he was awful sorry I was hurt, and he didn't laugh a bit."

"That certainly was very nice in Robbie," said mamma, as she gave Edith's rosy cheek a kiss.

"Yes, mamma, Robert Shriver is the only boy in town that I like, because he never laughs at me."

That was a great compliment to Robbie. It shows that he is a gentle boy, and when he grows up he will be a gentleman.

A HEAVY LOSS.

There was a general stir and commotion in the Trumbull farm-house, for Uncle James, who had long been absent in the distant West, was coming to make a visit. It was fitting that the house should be in perfect order, the children in their Sunday attire, and the whole family on their best behavior, when they were about to welcome so important a guest. The children, five in number, who had been taught to reverence his name from their earliest years, looked upon him at first with feelings of awe: but they soon discovered that their great "Uncle James" was, after all, only a big, kind-hearted man, who could be, when he wished, as much a child as any of them.

He brought them, too, the most beautiful presents, among them a real live Kentucky pony for Albert, the oldest boy. The animal was a dark, glossy bay, with spirited step, kindly eyes, and flowing mane and tail. "Beauty" the younger ones wanted to name him, but Albert, who had lately been reading the life of Alexander the Great, called him Bucephalus, after the steed of that famous conqueror. The pony was at once recognized as a family pet, to be coaxed with soft words and lumps of sugar; to be led carefully about by the bridle; to be harnessed and driven with pride; or to be caressed and patted and stroked, while he received daily visits in his stall.

One day Uncle James remarked to his sister: "Albert is a fine boy. You and his father may well be proud of him; but he has one serious fault—carelessness. It distresses me to pass his room. No matter how neatly you arrange it in the morning, I notice that by night everything is in disorder. I have heard his father reprove him several times for mislaying things at the barn, but I do not see that Albert makes any effort to improve. Something should be done at once to help him to overcome this failing."

Mrs. Trumbull listened, and determined to consider what should be done in the matter. A week later Uncle James took his departure, and a few nights afterward there was a sudden alarm of fire. The family was aroused, and ran out to find the barn all on blaze. The neighbors rallied and worked nobly, but were powerless to subdue the flames.

"The horses!" cried some one. "Give me an ax! I'll get them out!"

Albert, hearing the call, ran to get the ax from its proper place in the wood-house, trembling all the while as he thought of his beautiful, gentle pony, whose screams even then filled his ears. He reached for the ax, but, alas! he had used it the day before, and, true to his careless habit, had neglected to restore it to its place. In his alarm he failed to remember where he had put it, and so the ax could not be found. The horses, five in number, perished, the dear Kentucky pony with them; and all for the want of that misplaced ax.

Could Albert ever forget that dreadful night, and the cries of those poor, terrified animals? It was a dearly bought lesson, but one he always remembered. From that time forward his favorite motto was, "A place for everything, and everything in its place."—Mary J. Porter, in the Congregationalist.

"AND A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."

A little child's prayer furnished decisive evidence in a suit in a court at Fresno, Cal., a while ago. A man had deserted his wife and his two children, and had been found in Fresno. His wife and her brother had an interview with him, and endeavored to induce him to return. He refused, and when the law was invoked he defended his conduct in court. He testified that his wife was a wicked woman, with whom he could not live, and that by word and example she corrupted her children. "Don't believe him, judge," said the wife; "I have done my best with my home and the children, and I have reared them as they should be."

The man still persisted, and between so much cross-swearing, the judge was puzzled. At last he asked if the children were in court. A little girl, three years old, came forward, and the judge questioned her. One or two questions were answered intelligently, and then the judge said, "Could you say your prayers?" Without a moment's hesitation, the little girl knelt in the court-room, closed her eyes, clasped her hands, and in reverential voice began, "Our Father who art in heaven." Before she reached the end of the prayer, tears stood in the eyes of the judge, and the deep silence of the court-room was broken by sobs from more than one rough fellow, to whom the words recalled childhood's memories. There was no doubt in the mind of any one as to the justice in the case, when the girl added to the Lord's Prayer an earnest petition for her father, which she had so evidently been in the habit of putting up, night and morning, during his shameful absence from his family. The judge would hear no more evidence, and in a voice broken with emotion he gave his decision against the father. The mother could have had no idea, when she so trained her child, that the result would be so valuable to her in the crisis of her life, but she did her duty, and the child enabled her "to answer him that reproached her." (Prov. 27:11.)

The prohibitory amendment to the constitution of Kansas has, by driving the saloon beyond her borders, made it easier for us to govern and to teach the children of the commonwealth, and has elevated Kansas to a plane of civilization never reached by any other people in the history of the world.—State Convention of Kansas Public School Teachers.

TEMPERANCE.

THE TEMPERANCE TEMPLE.

Mrs. M. B. Carse, who is managing the temperance-temple project for the W. C. T. U. in this city, says that the success of the enterprise is now fully assured. The building is to be erected on the Marshall Field lot at the southwest corner of Monroe and LaSalle streets, and is to cost $1,000,000. To provide funds stock to the amount of $600,000 and bonds to the amount of $500,000 are to be issued. They are to be issued on the express agreement that at the end of five years the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union shall have the right to buy them at par value. The ultimate intention is that all the stock shall be held by the national union and the income from the property go, half of it to that organization and the other half to the State unions in the proportion in which they subscribed to the stock. Already gifts amounting to $100,000 have been made to place that amount of stock in the name of the national union, and the remainder of the stock has been so nearly subscribed as to leave no doubt of the success of the plan. It is expected that the corner-stone of the building will be laid early in the spring, and the building completed in two years.

FRIENDS OF PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.

Attorney General Kellogg has issued from Topeka, Kansas, the following address to the friends of prohibition in that State: "The more I become conversant with the working of the prohibitory law the more I am impressed with the necessity of the wholesome public sentiment in its favor in each community. In all those portions of the State where the public sentiment is favorable the officers have no difficulty in securing a strict enforcement of the law. A favorable public sentiment, active, courageous and aggressive, is needed in every city, town, village and country neighbourhood. The people must not relax their efforts. Law-and-order leagues, W. C. T. U. societies and other temperance organizations, public meetings and individual efforts are all necessary in upholding, sustaining and enforcing the law. With the approach of the time for municipal elections a special duty is devolved upon the loyal citizens of the State. The constitution must be upheld and the laws enforced. The saloon influence should not be permitted to dictate nominations nor to elect officers."

HIGH LICENSE A FAILURE IN NEBRASKA.

Prof. Arley B. Show, of Doane College, Nebraska, writes to the Congregationalist an article, in which he says:

Nebraska is quoted throughout the land as authority for the surpassing merits of the high-license system. Will our friends please note that, after a fair trial, we are anxious to be rid of it? Some importance attaches to the fact that the dominant party was compelled to pledge submission in its platform, and to redeem its pledge in the Legislature. The plain truth is, the high-license system in Nebraska is a stupendous failure. Many of our best people welcomed its adoption as a measure of relief from the most flagrant evils of the saloon. It has proved no relief. While it has lessened the number of saloons, it has not diminished the consumption of liquor, the amount of drunkenness, nor the crimes and misdemeanors traceable to intemperance. To quote Nebraska as an example of the good high-license will accomplish is an unqualified travesty of the truth, and we are beginning to feel very sensitive about it.—Christian Statesman.

On Monday evening of last week a banquet was given Judge Brewer at a hotel in Leavenworth, on behalf of his friends and the public, in recognition of his promotion to the Supreme Court. It is stated that the Judge expressed a desire that no wines or liquors should be served on that occasion; but it appears that either this expression came too late for the prevention of very discredit-able preparations, or it was disregarded by some of the individuals responsible for the arrangements. The landlord of the hotel sent orders to Kansas City for "the finest brands" of wines and liquors, and was proceeding with the intent of violating the law in a way that would have been most conspicuous and defiant. But the Police Commissioners served notice upon him that if intoxicants were served at the banquet he would be held responsible. This (together with Judge Brewer's objection) caused a countermanding of the order, and prevented an exhibition of lawlessness in connection with the celebration of an appointment to the highest court of law in the land. Judge Brewer's position in this affair was one of great delicacy; he was a guest in the hands of friends, and probably could not have been expected to foresee that those friends would permit indecorous preparations.—The Voice.

The North Dakota prohibition law, recently passed by the legislature, punishes a first offense with a fine of from $200 to $1,000, and imprisonment not less than ninety days nor more than one year. The second and each succeeding offense are treated as felony, with punishment in State's prison for not more than two years, and not less than one. Registered pharmacists may sell for medicinal, scientific and sacramental purposes. All places where intoxicants are sold are declared common nuisances, and sheriffs are empowered to abate them and destroy all intoxicants and fixtures found therein.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—First Quarter.—Feb. 23.

SUBJECT.—The Temptation of Jesus.—Luke 4: 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—In that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted.—Heb. 2: 18.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Luke 4: 1-13. T.—Matt. 4: 1-11. W.—Gen. 3: 1-13. T.—Heb. 2: 6-18. F.—Heb. 4: 9-16. S.—Deut. 8: 1-10. S.—Jas. 1: 1-16.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The temptation to distrust, vs. 1-4. We notice (1) that Jesus was tempted of the devil at the very time when he had reached the highest point of spiritual exaltation. So his followers will often find themselves led into the wilderness of trial and temptation just after they have met with some especially heavenly experience, in which all trials and temptations seemed to be forever things of the past. (2) "He was led of the Spirit." Our trials and temptations will never be suffered to overcome us if we always submit to that blessed leading. (3) He was first tempted from the side of his physical nature. Satan has always found this his most vulnerable side to attack. Avarice and ambition, giant passions though they be, are not so powerful as the love of life. A man will not clutch at a crown nor a bag of gold when he is dying of hunger. But it is not in every case true that "all a man hath will he give for his life." This was a lie of Satan to traduce the righteous Job, who proved its falsity by holding fast to God and trusting in him, even when he seemed about to slay him. (4) The temptations which come to us through the avenue of a pressing temporal necessity are the hardest to combat because the mind partakes of the weakness of the body. Hunger will not be reasoned with. The only resource is what Jesus used, the sword of the Spirit. "Man doth not live by bread alone" is the lesson which of all others we need in this material land and age to learn. Only as we feed our souls on the Word of God can we rise above the worship of the almighty dollar, or the disposition to worry about our temporal affairs. (5) We notice further that he challenges Christ on the very ground of that proclamation made by the celestial voice at his baptism. If thou be the Son of God prove that that voice, the opening heavens, the descending dove, were not all figments of the imagination by working a miracle here and now to satisfy thy hunger. Christ had to exercise faith, to believe without an instant's wavering in the reality of his divine mission, or that mission would have failed. "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin."

2. The temptation to ambition, vs. 5-8. Matthew places this temptation last, and there are reasons why his appears to be the true order. Satan now seems to have abandoned his original ground of attack. He no longer says, "If thou be the Son of God. He is willing to concede this point. Satan is often willing to concede a great deal. He is even willing that we should believe all the cardinal doctrines of Christianity and be as religious as we please, if he can keep us so busy and self-satisfied with our own good works that we shall forget to be on our guard against his wiles. He is also very willing to offer Christ a mock homage, but it is only that he may the more readily deceive men. Infidelity, open and undisguised, is a clumsy weapon; but give a poisoned point to a cambric needle and it will slay its tens of thousands. The boldest denial of Christ's claims is not so deadly an insult to him as the mock homage of the lodge. The temptation to concede some little point to Satan in the hope of gaining some great advantage for religion is one every Christian has to meet. This is the principle on which church fairs are conducted, and other schemes by which it is hoped to gain the support of the world; or, in plain language, the god of this world. This is to worship Satan. It is in its essence the very temptation that Jesus spurned.

3. The temptation to presumption, vs. 9-13. There is a wide gulf between presumption and true faith in God. The former is the real fanaticism. When an evangelist is tempted to try sensational methods simply because they are sensational, or a preacher to say startling, out-of-the-way things for mere effect, it is in essence the same as this second temptation. But there is always the same unfailing armory to go to: "It is written." The only safe way is to keep close to the Word of God, and every shaft of the enemy will fall as from a polished buckler,—blunted and broken at our feet. For a season, never permanently in this life, does Satan leave us. Therefore it behoves us always to be watching, always armed with the sword of the Word.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

1. The wise man ever prays, Lead us not into temptation; but when he is tempted, he is not to run away, but to overcome. The greatest battles of the world are spiritual battles with temptation, and in them greater victories are won, greater heroisms shown, than at Thermopylae or Waterloo.

2. Jesus Christ can help us in our temptations, because he was tempted like as we are, and because he gained the victory. And we can help others, not merely by suffering as they suffer, but by overcoming the evil, and showing by our experience the way into victory and peace.

3. All the worship that Satan cares for in us is a real service of evil. And we worship him when we are willing to do any wrong act for the sake of earthly gain,—when we would lie to escape punishment, or deceive in order to make a good bargain, or use other people's money to gain wealth, or hide our principles to gain votes or popularity.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Miss Gertrude Magill, daughter of President Magill, of Swarthmore College, is about to enter the ministry of the Friends church, by which the institution is maintained.

—A special to the Inter Ocean from Richmond, Ind., last week, brought word of an important court decision, affecting the legal standing of the two branches of the United Brethren church. It says: "The case pending in the Wayne Circuit Court of Indiana, involving the question in controversy between the Liberals and Radical United Brethren, upon the possession and control of Sugar Grove Church was dismissed by the Liberals (they being plaintiffs), and their costs. The property is thus left in the undisputed possession and control of the Radicals. The case had already been decided (some months since) by Judge Comstock in favor of the Radicals upon demurrer, which involved all the facts in the general trouble. The Liberals, upon the claim that such decision was merely upon a technical point of law, insisted that the case should be tried, as they claimed, on its merits. The Radicals were fully prepared so to try the case when set down for trial (on Feb. 4), and insisted upon its trial. They were met by a motion for continuance made by the Liberals, which was overruled by the Court, as being based upon insufficient grounds, whereupon the Liberals retired from the contest, by dismissing the case at their own cost."

—Rev. H. S. McAyeal, the new pastor at Cambridge, Nebraska, Congregational church, is the son of Rev. Dr. McAyeal, of the United Presbyterian church, Lawrence, Mass. He has had exceptional opportunities for study at home and abroad. Suffering from asthma in the East, he has found entire relief in the dry, genial climate of southwestern Nebraska.

—The Congregational church at Tonica, of which Rev. Wm. Wilson is now pastor, united with the Methodists and Baptists in a union service during the Week of Prayer, and for two weeks after in revival meetings. Much has been accomplished, and some conversions resulted.

—As partial results of a recent revival at Paxton, Ill., forty-three additions and forty upon confession have been made to the Congregational church.

—An informal meeting of the Congregational ministers of Chicago was held at the Grand Pacific last week for the purpose of conferring regarding mission work and mission expenses. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, of the First Church, presided, and A. Hallner acted as secretary. Representatives from the Swedish Mission Union were present and related their mission experience. The ministers inquired into the work accomplished at the missions and the progress made during the last year. The conference resulted in diffusing among the clergymen a wider knowledge of the mission work now being done in the city. A union of the Free Mission Swedish churches with the Congregational body is under consideration.

—The board of control of the Epworth League met lately at the First Methodist Episcopal church, in this city, for the purpose of perfecting the organization, and making such arrangements as are necessary for conducting the work of the organization. Bishop J. M. Fitzgerald, of Minneapolis, presided. A number of committees were appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws for the League, and outline such a course of policy as would be likely to make the work of the members most efficient. The Epworth League is a consolidation of all the minor societies of the Methodist Episcopal church, and dates its origin from May 15, 1889. It has for its object the cultivation of earnest, practical, and loyal spiritual life in the young people of the church, and it is intended to start branches all over the country.

—The last regular services held in the old building of the First Church of Monmouth, Ill., Dr. T. H. Hanna, pastor, were of great interest. Dr. Hanna preached on the text, "Remember the Days of Old." Dr. Hanna has been in charge of the congregation for nine years and five months, and during that time has preached 944 sermons, 724 of them from the church pulpit. He has been absent but twice from illness. During the time of the last pastorate 432 names have been added to the church rolls. Of these 222 have been received on certificate from other congregations, and 210 have united by examination and profession of faith. The net gain of membership at present is 387. The entire congregation for all purposes has paid out in that time $63,098.

—The Young People's Missionary Society of the Lincoln Park Congregational church, Chicago, has undertaken to raise sufficient money for the construction of a much-needed missionary wagon for the use of the station at Erzroom, Turkey.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler, State Evangelist, and former president of the Illinois State Christian Association, has begun services in Summer Hill. The church has been without a pastor since the death of Rev. J. W. Hiatt, about the first day of the year.

—A meeting of Norwegian Lutherans of Madison, Wis., has been in progress in Milwaukee, its mission being to pass upon a constitution which is to form a basis for a union of the four branches of the Lutheran church in this country, which hold, in a minor degree, different doctrinal beliefs. The principal question discussed was the extent of power which should be given to a joint synod to be held in Minneapolis in June, to effect a reconciliation of the four organizations if possible. The opinion seemed to prevail that this body's prerogatives should be only of an advisory nature, and that no absolute authority should be vested in it. The preachers who took part are very hopeful that all differences will soon be harmonized, and that the Lutheran church will again be united and strong.

—One of the missionaries of the China Inland Mission, a Scotch gentleman worth $1,000,000, is living in China on twenty-five cents a week, using all his fortune in the work.

—The establishment of a home for Methodist missionaries in Albany, N. Y., has been decided upon. It will furnish nurses for the poor, for hospitals; will distribute food and clothing among all nationalities, and teach the principles of Christianity. Miss Gibson will be superintendent of the new institution.

—The sum of $100,000 has been set aside from the profits of the Methodist Book Concern, to be used for the relief of superannuated preachers. The Book Concern gives $15,000 yearly to the support of denominational interests, and in its one hundred years of existence it has contributed in this way the round sum of $1,600,000.

—The committees appointed by the Old and New School Reformed Presbyterian Churches to confer on the subject of the reunion of those bodies, met in the Eighth Street R. P. church, Pittsburgh, Jan. 31. There were present, representing the General Synod (New School), Revs. John Graham, J. F. Morton, D.D., J. H. Kendall, S. M. Ramsey, John Alford; elders J. W. Houston, James Patterson and Robert Abbott. Representing the Old School Synod were Revs. W. P. Johnston, W. J. Coleman, H. H. George, David McAllister, D.D., J. W. Sproull, D.D., A. Kilpatrick; elders A. P. Copeland and W. S. McAnlis. The General Synod submitted as a basis of union three propositions which embodied principles common to both, except in the matter of the privileges and duties of civil government, which was to become a question of forbearance, and was to be left to the individual conscience. On this the division was as sharp and clear as ever, with no disposition to yield an iota, on the part of those who spoke for the Old School Synod. The conference appointed a committee to call a convention, to be held as soon as practicable, in the interest of the union of the Psalm-singing churches.

—The Trustees of Wheaton College, at a meeting last Thursday, voted to begin the construction of an addition some 45 feet square on the east side of the present college building.

LODGE NOTES.

The net increase in Odd-fellowship during 1888-9, as near as members of the order can estimate the returns, was 27,000.

Justus H. Rathbone, the founder of the Knights of Pythias, besides writing the ritual of that order wrote also the ritual of the S. P. K. and the Monks of Arcadia.

The principles of our order are as holy and noble as the rites of any church, and in our endeavor to practice and carry out these principles, we prove the reality of Pythian Knighthood.—Pythian Advocate.

Odd-fellows lodge No. 5, of St. Louis, Mo., is worth about $100,000. It comes pretty near deserving the name of a "bloated bondholder," as it has over $75,000 in government bonds, and seems to have given up the charity business as unprofitable.

There are three branches in the "Forsters" lodge; "The Ancient Order of Shepherds," "The Knights of Sherwood Forest," uniformed rank, and "Companions of the Forest," ladies' rank. Each is distinct in organization from the "High Court" of the order.

The Northern Legion of Honor, at St. Louis, is in much distress because the mistress of a house of ill-fame had joined their lodge. She appears to have been a member in good standing every way, and it was not until her death, and the facts got into print, that the lodge circles manifested any agitation.

The Odd-fellows' Companion says: "Our thanks are tendered to Grand Secretary Childsey, of Ohio, for the following figures: Relief of brothers, $118,973.62; widows and orphans, $8,911.06; education of orphans, $95.78; special relief, $12,608.11; burying the dead, $20,427.69. Total relief, $161,016.26; expenses, $259,351.34. Total expenses, $420,367.60.

About fifty of the officers of the Sons of Veterans met at the Grand Pacific Hotel and organized an Officers' Association. Two camps have been armed and equipped as cavalry, and one as artillery. All the other camps are infantry. It was resolved to form an association which would hold monthly meetings for the purpose of hearing reports from the different camps.

In describing the banquet at the silver anniversary of the Chicago Knights of Pythias, the Knight says: "The banquet was laid in the adjoining hall, which was divided in the center by a screen. On one side of the screen sat the Knights and maidens, quaffing flagons of beer and chanting the praises of Gambrinus. On the other side were sixteen tables whereon a luxurious supper invited the dancers to oysters and champagne."

The Illinois State Register, published at Springfield, reports a singular decision of an Illinois judge, which virtually sets aside the supremacy of the state in favor of the secret lodge, as follows: "Maj. A. Orendorf and Hon. J. Otis Humphrey have returned from Lewistown, Fulton county, where they have been engaged since Monday in the argument of two cases of exceptional interest, involving the right of members of I. O. O. F. lodges to seek in civil courts a remedy for the denial of sick benefits by the lodge. The cases were those of James Hunter vs. Fulton Lodge, No. 51, of Lewistown, and Samuel Langstaff vs. Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15, of Canton. Both cases went off on demurrer and were dismissed by plaintiffs after long and exhaustive arguments on both sides. The court held 'that the members of a secret society, by the mere fact of their membership, become subject to the constitution, by-laws, rules, and all enactments of the society and of the grand bodies to which it is subordinate; that the rule of such lodge requiring the members to submit their claims for benefits to the tribunal of the order is a reasonable rule, and when members have submitted their claims, and the lodge in good faith has passed on and rejected them, they cannot afterward sue in the civil courts, but the finding of the tribunal is final.'"

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah Chapter's degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 75 cents; per dozen $7.00. All orders promptly filled by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CARE OF THE EAR.—In many cases foreign substances may be removed from the ear by fastening lint or a small linen rag to a stick or rod, moistening it with liquid glue or stiff mucilage, and inserting it in the ear so it will come in contact with the intruding substance, and, after a short time, gently withdrawing it and the attached substance. Insects in the ear have been removed by placing the head on the table with the ear to be relieved uppermost, and dropping into it sweet oil till the surface is distinctly visible. In a short time any living insect within will come to the surface, when a little skill will suffice to remove it. Insects breathe through pores or spiracles in various parts of the body, and are suffocated when the spiracles are filled with oil. Hence, in their discomfort they seek the surface for air.

TO CURE CRAMP.—A physician says: "When I have a patient who is subject to cramp, I always advise him to provide himself with a strong cord. A long garter will do if nothing else is handy. When the cramp comes on take the cord, wind it around the leg over the place that is cramped, and take an end in each hand and give it a sharp pull, one that will hurt a little. Instantly the cramp will cease, and the sufferer can go to bed assured it will not come again that night."

A doctor, prescribing for a baby, was sadly vexed by the officiousness of the child's feminine relatives, who tried all sorts of home remedies for it, saying in apology: "We thought if they did no good they would do no harm, doctor." At the end of his patience, the doctor one morning called for a bowl, a spoon and some fresh butter, and began stirring the latter round and round with an air of grave importance. The ladies gathered about him inquisitively, but he gave them no attention until at last, curiosity becoming rampant, they cried in chorus: "Oh, doctor, do tell us what you are going to do with the butter?" Here was his chance. Facing them solemnly he said: "I am going to grease the baby's elbow with it. It may not do any good, but it won't do any harm!"—London Tit-Bits.

A good way to get up a first-class case of indigestion is to eat a full meal when tired. This is a good way to invite other tormenting ills. Most people need all their vitality to digest all their food, and a nap for a while before dinner is healthful, and especially is it beneficial to dyspeptics, or those troubled with a torpid liver or other debilitating diseases.

A gentleman who took regular exercise on horseback, and who subsisted principally on cow's milk, was asked by a sick man who was taking a costly course of drug treatment, how he had such good health, and what doctor he employed. He replied, "My doctor is a horse and my apothecary is a cow."

Small children are usually fed too frequently. Prolong the interval between their meals and you will be surprised at the disappearance of much fretfulness.

If you have health and wish to preserve it, or if you have not and wish to regain it, go out every day and do some brisk walking.

Think only healthful thoughts. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

The torture of dyspepsia and sick headache, the sufferings of scrofula, the agonizing itch and pain of salt rheum, the disagreeable symptoms of catarrh, are removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP:

ITS HISTORY AND ITS WORK,

by President J. Blanchard. A neat pamphlet with cover. Price, postpaid, five cents. This address, as published in the Cynosure last fall, met with so much approval that the N. O. A. decided to issue it in convenient form for circulation. Until Feb. 1, 1889, any one sending 25 cents and a year's subscription for the Cynosure, may order twelve of the above pamphlets.

Good for every woman's need,
Whatsoever her clime or creed,
English, Yankee, Turk, or Swede,
Moslem, Spanish or Egyptian;
Known in every land and tongue,
Friend to women, old and young,
Round the world its praise is sung,
"Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, not a beverage; carefully compounded by an experienced physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in composition and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to ferment in the stomach and derange digestion.

As an invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon; being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the uterus, or womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

It is the only medicine for the cure of all those peculiar weaknesses and ailments incident to females, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, of giving satisfaction in every case or price ($1.00) will be promptly refunded. See guarantee printed on bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS
OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason. A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

WOOD ASHES.

The value of ashes as a fertilizer, depends principally upon the potash and phosphoric acid they contain. The percentage of these varies largely in ashes from different woods, varying from 10 per cent to 24 per cent for the former, and 4 per cent to 12 per cent for the latter. This would give not far from four to five pounds of potash to a bushel of ordinary mixed unleached ashes, which, reckoned at 4½ cents per pound—the present market value of potash in the commercial fertilizers—would give the value of a bushel as from 18 to 22½ cents. With due allowance for the phosphoric acid and the lime—the latter making up the largest part of the ashes—it may be seen that a bushel of unleached ashes is worth from 25 to 30 cents at the present time. Ashes, to secure the best results, should be thoroughly mingled with the soil. In this way the best physical as well as chemical effects are obtained. It is self-evident that crops requiring larger amounts of potash, will be the most benefited by the application of ashes, at the root crops, cabbage, etc. Forty to fifty bushels per acre is a good application.—American Agriculturist.

The wheat crop of 1889 was one of the largest known, while the crops of corn and oats are the largest on record.

A dispatch from Zanesville, O., says: "Half-grown grasshoppers are reported existing in great numbers in various parts of the country, and farmers are alarmed for the safety of the wheat."

The exports of wheat from southern European ports during the past week were 1,680,000 bushels, of which 1,360,000 bushels were to the United Kingdom and 320,000 bushels to the Continent.

The California Fruit Union adopted a memorial to Congress, requesting that the duty on prunes be increased from one to three cents per pound, and that the present duty on raisins, nuts and olives, be not reduced.

Senator Cullom has introduced a queer bill in the Senate, at the request of Pomono Grange, Coles county, Illinois. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall loan to the farmers of the United States money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, at 2 per cent per annum, and secure the payment by mortgage on the lands.

The Rock Island county Illinois Farmers' Institute, at its meeting in Milan, appointed a committee to co-operate with the Davenport Horticultural Society in an effort to establish a horticultural exhibition in either Davenport or Rock Island. The institute also passed a resolution indorsing the Hennepin Canal as a means of cheap transportation.

The fruit growers of southern Illinois held their annual meeting at Centralia lately. The reports presented showed that 1889 had been the most prosperous for the fruit growers in Illinois for many years. For 1889 there were shipped 77 regular fruit-train cars of strawberries from Centralia, 42 refrigerator cars, and 18 other cars, making a total of 137 cars, with 72,000 cases of berries. This was an increase over 1888 of 42,002 cases.

A crate of strawberries was shipped from Charleston, S. C., Jan. 13. They were grown in a field in the suburbs, and in the open air. Should the warm weather continue a week or more the annual crop will be ready for marketing. The strawberry season opens about March or April; but the fruit is now ripening rapidly, and the entire crop, which aggregates about 1,000,000 quarts, will be harvested before the first of March, unless a blizzard comes along.

The most phenomenal yield of corn ever produced in America has been awarded the prize of $500 offered by the American Agriculturist for the largest crop of shelled corn grown on one acre in 1889. The corn was within a fraction of 255 bushels, green weight, which shrunk to 239 bushels when kiln dried, and when chemically dried contained 217 bushels. The South Carolina State Board of Agriculture doubled the prize, making the award $1,000 in all. This

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G. W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

crop was grown by Z. J. Drake, of Marlboro county, S. C. It is nearly twice as large as the greatest authenticated crop ever before reported. The $500 awarded for the largest yield of wheat last year goes to Henry F. Burton, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for a yield of eighty bushels on one acre.

The Bloomington Eye says: Illinois is just entering upon another tiling boom, and this is one of the booms whose harvest is golden. Every farmer should encourage his neighbor to adopt it. Its use should be universal. It is the most profitable investment an Illinois farmer ever made. The tile beneath the farm is the best protection against the mortgage above that has yet been devised. There are some, but very few, Illinois farms that would not be benefited more than the cost by introducing tile beneath them. The wet season has no terrors to the man that owns a tile-drained farm.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The colored men's convention began its sessions at Washington Monday, with many prominent representatives of the race present. Colonel Perry H. Carson called the convention to order, and said, among other things, that the suppression of the Negro vote in the South had become the prime object of those who were lately in rebellion, and they had succeeded in their nefarious work so well as to give the Democratic party thirty-seven more electoral votes than it was entitled to. E. P. McCall was elected temporary president and Calvin Chase, of the Washington Bee, temporary secretary. J. M. Townsend, Recorder of the General Land Office, delivered an address of welcome, in the course of which he denounced the treatment of the Negro by both political parties. He attacked Senators Morgan and Butler for their course in seeking the deportation of the Negroes from this country, and predicted a brighter future for the colored race.

In the National House of Representatives on Monday the Smith-Jackson contested election case was disposed of by the unseating of Jackson (Democrat), the Republicans casting 166 affirmative votes—a Republican quorum. This is the first time at this session of Congress that the majority party have been enabled to gather together 166 members.

The news of the passage by one branch of the North Dakota legislature of a bill chartering and legalizing a lottery in that State, has attracted much attention in Washington official circles, in view especially of the telegraphic advices that this legislative action is in behalf of a branch of the Louisiana Lottery company, against which the postoffice department and the department of justice have been waging a contest for many years.

COUNTRY.

Pastors at Fargo, N. D., held a meeting Tuesday to protest against the lottery scheme now before the legislature. A committee of five was appointed to go to Bismarck and work against the passage of the measure.

The Baptist Book Concern has been organized at Louisville on a plan similar to the Methodist Book Concern, and will soon begin the publication of denominational books.

A special from Hecla, Mont., says that Lyon City, a mining camp, which lies at the base of Lyon Mountain, was completely buried by a snowslide Sunday morning. Two miners were killed and a large amount of property destroyed. The slide was three-quarters of a mile wide.

At Wichita, Kansas, Wednesday, in a case of attachment against 1,000 bushels of corn belonging to a farmer who alleged that he was using the grain for fuel, a justice decided that under the law exempting a year's fuel the attachment would not hold, thus practically declaring that corn is fuel.

The American Ax and Edge Tool Company, comprising all the ax and edge tool concerns in this country, was organized Wednesday at Pittsburgh, the capital stock being $4,000,000. It is said that all the plants have been purchased outright, but that they will be managed by their former owners.

At Rock Island, Ill., Wednesday, the Farmers' Institute of the Eleventh Congressional District passed a resolution praying for relief from the dressed-beef combine.

Andrew Carnegie, the steel king, has offered to spend not less than $1,000,000 for a central free library and branches for the city of Pittsburgh, provided the city will maintain them. The free library for Allegheny City, on which Mr. Carnegie has expended over $300,000, will be opened by President Harrison this week.

The mechanics and laborers, white and black, working on a railroad in Bibb county, Alabama, had a desperate fight in which two whites were killed and three wounded. The employment of Negroes by the contractors led to a strike, and there were numerous fights between whites and Negroes.

Chief Justice Shope, of the Supreme Court of Illinois, has granted a writ of error in the case of Fielden, Schwab and Neebe, the anarchists now in the penitentiary for complicity in the Haymarket riot. It was urged that when the Supreme Court reviewed the case and affirmed the decision of the lower court, the prisoners were not present. Their lawyer claims they had the right under the constitution to be in court. The Supreme Court of the United States will decide whether the prisoners really had that right. If they have, their condition will be only the worse, for the sentence of death will be given two of them.

A WASHINGTON SOUVENIR.—The portraits and testimonies of Washington and his Co-patriots in this number have been printed handsomely on a heavy sheet, and can be had for posting in public places or a home ornament, for 10 cents each. ORDER QUICK, in time for Washington's birthday, Feb. 22.

The House of Representatives on Thursday last adopted their new rules, and filibustering will have a tight rein hereafter. The fight for the privilege has been an obstinate one and wholly on party lines. Under the old rules members of one party could refuse to answer at roll call, and though sitting in their seats they were technically absent, and for this so-called lack of a quorum business could not be done. There was a contested seat: if the Republicans got it, they would have a quorum of their own. A Democrat held it. His friends, in order to put off the consideration of the case, resorted to obstruction and broke the quorum. Speaker Reed firmly took the case in hand and ruled that when members were in their seats they were not somewhere else, and a quorum was present. The fight that resulted is already a part of Congressional history. It was a memorable one and hotly contested for days, but Mr. Reed was master, the contested case was decided, the Republican seated, and the House is in good shape to do some work for the country. Mr. Reed's course has been severely criticised. But the fundamental law for deliberative or legislative bodies is "That the business of the House must go forward." Obstructionists and filibusters almost invariably transcend their rights when they begin a dilatory course. It is unreasonable to allow them to control. It is anarchy. Without respect to party issues the better judgment of men approves the course of firmness, and the courts have also whenever brought before them.

The New York and Chicago Presbyterians, which are among the most influential Presbyterian bodies, have voted for revision of the confession of faith of that church. This discussion, which is now commanding so wide attention, recalls an old story related of Lord Bolingbroke, the English statesman and author, and patron of Alexander Pope: "The famous infidel Bolingbroke was reading Calvin's 'Institutes of Theology' when Dr. Church, an Episcopal clergyman, called on him. Said he: 'I have been reading Calvin's Institutes; what do you think of them, Doctor?' 'Oh, my Lord,' he replied, 'we don't think about such antiquated stuff; we preach plain doctrines of virtue and morality, and have laid aside those abstruse points of grace.' 'Look you, Doctor,' said Bolingbroke, 'you know I don't believe the Bible to be a Divine revelation, but they who do can never defend it on any other principle but that doctrine. To say truth, I have been at times almost persuaded to believe it upon this view of things; and there is one argument which goes far with me in behalf of its authenticity; that is, that belief in it exists even when it is committed to the care of such as you, who pretend to believe it and yet deny the only principle upon which it is defensible.'"

The intensity of political strife, and the subordination of all public interests to mere party ends, is illustrated not only in our national Congress, but especially in State legislations. The mere fact of a Democratic majority in the State senate of Ohio was regarded as sufficient warrant for turning out Lieutenant Governor Sampson, and seating his rival. The legislature of Montana, after spending a number of weeks in affecting an organization, during which all sorts of party trickery had, on both sides, been resorted to, is finally broken up, to the great detriment of the public interests, by every Democratic member of the upper house going out of the State. Unless there can be an abatement of party spirits, and a reform in the methods of legislation, we might as well be under the autocrat of Russia. We could at least know where to look for the source of authority.

It is said the final battle-ground of the State lottery business will be in the Louisiana legislature next May, as the charter of this last bulwark of the lottery in this country soon expires. The effort to hold the new State of North Dakota as a "last ditch" for this nefarious business collapsed early last week, after gaining a strength that amazed the whole country. A bill to legalize the Louisiana fraud had passed one branch of the legislature and had a large majority in the other. The governor might veto, but it could have been passed over his head. Suddenly the bottom dropped out of the affair. The reason why is not yet public, but is surmised to be an inquiry going on by government detectives to learn why sensible people as are supposed to live in North Dakota should be so bewitched as even to call out the formal protest of Board of Trade gamblers in our cities. The fledgling statesmen, fearing the secret influence by which they had been seduced might be made public, were stricken with sudden fear of a judgment to come. The lottery was established in Louisiana to raise money for a charity hospital. A moiety of its immense stealings has annually been given to sustain the institution. It was a golden bribe that dazzled the Dakotans, but it was simply a cash payment without any flavor of charity to relieve the bitter taste.

The municipal election in Salt Lake City last week resulted in a victory for Americanism over Mormonism by 800 majority. The followers of Brigham Young were overwhelmed and crushed. They have strength enough left, however, to threaten to take the question into court and carry it up to the highest tribunal. This is nothing but a threat. They have no reason to hope for success in such an issue. Only on the 3rd instant the Supreme Court confirmed the constitutionality of the test oath intended to prevent Mormons from voting, and the crushing decision of Judge Anderson, in the late inquiry concerning the naturalization of alien Mormons, must stand. The opinion of the Supreme Court reads: "Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of the United States and of Idaho. They tend to destroy the marriage relations, to disturb the peace of families, to degrade woman and debase man. Few crimes are more pernicious to the best interests of society and receive more general or more deserved punishment. To call their advocacy a tenet of religion is to offend the common sense of mankind. To extend exemption from punishment for such crimes would be to shock the moral judgment of the community.... While legislation for the establishment of a religion is forbidden, and its free exercise committed, it does not follow that everything which may be so called can be tolerated. Crime is not the less excuse because sanctioned by what any particular sect may designate as religion."

THE NEGRO PROBLEM—WHAT OF IT?

BY REV. G. M. ELLIOTT.

Wade Hampton says that the Negro has been a bone of contention in American politics for fifty years. The Senator might have gone farther back than that. The Negro has been the occasion of trouble in American politics ever since the country decided to hold him as a slave. And now, though nominally free, he is yet the occasion of much discord in our national life.

He is not the cause of so much trouble as is alleged; though no careful observer of the times will deny that he is the occasion of much unpleasantness in the South. Divine government is so constituted that sin is often its own punishment. When men fail to conform to the requirements of God's law, there must be punishment somewhere, somehow and at some time. The difference between this punishment in a nation and in an individual, is that in the former it must always come in this world, for nations, as such, have no existence in the next world. National accountability is therefore confined to this world. A nation being a moral person is responsible for its sins. Sin in a nation must be punished.

Slavery was a sin. It was a sin of which both individuals and the nation were guilty. The nation, as such, is still to a certain extent guilty of the sin of slavery. Sin is not forgiven until there is repentance. We see no reason why this law does not apply to nations as well as to individuals. The Bible clearly teaches that a sinner cannot hope for pardon and forgiveness until he has repented of his sins.

Now it is plain that a nation is a person. Can it then be forgiven in the sight of God without repentance? There has not only been no national repentance for the great sin of slavery, but there has been no specific confession that it was a sin before God and a crime against man. Even the churches that were identified with it have not yet repented. It is only here and there that an individual who was a slave-holder can be found who has sincerely repented of his participation in that iniquitous system.

Because of this state of things God is, in various ways, by a lingering retribution, visiting for the sin of slavery. The nation, and particularly the Southern people, are eating the fruit of their own ways. The ignorance, superstition, vices and numberless improprieties of the once enslaved race, are now pricks in the eyes and thorns in the flesh of those that enslaved them. These people are like a man who is constantly suffering from a diseased and broken constitution, the result of his own folly. Every pain reminds him of his former wickedness. Every day, in some way, the people of the South are reminded of their former wickedness. And the end has not yet been reached. As freedom grows older, as education advances, as wealth increases, there will be reminders still more potent.

Why is there such a stir and restlessness throughout the entire South respecting the Negro? Surely it is not because the Negro himself is such a troublesome creature. Doubtless there is much discomfort that rises out of the unhappy condition of the freedmen, such as will be felt in living in the midst of any uncultured people; but this state of things was not so offensive in slavery days. It is true it was more under the control of the master than now, but if they would use their influence to teach the Negro, the situation might be constantly changing for the better. There seems, therefore, to be the following causes for this restlessness:

1. A troubling conscience.

We repeat that sin is its own punishment. We are uncomfortable in the presence of those whom we have wronged. This uneasiness is felt even where the injured party has forgiven us. The people of the South know and feel that they have wronged the Negro by a long and grievous oppression. They cannot get away from this thought. It is a ghost that constantly haunts them. They must confess that there is such a thing as retribution. And though they do not know just how it will come, yet there is an inward sense that it will come in some way, and at some time. This causes a restlessness. They must admit the fact. Conscience is God's internal scourge, constantly lashing the transgressor.

2. The general progress of the race is another cause of anxiety on the part of those who oppressed him. The Negro race is advancing in intelligence, in wealth, in moral influence, in political power, in physical courage, and increasing most wonderfully in numbers. In short, this race is a rising power. However, they do not put forth any special effort to make this power felt. Internal strength is power. Though the colored people are not yet awakened to a sense of their inherent strength, yet they have strength, and they are every day growing stronger. Their former owners see this growing strength more readily than the colored people themselves. To them it is a matter of alarm. Hence their restlessness. There are no malicious actions on the part of the Negro to warrant this uneasiness. All the reports about his uprising, and arming himself, and preparing for a conflict are simply bosh. He disturbs no one unless he is disturbed, and then he endures much before he strikes back. The observing and thinking white people know this. The most important stirring that is going on among the colored people is in the way of building school-houses and churches, educating their children, buying land and doing those things that tend to their material prosperity. Are these things causes of alarm? To none except those who have wronged the Negro, and are opposed to such progress on his part.

3. The numerical increase of this people is another cause of alarm. It is stated (and we believe, after some personal examinations into the matter that it rests on good grounds,) that the colored people are increasing at the rate of 6,000 per day. This fact itself is alarming. The whites, with all their immigration and natural increase, fall behind them. There seems to be a special providence in this. In Pharaoh's day the more the people were oppressed, the more they were increased. Now what is significant about this increase? It certainly means political power in those sections where the Negroes are in the majority. But intelligence is necessary to the exercise of this power. At present the whites have the intelligence; hence they have the power, notwithstanding they are in the minority. But the hundreds of schools and colleges in the South are rapidly changing ignorance into intelligence. What the issue will be when this change is completely wrought is the great "bugbear thought" with the white people of the South. To them this is the frightful "Negro Problem." They realize that the present regime cannot continue when the masses are leavened with education.

Now what is the solution of this whole matter? There can be but one answer. Sound Christian education on the part of both races. Let the members of both races be possessed of the true fear of God. Let the "Golden Rule" be strictly adhered to and there need be no fears of any future conflict. May we hope that the whites of the South will learn to practice the "Golden Rule?" If they will we can bespeak the course of the colored people.

Selma, Ala.

JOSEPH RITNER,
Governor of Pennsylvania.

Governor Ritner, in response to a communication from the Legislature of Pennsylvania, prepared a vindication of General Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents:

1. That in 1768 Washington had ceased regular attendance on the lodge.
2. That in 1798, shortly before his death, his opinions were the same as thirty years before when thirty-six years old.
3. That he was never "Grand Master" or "Master" of any particular lodge.
4. That in 1781, as appears by the record of King David's lodge, Newport, Rhode Island, it was not agreeable to Washington to be addressed even as a private Mason.
5. That all the letters said to be written by Washington to lodges are spurious.

CREED REVISION AND PAPAL IDOLATRY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In connection with the discussion among the Presbyterian bodies, the words of the deceased Rev. William Nevins, of Baltimore, in his "Thoughts on Popery," seemed so appropriate that I think they ought to be published at this time, and at all other times also. On this account I have copied them from his works for the Cynosure. There is a deep significance in this argument, since the argument which proves that Papists practice idolatry will also apply to Freemasons.

The third objection made by the Presbyterians in their Revisionary Conference is to the passage in Section 3 of the 24th Chapter of their present "Confession of Faith," in which occurs this sentence:

"Such as profess the true reformed religion should not marry with infidels, Papists, or other idolaters," etc.

The objection of the Revisionists is to classing the Papists, or Roman Catholics, with idolaters.

On this subject I wish to write a few words, to prove the Pope of 1833 (and, of course, all his "infallible" successors) an idolater.

This may seem very uncharitable. What, some will say, charge the Pope with being an idolater! What do you mean?

I mean just what I say, that this boasted head of the church, and self-styled vicar of Christ, Pope Gregory XVI., residing at Rome, ascribed divine attributes, and paid divine honors to a creature, even to a human being, a partaker in our mortality and sin; and if that is not idolatry, I don't know what idolatry is. If that is not idolatry, the worship of the golden calf was not—the worship of "the host of heaven" was not—the worship of the gods of Hindooism is not. What truer definition of idolatry can be given than that it is an ascribing of divine attributes, and a paying of divine honors to a creature? It does not matter what the creature is, whether it be the angel nearest the throne of God or an onion that grows in the garden, such as they of Egypt once worshiped. It is its being a created thing—it is its being not God, that makes the service done it idolatry.

But can I make good this charge against the successor of St. Peter, as they call him? If I cannot, I sin not merely against charity, but against truth. But I can establish it. Nor will I derive the proof from the Pope's enemies; nor will I look for it in the histories of the Papacy. The Pope himself shall supply me with the proof. Out of his own mouth will I judge him. If his own words do not convict him of idolatry, believe it not. But if they do, away with the objection that it is an offense against charity to speak of such a thing as the Pope's being an idolater. My charity "rejoiceth in the truth." The charge can be uncharitable only by being untrue. It is too late in the day, I trust, for idolatry to find an apologist. But to the proof. Perhaps you suppose it is some obscure Pope of the night of times—the dark ages—that I am going to prove an idolater. No, it is a Pope of the nineteenth century. He is the idolater, and here are his own words in proof of it:

They are a part of the circular or encyclical letter sent forth by him on entering his office, and addressed to all Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops and Bishops. The letter may be found in the Laity's Directory, and has been extensively published without any of its statements being contradicted. In it the Pope calls upon all the clergy to implore "that she (the Virgin Mary) who has been, through every great calamity, our Patroness and Protectress, may watch over us writing to you, and lead our mind by her heavenly influence to those counsels which may prove most salutary to Christ's flock!" Is comment necessary? Observe, he recognizes not God as having been their defense, but her as having been their protectress in past calamities, and directs the clergy to pray to her to continue to watch over them! As contrast is one of the principles on which ideas are associated, I was reminded, in reading this, of the 121st Psalm, in which the writer speaks of the One "that keepeth Israel." But, according to the Pope, it is the Virgin Mary that keeps Israel; and he speaks of her as exerting a heavenly influence on the mind. I always thought it was the exclusive prerogative of Jehovah to have access to the mind, and to exert an influence upon it; and I cannot but think now that the Pope must err in this matter, though he speaks ex cathedra. I cannot believe he was exactly infallible when he wrote that letter.

But you have not heard the worst of it yet. In the same letter he says: "But that all may have a successful and happy issue, let us raise our eyes to the most blessed Virgin Mary, who alone destroys heresies, who is our greatest hope, yea, THE ENTIRE GROUND OF OUR HOPE!" The underscoring is mine, but the words are the Pope's.

Now, just look at this. Did you ever hear anything like it? Observe what Mary is to be and to do, and what the clergy are exhorted to do. The Pope's religion cannot be the oldest, as they pretend. It is not the religion of the Psalms. In the 121st Psalm the writer says: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord." And in the 123d: "Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens. Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our eyes wait upon the Lord our God until that he have mercy upon us." But the Pope says: "Let us raise our eyes to the most blessed Virgin Mary." There is the difference between the Pope and the Psalmist. Protestants in this case side with the Psalmist; and in this particular our religion is not only older than Luther, but older even than the Pope.

I would inquire of the reader whether these prayers which the Pope would have the whole church address to the Virgin Mary are not precisely such as are proper to be addressed to God, and which others do address to him? Do they not ask of her just what ought to be asked of Him, and what he alone can give? After asking such things as the Catholics are directed to ask of the Virgin Mary, what remains to be asked of God in prayer? And is not this putting a creature in the place of God? Indeed, is it not putting God quite out of the question? The eyes are raised in prayer to the Virgin, and they are lifted no higher. There they fix. Is not this idolatry? And you see he is not satisfied himself with being an idolater, but he wants the entire clergy, and of course the whole Catholic church, to join him in his idolatry!

I wish the Pope had explained how the blessed Virgin destroys heresies. He says she does it, and she alone. I should think it rather belonged to "the Spirit of Truth" to destroy heresies, and to "guide into all truth." But no, says the Pope, the Spirit of Truth has nothing to do with it. It is all done by the blessed Virgin! She alone destroys heresies!"

The Catholics complain that we call their Pope Anti-christ. But I would appeal to any one to say if he is not Anti-christ who, overlooking Christ altogether, says of another that "she is our greatest hope, yea, the entire ground of our hope?" Is not that against Christ? The Bible speaks of him as "our hope" (1 Tim. 1: 1); yea, of him as our only hope; for "other foundation can no man lay that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3: 11). "Neither is there salvation in any other" (Acts 4: 12). It would seem from this that Christ is the ground of hope. But not so, says the Pope; the blessed Virgin is "the entire ground of our hope." By the way, I should not be surprised if that hope should disappoint its possessor. Now, is not the Pope Anti-christ? Well, if he is an idolater and Anti-christ, ought he to be adhered to? What sort of a body must that be which has such a head? I think I should not like to be a member of it. And I must confess that I am against such a person having any more power in our free, enlightened and happy America than he has already. Pray, let us not, after having broken the chains of political thrall-dom, come in bondage to idolatry. Let us not, after having extricated our persons from the power of a king, subject our minds to the spiritual domination of a Pope. WILLIAM NEVINS.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM.

The Civil war and its political results, the emancipation and enfranchisement of the ex-slaves, are matters of history and of law—a history and a law written in patriot blood. But the political reconstruction of the South, which it was hoped would bring peace, contentment and prosperity to all, has not materially altered the public sentiment of the South in reference to the Negro. In other words, public sentiment in the South has not been reconstructed. The political equality of the blacks with the whites, has made the presence of the former obnoxious to the latter, and the feeling of disgust and hatred is intensifying. The two elements are not easily compatible; their amalgamation is hard to accomplish. The spirit of the South in its practical disfranchisement of the "nigger" is determined and bitter.

But the country will no longer endure the defiance of the Constitution. In this crisis Southern leaders are coming forward with various schemes, all practically saying the South wants to get rid of the Negro. Several U. S. Senators are gravely proposing several Utopian and unpractical schemes of colonization, schemes that could only be the product of wild visionaries under desperate political pressure. Some propose to cause the Negro to emigrate to the North and West; others propose sending them back to Liberia, and still others want to purchase the island of Cuba and establish the Negro there! No doubt the South is anxious to get rid of the Negro.

But these colonization schemes are impracticable and would not solve the problem if they were put into execution. Mere expedients are no cure for great social evils. To shift the plaster does not remove the sore. If a man has a carbuncle on his back, you cannot remove the carbuncle by poulticing his arm, even if by so doing you could remove the carbuncle from his back to his arm. The Negro question will not be solved by schemes of colonization, whether forced or free. The only way to solve the question is to put in operation the post-bellum amendments to the Federal Constitution, both in letter and spirit, securing to the ex-slave, as well as to his white brother, the inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and giving him all the political, social and commercial prerogatives guaranteed to him by the people of the United States in their fundamental law.—Evangelical Messenger.

RICHARD RUSH,
U. S. Attorney General, Secretary of State and of the Treasury.

"Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection.' Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth."

SECRET SOCIETIES AS A SYSTEM.

This discussion has turned mainly upon the character of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship; and, indeed, chiefly upon the former. The reason is that Masonry is the prolific parent of the whole brood of secret orders, and uses them all for the accomplishment of its purposes. It is older than any of the others, except the order of the Jesuits. According to Masonic authority it originated, in its present form, in Feb., 1717, in a tavern or grogshop in London. Odd-fellowship took its rise in the present century, about 1812, and, as the encyclopædia says, was a "humble imitation of Freemasonry." Within the last twenty-five years, secret societies have increased until they are now computed at over two hundred. They are formed for every purpose; the spirit of secrecy seems to be in the air like a contagion or plague. This indicates the presence of some general cause or agent. This agent, I believe, is the "god of this world," whose kingdom consists in darkness and secrecy. "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd." (John 3: 20.) The grand business and art of Satan is to furnish men with a false religion, and to cherish in their hearts a delusive hope of salvation. The wicked he "leads captive at his will" into these delusions, and many of the godly he ensnares and entangles to their hurt. His pretence is to unite men in a society whose motto shall be the "Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," while the design is to oppose and hinder (for he well knows he cannot destroy) the kingdom of the incarnate, crowned and enthroned Son of God, our ever blessed and glorious Redeemer, Jesus Christ.

The fact that these older societies stand behind and cunningly inspire and direct the minor orders appears strikingly in an advertisement which recently appeared in a Chicago paper. An appeal is made for agents who wish to make from $5 to $25 per day in organizing a new society, the "Chosen Friends," one of the conditions being that the organization shall always take place in a Masonic or Odd-fellow's hall.

It is an obviously impossible task to discuss the character of two hundred secret societies. It is sufficient to say they have all one principle—selfishness. The members are banded together wholly for self-interest, without even the pretence of anything else. They may occasionally do an act of charity, but this is not their professed design. All their benefits are intended for their members and those dependent on them; and for these the recipients are expected to pay value in full, and something beyond for salaries of officers, expenses of halls, and for display. The combination of the sound and vigorous, and of those in the prime of life for the purpose of mutual assistance, while the aged, the weak and sickly are rigorously excluded, involves a principle not in accordance with the law of God, nor with the spirit of the Gospel, and is a virtual conspiracy against the rights of others.

Secret societies are not all equally sinful or equally harmful. Many of them, probably, do not inculcate a false religion. But all are equally unnecessary, and equally selfish, and the tendency of each and every one is evil. They all belong to a system, or kingdom—to a secret empire, which aims at universal ascendancy. An old writer, Traill, observes that "everything in this world that is not comprehended in the 'mystery of godliness,' which centers in Jesus Christ, is comprehended in the 'mystery of iniquity,' which centers in Satan." This witness is true, and applies with fearful force to those orders which, like Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, inculcate a false religion. These two leading orders, though diverse in some respects, are one in this respect: their religion is that of the proud, self-righteous human heart, unenlightened by the Word of God, unregenerated by the Holy Spirit. It has no sacrifice for sin, no divine righteousness, and no Intercessor within the veil; it is a stranger to the "covenant of promise," and is under the covenant of works and its curse. Those who trust in it will never enter within the gates into the city of God, nor eat of the tree of life, nor drink of the river which proceeds from the throne of God and of the Lamb, nor sit with Christ on his throne, nor sing "to him who loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Whatever they think themselves to be, or others think them to be, they will at last find themselves "without, where are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

They exclude Jesus from their society on earth, and he will exclude them from his society in heaven. The dislike is mutual and cordial, and the separation will be eternal.—Rev. J. P. Lytle, D. D., in the United Presbyterian.

THE POPE AND INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. W. T. Stead writes from Rome: "There is a growing feeling on the part of the Catholics that the Pope ought to be Chief Justice of Christendom. Nothing was more touching than the prayer of the French peasants and laborers to the Chief Pastor to interpose to free the toiler from the crushing burden of the armed peace. In Spain also of late there has been the manifestation of a similar desire, and in this respect the laity but reflect the aspiration of their spiritual chief. Ever since he succeeded in composing the disputes between Germany and Spain, about the Caroline Islands, he has been haunted by a pious ambition to compose all other national disputes in the same fashion. Now that Mr. Henry Richard is dead, nothing would surprise me less than to see his place taken by some eloquent friar. Here also, if the Pope could have his way, the Catholic vote everywhere would be cast solid in favor of International Arbitration. This may not be the way of peace, but it indicates an anxiety to seek peace and insure it, which I note with gratitude."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12, 1890.

One of the most far-reaching and stringent measures against liquor that ever attempted to be enacted, made its appearance in the U. S. Senate on Monday last. It was introduced by Mr. Platt, the junior Senator from Connecticut. Indeed, this is its second appearance really, for the Senator says it is the very same bill that he introduced last year, only it did not receive the attention it deserved from the committee, and was never reported. This session, he says, he is confident it will meet with a better reception, and that some action will be taken on it.

This measure absolutely prohibits the manufacture, sale, or importation into the District of Columbia of any kind of intoxicating liquor, including wine, beer, ale, porter and cider, when it is to be drunk on the premises where sold. It even provides against treating, making it a penal offence to give it away, and in this respect adds to the prohibitory clauses the gemane part of the anti-treating laws which exist in several of the States. The only use for which liquor can be sold is for medicinal and scientific purposes. To secure it, one must have the prescription of a reputable physician, and the druggist who sells it is obliged to write the name of the purchaser across the prescription, and at the end of each month send them to the District Commissioners for inspection. In this way it is proposed to compass the difficulty which has confronted prohibitory efforts in Kansas, for instance, where the drug store with a liquor prescription counter flourishes to such a distressing extent.

Then, when spirits are wanted for mechanical or scientific purposes, the purchaser is required to make an affidavit stating the particular purpose for which it is to be used, before its sale can be legalized. These affidavits, like physicians' prescriptions, must be sent to the Commissioners each month. Even the most stringent regulations are thrown around the sale of wine for sacramental purposes. Only the pastor of a church is allowed to purchase it, and then only on a written application. For the violation of any of its provisions, a penalty of from $100 to $500 fine, and not more than six months' imprisonment are provided.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. again want Congress to pass an act providing for a vote on the liquor question in the District of Columbia, and Congressman Cutcheon of Michigan has agreed to introduce such a bill. In a recent temperance address here, General Cutcheon said that there was but one standard of temperance, and that was total abstinence from everything injurious in its effect. He said each reform must be an individual reform, because it is an individual disease. Education was the thing needed in temperance reform. The best work done was with the children. The habit once formed grows like a spider's web to the cable. General Hamilton once said, if you would reform a man, first reform his grandmother. The speaker said that prohibition in the District of Columbia must be gained by agitation and the ballot; that a general prohibitory liquor law, if passed by Congress, would not be enforced; that public sentiment is law in this country, and that public sentiment must be created to make and enforce law. He expects good temperance legislation from the present Congress.

The House of Representatives is now engaged in quietly debating its new code of rules, and every citizen interested in what Congress may do this session, is doubtless anxious to see it adopt these rules as soon as possible, and settle down to some real business.

Delegates to the recent colored convention held in this city, hold conflicting opinions as to the outcome of the conference. Mr. Taylor, ex-minister to Liberia, thinks it was a complete failure, and that it demonstrated beyond all question the incompetency of the Negro for self-government. On the other hand, Dr. Turner of Georgia, thinks much good was accomplished, although excitement, confusion and disorder prevailed. He says it was a difficult body to handle, but so is the House of Representatives. Perry H. Mason, the colored saloon-keeper and Republican "boss," was a leading spirit of the convention; and so disorderly were the proceedings that presiding elder Johnson of the Metropolitan Methodist church, where the meetings were held, was compelled to declare publicly that unless there was more decency and order and more respect for the house of God, the police would be called in to clear the building. Eight sergeants-at-arms were barely able to prevent personal encounters.

Colored conventions have been held of late in Chicago, Atlanta, and Greenville, S. C. These meetings are a good sign. They mark a rising manhood and independence in the colored people. If the Washington meeting was held under bad influences and failed in some respects, it yet remains an example to be avoided hereafter. Some of these conventions are praised by the Southern press for their dignity and moderation. *

Attorney General, and candidate for President.

"If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Rare books added to the Boston Public Library—The color line crossed in Springfield—What Dr. Gordon thinks of theater-going—The rum-sellers of New Hampshire—A gagged press—A movement with a Jesuitic look—How one New England clergyman is fighting the lodge.

There have been some rare books recently added to the Boston Public Library—among them the "Massachusetts Psalmster," printed in Boston in 1709, and Mourt's "Journal of the English Plantation at Plymouth," published in London in 1622; but Mather's "Epistle to the Christian Indians" in the Indian text, published in Boston in 1700, was secured by the Lenox Library. Not a man living to-day can read the language in which Eliot preached and wrote, yet who shall say his labors were wasted? The last surviving descendant of the tribe is said to be still living in Connecticut, and the only indelible impress they seem to have left is in the names of our hills and rivers, and in our favorite New England dinner of baked beans—if the tradition is true that it originated among the children of the forest. Some of the colonists, during one of their starving times, tasted the novel dish, and finding it exceedingly palatable the recipe was generally adopted, and thus it became one of the established institutions of Yankee land. It is quite possible that our debt to the Indians is larger and more varied than most people think.

The color line has been successfully crossed in the Springfield public schools, by the appointing of a young colored woman, whose father was born a slave on a Virginia plantation, to be teacher in one of the primary departments. She teaches thirty little white children, and her fitness for the work is universally acknowledged.

The recent death of Mrs. Prudence Crandall-Philleo, in Kansas, aged 86, emphasizes the change that has been wrought in public sentiment in half a century. She was born in New Hampshire of Quaker parentage, and the granite of her native hills must have entered into the character of a woman who could brave not only social ostracism but the terrors of a jail and the fury of a mob in her Christ-like efforts to uplift an oppressed race. A life-size painting of Miss Crandall has now an honored place in Cornell University. This heroine of the past kept posted on all the topics of the day, and took a very lively interest in the W. C. T. U. work. She even made a public address not long before her death, to crowds assembled in a grove at an old settlers' reunion, her voice being strong and clear, and her remarks showing no failure in mental power—another proof, if any is needed, that a life spent in promoting practical righteousness is conducive to the continuance of one's faculties long after the period allotted by the psalmist has been passed.

The question of theater-going has been publicly discussed by Drs. Adams and Gordon, two of Boston's most popular preachers, with rather damaging results to the theater; but Dr. Gordon drove the nail home when he said in closing: "I would rather all the young people in my church should go to the theater once a week than that they should bring the theater into the church once a year." Neither the theater, the card-table nor the lodge can harm the church so long as she keeps them outside of her pale, and sternly refuses them either her fellowship or her countenance.

New Hampshire rum-sellers are trying to make it appear that Gov. Goodell's proclamation isn't going to amount to much, but they would not indulge in half the talk and bluster they do if they were not following the renowned example of the boy who always whistled when going past a graveyard, to keep up his courage. The late terrible North End fire, in which thirteen lives were lost, was justly laid by one of the city pastors who preached on that subject last Sunday to rum, and individually to every man, from the President downwards, who refuses to take a political stand against it.

"The girls' schools of Boston were on our streets, Feb. 7, 1890, drilling with wooden guns." I quote the above item from the American, which adds: "A novel and strange sight. A shadow of coming events cast across our pathway to-day." This training of children, and especially of girls, to arms, does not say much for our boasted progress; or if so, it looks like a progress backwards. Heaven help our country in the evil days before us when the shadow becomes a terrible reality.

Edith O'Gorman, the escaped nun, is lecturing in Boston to large and enthusiastic audiences, yet the daily papers of the city are silent thereon as the grave. The slavish subserviency of the Boston daily press to Rome is simply shameful. It is enough to make any true New Englander hang his head. Even the public libraries are in the hands of the Jesuits, and the employes at their bidding hinder in every possible way the circulation of Protestant books which tell the truth about Rome. Bishop Williams, in the Pilot two weeks ago, ordered all good Catholics to boycott the Herald if it ventured to publish any more anti-Romanist news, and that paper, the only daily in the city which had dared to be independent, preferred to bow slavishly to the papal mandate to keeping its liberty and losing over quarter of a million dollars. As an instance in point, it promptly suppressed the scandalous and disgraceful fact that Secretary of State James G. Blaine, while attending the funeral of his daughter, Mrs. Coppinger, in a Roman Catholic church, was hissed because he omitted to bend the knee on entering and cross himself. So flagrant an outrage in such a time and place, and offered to a father mourning a double bereavement, shows what Catholicism is better than volumes of argument.

The movement now on foot to secure the passage of a city ordinance making the giving away of a handbill, circular or advertisement on the streets of Boston a criminal offense, has a very Jesuitic look about it. When it will lodge a Christian man or woman in jail to distribute a handbill announcing a religious meeting, I do not see how we can any longer sing on Forefathers' day, except by way of satire,

"They've left unstained what there they found—Freedom to worship God."

The lodge will gladly shake hands with rum and Romanism to get such an ordinance passed—just as these unholy powers united their forces two years ago to secure the imprisonment of evangelist Wm. F. Davis.

Rev. L. W. Frink of West Boylston, Mass., has bearded the lion in his den by attacking one of the most popular secret orders in his vicinity, the Grange, through the columns of the local paper. The reply was anonymous, of course—I have noticed that defenders of the lodge are very apt to hide their light modestly behind either no name or a nom de plume—but the only thing worth noticing is the conclusion, in which they cordially invite their opponent to a meeting of the District Grange, “that he may be able from personal observation to decide whether there is anything done there which is unbecoming to the Christian character.” The funny part of this invitation is in the proviso which states that “the meeting will be precisely in character the counterpart of all our meetings, except that being open to the public all forms in opening and closing will be dispensed with.” That is, all the secret work will be omitted; but as it is precisely this secret work that Rev. Mr. Frink is opposing, and not a meeting of farmers to talk over their agricultural interests, what will such personal observation amount to? How can he judge Hamlet with Hamlet left out? Such unblushing effrontery can be found nowhere save in false religions. The lodge and Rome are both brazen-fronted.

Mr. Frink's answer “hews to the line.” He quotes from the Grange ritual, completely refuting their sophistry, and clenches his arguments with Scripture. He is fighting nobly for the cause of truth. Let all the anti-secretists of New England and of the country at large hold up his hands with prayer. He is fighting for the liberty of the American pulpit, and in his wake other men of God will step out with faith and courage to proclaim a whole Gospel, and denounce every false system that would teach another way of salvation than through Christ.

BANISH THE GREEK-LETTER FRATERNITIES.

We trust that the management of Harvard College will not longer consider it necessary for her students, while acquiring the requisite amount of learning and culture, to be permitted, even if heretofore without official sanction, to maintain societies, the initiation to which includes such dangerous and injurious performances as jumping blind-folded into water of unknown depth, especially in the winter season. Slow murder is liable to be the result of this style of treatment, and is no one responsible for the continuance of like doings, year after year?

We learn that some years ago, a student at Harvard, while being initiated, was walked a long distance blind-folded and told that at the end of his journey he must jump off a precipice. Whether in reality it was deep or not we do not know, but the effect in advance was on the presumption that a dangerous leap was to be taken. Before reaching the place the young man became unconscious, and was so seriously affected mentally that he was obliged to leave college, and for years was afflicted with trouble in the brain.

When the college is made to pay heavily for damage to health and happiness thus incurred, the managers will find a way to break up the societies that require such reckless initiation ceremonies as described. Parents are also at fault for not insisting that this style of treatment in vogue among students shall be prohibited. It is natural of course for those who have suffered to like to see the torments applied to the uninitiated, but the risk to health, and possibly to life, is too great for this relic of barbarism to be continued amid the environments of enlightened and cultured Massachusetts.—Public Good.

TOO MANY SOCIETIES.

“We have too many societies. We are splitting up into little cliques and clubs. We are shutting out the church from her real position. Sometimes it seems as if every tenth woman in the church had her own little society. And each one is independent—wonderfully and fearfully so. To touch the head or the tail of it makes wonderful commotion all through the church.

“We believe in woman's work in the church, but there is too much of woman's work, and man's work, too, outside of the church, in little societies that are only barnacles on the grand ship which Christ and the apostles set afloat. Much of the outside work performed by members of our churches is simply drawing away so much strength from the real Christian work of the church. Our churches are being split up into little societies, to the injury of the cause of Christ. The church having been split into halves, quarters, is then shivered into atoms. Strength is lost, not gained. Momentum is decreased, not increased. There is no proportionate increase in power—numbers increase, but strength does not. The hair-splitting of collections tends to less honest giving. There are tables of figures that might be studied with profit, showing the bad effect of this infinitesimal splitting into fragments in giving and in work.”

“From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons.”

MUST OUR GOVERNMENT KEEP LODGE SECRETS?

(Correspondence of the Pittsburgh Press, Dec. 26, 1889.)

The reports from Washington the other day regarding the conference between Mr. Campbell and Secretary Windom reveals the most suggestive feature of the Jeannette case which has yet appeared. The conference was secret because the matters involved related to the Universal Confederation of Labor, and must not be made public; they could, therefore, be communicated to the secretary of the treasury only in private. “Affairs of the organization were submitted to him which were strictly private, and would not be submitted to a public trial. The defendants would rather stand convicted than to have these matters, which are not public business, brought out in court,” says the report.

Not long ago, on the trial of a case here in Pittsburgh between a citizen and certain members of one of these secret societies, the judge excused the witness from testifying of any matter which had come to him as a secret of the order to which he belonged or which by its rules he was bound to keep secret. It was not believed to be a correct ruling by most of the legal profession. But that is not the question here. Are not secret societies dangerous to the public? is the question. The state or commonwealth is the sovereign organization of the whole people. It embraces all classes, trades and professions. The central idea of the commonwealth is unity of the whole—all to be equal before the law and on equal footing as to every right which the constitution is intended to secure.

The increase of secret societies within the last twenty years, the separate organization of classes, and the efforts of each class to obtain legislation for its own exclusive benefit bodes no good to the general public. This special and class legislation is sought through secret combination, the members of the society taking an extra judicial oath of secrecy. The result is that what ought to be a united people is becoming separated into segments, each organization for itself and against all the other people of the commonwealth. The result is that those who do not organize and combine together for their own protection are left at the mercy of these combinations, and it is the honest, industrious, well-doing class who do not combine to promote their own pecuniary interest. I may say it is only secret societies for the promotion of the pecuniary interest of the members which are objectionable, and it is the element of secrecy which renders them dangerous to the community at large. Of course religious or beneficial societies of any kind or partnership for business purposes are not objectionable, but they are never connected by any element of oath-bound secrecy.

The fruits of secret society policy are beginning to ripen. Those of the Mollie Maguires, Anarchists and Clan-na-Gaels have already been tried and found bitter to the taste. By their admitted necessity for secrecy they declare that their ends and purposes are such as will not bear the light, and it is a bold move for any organization to declare to the secretary of these United States that they will whisper their defense into his own private ear and padlock his mouth to prevent him from making it public. It is perhaps a bolder move than for a witness to say to a judge of the court that he will not tell the whole as a witness because he has taken a voluntary oath to his associates not to do it. If there is nothing wrong in the rules or proceedings of an organization there can be no valid necessity for an oath of secrecy.

—Mohammedanism in Turkey is evidently declining. The multiplication of mosques has almost ceased. Only one new one has been erected in Constantinople—one for the private use of the Sultan.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: “The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community. . . . However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion.”

THANKS TO WASHINGTON.—Edward Livingston was the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States and the great Masonic champion of his day, and Andrew Jackson was also a high Mason. In view of Washington's non-affiliation and his farewell address there can be little doubt that General Jackson and Edward Livingston considered Washington a seceded Mason. The following is an article published in 1830 in the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, which is an evidence of striking import:

“Who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington?—When General Washington retired to private life, Congress passed resolutions giving thanks to this great man. Only three men were found in Congress at that day, that voted against these resolutions. One of these three is now dead, and we do not wish to disturb his ashes. The grave should cover the foibles of all men. But there are two men now alive, whose names are on the journals of Congress, denying the poor pittance of a vote of thanks to Gen. Washington. We ask who these two men are.

“We have asked this question without expecting an answer from those to whom it is addressed. But there is no reason why our readers should not be gratified with the fact. Let the journals of Congress reply—“They are Andrew Jackson and Edward Livingston!”

CORRESPONDENCE.

WHO STANDS UP BESIDE THIS PASTOR?

CLAY, Pa., Feb. 6, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have been looking carefully over the pages of the Cynosure to find out if there are any in the county of Lancaster who contributed to its pages. Thus far I have failed to observe even the name of a citizen of this community. Is it possible that in this county, which has been called the garden spot of the world, there is none in direct opposition to this awful curse, which is a twin brother to alcohol?

I am preaching in this county at Paradise Station, and have a membership of 136, two of whom are seceders of the Odd-fellows. I am very sorry that they were so unfortunate as to allow themselves to be entangled in the yoke of bondage, and they, too, were sorry enough when they came to the light and found Christ. However, they did the next best thing to save themselves, and that was to withdraw from the lodge.

We are now holding a portracted meeting in a small town three miles east of this place, in which there are quite a number of young men, many of whom are members of the lodge. By the help of the Master we propose to rescue them, not only from the pit of eternal destruction and darkness, but from the calamity which threatens them in taking the Royal Arch degree. God bless the cause which the Cynosure represents.

Yours truly, A. L. SHANNON.

WHY TEMPERANCE DOES NOT PREVAIL.

SIBLEY, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wish to note a few of the reasons, in my humble judgment, why the cause of temperance or prohibition does not progress more rapidly.

1. Because the majority of those who advocate the cause do not observe what God prohibits. In Matthew and James we have these words: "Again ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not foreswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths." "But I say unto you, swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communications be Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than this cometh of evil." Matt. 5: 33-37. "But above all things, my brethren, swear not; neither by heaven; neither by earth, neither by any other oath, but let your yea be yea, and your nay nay, lest ye fall into condemnation." James 5: 12. In these verses we are told that whatever is more than these cometh of evil, or lest ye fall into condemnation. Hence every one who swears violates these words. And while God and the Bible is in favor of temperance and prohibition, yet he cannot and will not give permanent prosperity to any cause that will not observe his Word; and so long as men and women continue to form secret societies with oaths at the entry, passwords, sign-marks, grips, etc., their work cannot prosper. "In secret have I said nothing" (John 18: 20), said Jesus. "A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign," etc. The grip is evidently the mark in their right hand. See Rev. 13: 16. And if God did not prosper ancient Israel because they did not adhere strictly to his commandments, neither will he prosper our cause unless we get in line with his Word.

While I believe that the intention in the organization of the various temperance societies was good, yet nothing that is out of harmony with the Word of God can succeed with his sanction and approval. Neither will any man-made institutions or efforts go forward to successful termination that have not the power and approval of God and his Word. Hence the driving out of the children of Israel because of their disobedience or foreswearing. "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments, then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness been as the waves of the sea." Isa. 48: 18.

And I doubt very much whether any cause will stand that is propagated by the shedding of human blood. "Thou shalt not kill," said Jesus, and yet some of the advocates of temperance and prohibition would be in for forcing it upon the people by coercion. And while I am in for prohibition first, last and all the time, yet I am in for it by prayer, faith and work according to the Word of God, as peaceable and orderly citizens, voting as we pray, and breaking up all unhallowed fellowships with secret societies by coming out from them, and having no affiliation with anything that causes us to violate the Word of God in the least. Especially is it so when men expect us to support what we know to be wrong; or when we hold our peace simply because the wrong-doer chance to be called a brother, and at the same time claims to be Christ's freemen, while in reality he may be partner and servant of corruption. No wonder Paul says, "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate." 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. May God help us to see that if we want the cause of temperance to move on we must obey his Word and all will be well.

R. H. KEERAN.

JOHN ADAMS,

Second President of the United States.

John Adams never joined a secret society. His son, John Quincy, wrote, Aug. 22, 1831, of him: "... There was nothing in the Masonic institution worthy of his seeking to be associated with it. So said at that time the Grand Master of Masons, Jeremy Gridley; and such have I repeatedly heard my father say was the reason why he never joined the lodge. The use of the name of Washington, to give an odor of sanctity to the institution as it now stands exposed to the world, is in my opinion as unwarrantable as that of my father's name.

OUR WORK IS CHRISTIAN.

KINNEY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

DEAR EDITOR:—In Bro. Bacon's letter, and your reply to it, a most weighty and important subject is discussed. As one who wants to walk in the straight and narrow way, I would like to come at the truth of the matter, which is not yet entirely clear to me.

But I will offer these thoughts: First, although the preaching and publishing of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the great work of the church, and God's way to save the world, yet it would seem to me that the N. C. A. is working in harmony with that idea. Somebody must expose the unmistakable anti-Christian character of Masonry and kindred orders. If it is right to warn men against sins of any kind, I do not see how we can let Masonry pass unrebuked! And to do this successfully and universally, requires very much such an organization as we now have.

Of course if every minister and member of the church did his whole duty in this matter, the case would be different; but, as it is, thousands of good Anti-masons would perhaps now be in the lodge and participating in the works of darkness, had it not been for the N. C. A. By all means let every worker in the cause be also a Christian, and a holy one, making Christianity his chief end and aim.

"CHRISTIAN."

PITH AND POINT.

RESPONSES OF PASTORS TO THE CALL FOR THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CONGREGATIONAL.

I return the call just received with my earnest hope that a convention made up of judicious Christian men, and such as regard the purity of the judiciary and the freedom of the jury fundamental to the political, social and spiritual welfare of our country, may be held. The call meets my hearty endorsement, and should the convention issue shall try to be present.—J. H. WINDSOR.

I am in cordial sympathy with this present movement; may God bless and crown it with success and power. Most gladly would I actively co-operate, but age and bodily infirmities will prevent.—J. D. BAKER.

The call for a Conference of Christians on the secret lodge system meets my most cordial approbation. I have looked for many years with grave apprehension upon the increase in numbers and influence of secret combinations of whatever name, and I am truly thankful that so many good Christian men of influence in their various positions contemplate a candid discussion of the subject. The proposed conference is, I am sure, a move in the right direction, and will, I trust, result in putting at least some check upon a great and growing evil.—AZARIAH HYDE.

FRIEND.

With pleasure I publish the call. I appended my name to a copy of call left at my office. I will help in getting up the meeting all I can.—C. W. PRITCHARD.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

All right. Go on with the convention. May it be a great success. If possible, I will be present. Put my name down.—J. P. COWAN.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

Am very glad at the cheering prospect of another Christian Conference, and will hope to be present.—J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

BAPTIST.

I shall be very glad to know of such a convention in Chicago as proposed in the circulars sent out. "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God."—R. WALLACE.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

The call for a Conference of Christians on the secret lodge system was this day received, and I return the same with my signature attached. I think good would come out of such a conference. If it is held please let me know the date.—J. W. RICHARDS.

LITERATURE.

"SANITARY ENTOMBMENT; the ideal disposition of the dead." Rev. Charles R. Treat, of New York city, addressed the American Public Health Association last October on this subject. The Sanitarian published the address, and it now appears in handsome pamphlet form, attractively illustrated. The discussion of the disposition of the dead is as old as man. In Christendom the cemetery, which the affection of our forefathers placed about the church and called it "God's Acre," is universal. The cremation of the dead is too stoically pagan to ever become popular with us. But the mausoleum system has much to recommend it. Senator Pomeroy, of Washington, was interested in presenting it to the public several years ago. The plan is a large, substantial building filled with casements or vaults, through which dry air is passed until the thorough dessication of the bodies exposed to it is complete. They are thus preserved, all disease germs are killed, and danger to public health removed.

The interesting fact is announced by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons that they have acquired from Mr. Henry M. Stanley all the American rights for his personal narrative of the expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha. Prior to the appearance of the complete work, Scribner's Magazine will publish an article upon his last journey by Mr. Stanley. It will be illustrated and is certain to be as important a contribution as any that has ever appeared in an American magazine. Readers may have noticed that Mr. Herbert Ward, who was one of Stanley's officers, makes no mention of the expedition in the article recounting his experiences upon the Congo, which appears in Scribner's for February, the fact being that Mr. Stanley has reserved the sole right to describe this most remarkable of all his African undertakings.

The Converted Catholic is published by James A. O'Connor, 72 Bible House, New York, $1.00 a year. An interesting feature of the February number is the first installment of a history of the Jesuits; also an article by Rev. W. B. Judd, of Drew Theological Seminary, on "Christianity and the State." The Rev. Mason Gallagher discusses the question, "Was Peter ever at Rome?" Information is needed concerning the true character of Romanism, and this magazine speaks with an authoritative and not uncertain sound.

The American Garden, published in New York and London, is a magazine devoted to horticulture which knows no South, no North, no West, no East. This magazine enters upon its twelfth volume enlarged and improved. The form is convenient for binding and is mailed flat. The illustrations are by special artists. Over one hundred writers contribute to its pages. It is a magazine of immense value to the tillers of the soil.

Vick's Magazine for February is filled to the brim with matter that will be found pleasant reading to lovers of the floral kingdom. How could botanical language be other than beautiful and elevating? No better and more helpful seed magazine comes to our table. "The Study of Plants," "Concerning Roses," "Fine Art in Gardening," "Dinner Table Decorations," etc., are themes of general interest to the home. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y. $1.25 per year.

Major J. W. Powell, director of the Geological Survey, will begin in the March Century a series of three papers, illustrated with maps, on the subject of Irrigation. His first paper will be entitled "The Irrigable Lands of the Arid Region." Major Powell was a Wheaton student until he went into the army.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A SIMPLE RELIEF FOR LUNG TROUBLES.—It has long been known that pine needle pillows would alleviate persons afflicted with lung troubles, and a Florida editor relates an incident in support of the fact as follows: During a visit to the home of an estimable lady living on Indian river, this editor was told of a discovery that had been made which may prove a boon to sufferers from lung or bronchial troubles. This lady having heard that there was peculiar virtue in a pillow made from pine straw, and having none of that material at hand, made one from fine, soft, pine shavings, and had the pleasure of noting immediate benefit. Soon all the members of the household had pine shaving pillows, and it was noticed that all coughs, asthmatic, or bronchial troubles abated at once after sleeping a few nights on these pillows. An invalid suffering from lung trouble derived much benefit from sleeping upon a mattress made from pine shavings. The material is cheap and makes a very pleasant and comfortable mattress, the odor of the pine permeating the entire room and absorbing or dispelling all unpleasant odors.—Scientific American.

The New York Telegram is authority for the statement that a transparent mucilage of great tenacity may be made by mixing rice flour with cold water and letting it simmer gently over the fire.

SUN YOURSELF.

Sleepless people—and there are many in America—should court the sun. The very worst soporific is laudanum; the very best is sunshine. Therefore, it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours of the day as possible in the sunshine, as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs and do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and their hearts. They wear veils, they carry parasols. They do all that is possible to keep off the subtlest and yet the most potent influence which is intended to give them strength and beauty and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change all this, to get the roses and color in our pale cheeks, strength in our weak souls? The women in America are pale and delicate. They may be blooming and strong, and the sunlight will be a potent influence in this transformation.—The Home.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,
Sixth President of the United States.

"I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

The following is a method to make a paste which will keep: Dissolve a teaspoonful of alum in a quart of water. When cold stir in as much flour as will give it the consistency of thick cream, carefully beating up all the lumps. Stir in half a teaspoonful of powdered rosin. Pour on the mixture a teacup of boiling water, stirring it well. When it becomes thick pour in an earthen vessel. Cover and keep in a cool place. When needed for use, take a portion and soften it with warm water. It will last at least a year. If you wish to have a pleasant odor stir in a few drops of oil of wintergreen or cloves.

HOW TO AVOID A COLD.

Curing a cold is not always easy. The great thing is to avoid it. An almost infallible preventive of a cold is a daily cold morning bath, but everyone cannot take this. There are some people who cannot endure the shock of a cold bath; and it certainly takes a strong constitution to get out of bed and take a cold bath in a cold room. A warm bath should only be taken at night, or when one can avoid exposure to the open air for an hour or two afterwards. A young friend of ours laid the foundation of a cold from which she never recovered, by taking a warm bath and going out immediately after on a chill October day.

Another cause of colds is overclothing. If you are going to take a long drive on a cold day there is not much danger of this; but, in exercising or walking, depend on the exercise to keep you warm and wear fewer wraps. It is a bad fashion to accustom one's self to the use of a muffler. The least exposure without it is sure to be followed by a sore throat, and children, at least, seldom remember to don this superfluous garment with more than fitful regularity.

It is during the treacherous days of a thaw, and during the autumn days, which open so brightly, with a warm sun shining until the middle of the afternoon, when a chill, raw wind arises, which we never seem to learn to prepare for.

Cold feet is a serious reason for the colds of children from babies up. Babies are too young, and most children too thoughtless, to know why they are uncomfortable, and so, unless some wiser head orders an occasional toasting of the little feet, colds are the result. Always see that the children go to bed with warm feet.—American Agriculturist.

The world-wide reputation of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the natural result of its surpassing value as a blood medicine. Nothing, in the whole pharmacopœia, effects more astonishing results, in scrofula, rheumatism, general debility, and all forms of blood disease, than this remedy.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1890.

WASHINGTON'S TESTIMONY.

Our annual holiday in honor of Washington occurs this week Saturday. The Cynosure believes that Americans should no longer allow his name to rest under the stigma of the lodge. We give, therefore, in this number the testimony of the "Father of his country," and of a number of his co-patriots against secret societies.

THE STUDENTS' PLAN.

Various Providential events have during the past year given a remarkable impulse to public inquiry into the nature and methods of the secret organizations, secret ceremonies and secret obligations. This spirit of investigation has spread among the students of our American institutions in the States and Canada. Evidences of this cheering fact have been often seen of late in these columns. Students have written for documents to aid in conducting debates, etc., and have asked for information and suggestion as to the best means to utilize the interest arising in their circle. These facts seemed to mark a way opened by God for a new plan of work, and a few days since a half-dozen young men from the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational theological seminaries of Chicago and vicinity and Wheaton College met for consultation. They agreed to form in the simplest manner possible a Bureau of Correspondence that would be able to facilitate inquiry among students, put them in communication one with another, and encourage the discussion of the principles of secretism and related topics in the course of regular school work. They propose to conduct this work from the Christian standpoint, with the Word of God as the only rule and touchstone by which to test the lodge.

C. S. Bullock of Garrett Biblical Institute, Northwestern University, was elected chairman; G. A. Conrad of Chicago Theological Seminary, Union Park, secretary; and E. A. Lovett of Baptist Union Theological Seminary, Morgan Park, treasurer. These form the executive committee. Other committees have been selected to aid in the arrangement of correspondence, and circulars prepared to send to all our American institutions.

This movement is conducted by students and is distinct from the N. C. A., but we are confident that honest inquiry, conducted by Christian young men and women, will lead to ultimate results similar to those we are endeavoring to place before the American churches and people. The readers of the Cynosure can do an excellent service by sending to Mr. Conrad, the secretary, at No. 45 Warren Avenue, Chicago, the names of any students, of either sex, in our schools of higher education, who would be likely to sympathize in this movement and co-operate with it.

THE MOLLIE MAGUIRES.

It is believed that the Mollie Maguires are resuming operations in Pennsylvania, and that a murder recently committed in Chester county was their work. Why not? When legislators and Christian ministers play murder in Masonic lodges, and take oaths under a death penalty, and when the whole frame-work of society is honey-combed with secret conspiracies against everybody but themselves, it is not at all strange that the Clan-na-Gael and Mollie Maguires should transform oaths into acts, and murder those who threaten to expose them. Men are always the imitators of others, and none more so than the ignorant and the wicked. "Lewd fellows of the baser sort" have always done the base work of those whose teachings have been their license. When Dr. Crosby and President Harrison put wine on their tables, the drunkard makes it an excuse for his whisky, and the saloon-keeper for his unholy traffic. The men of the South, who have fought duels and who defend the "code," are the men who are responsible for the terrible mountain feuds that have disgraced Kentucky and West Virginia. The men who, like the late Mr. Grady, expressed their opposition to the Negro, by a practical defiance to the National Constitution, which makes him a citizen, are the real authors of the numberless mobs ("race wars" they are called) by which multitudes of unoffending colored people are murdered. They may disclaim any such intention, but the drunken ruffian who shoots a Negro finds his warrant in the speeches of editors and Senators. So, too, will Mormons and members of Irish brotherhoods find seeming permission in the example of Masonic lodges, the oaths of which were the model from which theirs were framed. What the so-called great men say, they will not long hesitate to do. If society is ever to be reformed, it will be when those who constitute the upper stratum of that society set the example for others; and no other example is more needful than the abandonment of the secret lodge system.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
The Friend of Washington.

Alexander Hamilton assisted in writing the "Farewell Address," and quoted it against secret societies.

THE WORM AT THE TAP-ROOT*

One of the few books we should like to see in the hands of every young man in America is "Dying at the Top," by Dr. Clokey, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, New Albany, Indiana. The author found the poetical and attractive title for this volume in an incident in his own doorway, where a beautiful apricot tree, which for years had been a source of admiration and utility, began to wither at its top-most branches, and girdled by worms under the bark soon finished its life. Dr. Clokey looked upon the tree of human society, of American society, and saw it dying at the top in our young men. His book is a cry of alarm. And so far as he goes his warning is faithfully given. "The history of reform," he says, "has shown that no iniquity has ever been subdued till the facts connected with it were torn from their secrecy and laid open to the gaze of the world." This is a faithful saying, and faithfully does the writer work by this rule in laying bare the enormity of the sins of Sabbath-breaking, the saloon, the bagnio, etc.

Dr. Clokey's argument is that the young men of any age are its strength and its hope. But the best information to be gathered shows that the young men of America are becoming its danger. Out of every 100, there are 75 who do not attend church; 95 who do not belong to church; and at least 97 who are not living a cross-bearing, faithful Christian life. In fact, the young man is fast being "figured out as a factor of Christian evangelization." He goes on further to show that the young man is not only negative in goodness, he is positive in badness. He fills our jails, he makes our saloons and gambling-houses profitable, he gives the gallows and the harlot their business. The criminal statistics quoted by Dr. Clokey are truly alarming; but in his enumeration of the causes of this fearful state of affairs he notices only those evils which it is not unpopular to denounce.

The time must soon come when such books as this must take cognizance of the lodge as an important factor in this wide-spread demoralization. The statistics of the increase of crime are, we judge, commensurate with the increase of secretism; and are an occasion of it. This must be so for several manifest reasons.

1. Moral restraint is the only permanent check upon criminal action, as it acts upon the conscience. Now the lodge substitutes for moral restraint, as imposed by the law of God, the restraints of a vicious oath or obligation imposed by men and made solemn with mockery. Mere human and external checks are thus given the place which belongs to the divine.

2. The home influence of boys and young men whose fathers have thus substituted the lodge for true religion, fits them for criminals.

3. The trifling with oaths has broken the effect of the oath of God in all our courts; and as there is probably not a lodge member living who has not in some way broken his false oath, he is made ready in so far to break the true.

4. The immunity given to criminals because of lodge oaths, encourages them in a criminal career.

These are a few of the reasons why we believe Dr. Clokey should have considered the lodge as one of the worms working at the root of society, and we would say at the tap-root.

HOW THE LODGE CONSPIRES.

The prominence of Oberlin College, the great merit of Prof. King's lecture, and its repetition by request of citizens, entitle the discussion at Oberlin to further notice. The Cynosure teaches that Freemasonry is a conspiracy. Prof. King believes that the Masonic masses are not conspirators. Both are true. But one Mason in five, to average, is reputed to attend lodge meetings. Of course absentees do not conspire, and one prominent Mason writes, "The haters of the order in the lodges themselves are more than legion." These, of course, are not conspirators.

But we give below extracts from an argument delivered at Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1875, which, endorsed by such men as Dr. Norris, has to our knowledge never been controverted. Our readers will thank us for the following extracts:

Upon the ground question; whether there exists a conspiracy against God, it is sufficient to receivers of the Scriptures (and we address such), that they declare there is such a conspiracy; that there is such a person as Satan, "the god of this world" and the king of its evils, warring against God and goodness. And even infidels and atheists, if they are honest ones, one would think, must admit that the evils of this world, if not the result of conspiracy, are yet managed with craft.

But are secret societies part and parcel of that conspiracy? Do they belong to that dark movement which makes the heathen nations heathen; incapable of moral order and good government; "without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful?" And though we should acquit the masses of secretism on the score of their ignorance or delusion, are the leaders of these secret movements conscious or unconscious conspirators against God and mankind?

I shall bring some proofs that they are such conspirators. . . . A volume might be filled with quotations from Masonic writers who declare, substantially, that Freemasonry is derived from the pagan religions and mysteries. Indeed, this is implied in the general declaration of their standard Lexicon (Mackey) that "the religion of Masonry is that in which mankind are agreed," for that certainly is not the religion of Christ.

Arnold, a respectable Masonic writer, page 10, of his "Philosophical History of Freemasonry," says: "The Masonic order stands pre-eminent, not only because it is, in a degree, the successor of the Egyptian and Grecian mysteries, . . . but also because it is the source whence all the secret fraternities have proceeded." If this be true, then secret fraternities are all, "in a degree," copied from the heathen mysteries.

The author of "The Ancient Scottish Rite," says of Masonic baptism of infants, that it is not a rival of the baptism practiced by Christian churches, but "has descended from the religion which existed before the Pyramids;" that is, Egyptian heathenism.

But there is a statement by Emanuel Rebold, in his "General History of Freemasonry in Europe," page 329, which settles the point, so far as Masonic authority goes, that our common Blue-lodge Masonry is actually the heathenism of the nations. Rebold says:

"A very limited knowledge of the history of primitive worship and mysteries is necessary to enable any person to recognize, in the Master Mason, Hiram, the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mithras of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, and the Atys of the Phrygians, of whom these peoples celebrated the passion, death, and resurrection, as Christians celebrate to-day that of Jesus Christ."

Here we have an explicit, Masonic, authoritative, declaration that Freemasonry is a copy of the old heathenism, and that Hiram Abiff represents, or rather is a reproduction of several of their principal gods, who were, it seems, killed and raised from the dead, as caricatures of Christ. If then heathenism is conspiracy against God and man, Freemasonry is.

—Bro. E. W. Shaw is still at work in the vicinity of Howell, Michigan, where he is finding favorable openings. Four addresses in school-buildings last week will be followed by others in the United Brethren churches in the vicinity.

—Our able New Orleans exchange, the South-western Presbyterian, has changed its form from a five-column to a six-column eight-page paper. The Presbyterian has attained its majority, and begins its twenty-second year with encouraging prospects.

—A paper called the Sentinel, which comes uninvited to our office, contains some of the most persistent misrepresentations of Christian men and movements of any sheet in the country. It says of the W. C. T. U., in its last issue: "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has ceased to be anything but a political club, and its work anything less than a continuous political campaign." Such a remark in the face of a thousand contradicting facts makes us fear the editor has a bad father.

—The Morgan monument in Batavia keeps the story of its hero fresh in the minds of the people of western New York. A Canandaigua dispatch of the 12th inst says: "Not since the kidnapping of Morgan of Anti-masonic fame from the Ontario county jail in this village many years ago, have the people of this section had a sensation like that over the Johnson tragedy which occurred in South Bristol some time before midnight and daylight Monday morning, Jan. 27." The dispatch goes on to relate the harrowing particulars of a double murder and the burning of the bodies in the building.

—The Indian agent at Devil's Lake Agency, North Dakota, has sent out an appeal asking relief for the starving Indians in his care. The appeal was read at dinner at the Carlisle Indian school last Wednesday, and after a brief discussion the Indian students voted to send from their well-earned savings $550. They earned this money through the outing system of the Carlisle school, the amount thus accumulated last year being some $12,000. Those young Indians are said to be much sought after by Pennsylvania farmers. Our young whites who are growing up to be tramps would do well to study on the Carlisle plan.

—The philanthropist, Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, approves heartily of Bro. Hinman's labor among the Kentucky mountaineers. The following is from a letter received from him last week: "I have read with much interest the recent statements of H. H. Hinman concerning the lawlessness in the mountain region of Kentucky, and the explanation he gives therefor. I hope we are not prepared as yet to adopt the summary and barbarous method of settling the problem which was recommended some two years ago by a correspondent (of the N. Y. World, I think,) who went through the locality in question. The friendly, reassuring procedure recommended by Friend Hinman better reflects our assumption of Christianity, and not that of unsanctified natures. It needs grace, and much of it, to go in amongst the vendetta-loving people, and I trust that those will be found who will be qualified and called to the service."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Pastor D. Simon, of Prospect, Ohio, after serving faithfully for eight years, has given up the work of editing the Lutheran Almanac and Year Book.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman lectured on the subject of International Peace at Berea College last week. He took strong grounds against war and in favor of international arbitration.

—Rev. David Thompson, an aged and esteemed minister, now retired, is writing in the Christian Instructor of Philadelphia an interesting account of his missionary labors in Oregon during the early days of 1853-59.

—Deacon West of Sycamore, whose obituary appears on another page, took great interest in the Illinois State work as conducted by Bro. Hawley. Many meetings have been held during the winter in DeKalb and Kane counties. Their result was the subject of much prayer by this godly man, and he had great faith that much good would be accomplished.

—President Trueblood of Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa, has been granted leave of absence for a year by his College board. He has been eleven years at the head of the institution and twenty-four a teacher. He has also all this time been preaching in Friends' churches. He will visit France and Germany during the year.

—About two years ago Rev. Dr. D. R. Kerr, editor of the United Presbyterian, died in Pittsburgh and was widely lamented, both in his own denomination and beyond its borders. On the 4th inst. his widow, Mrs. Annie E. Kerr, a woman greatly beloved, also passed from earth. She died in Florida, and was buried in Allegheny, Pa.

SAMUEL DEXTER,

Senator, Secretary of War and of the Treasury. President of the first temperance society in Massachusetts.

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an open letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

—"Prudence Crandall" is a name for history. She was born a Quaker, in Rhode Island, 1803, and was the first woman who began the higher education of the Negro. In 1833 she took a colored girl into her boarding-school in Canterbury, Conn., and notwithstanding persecution and the withdrawal of white girls from her care she persisted in admitting Negroes to her school, and it continued to prosper until at last the house was set on fire and burned, after she had been tried at court several times. Miss Crandall's portrait was painted by Francis Alexander for the American Anti-slavery Society in 1838, and it now hangs in Cornell University. She married Rev. Calvin Philleo, a Baptist clergyman, who died in 1876, and she herself died at a good old age in Elk Falls, Kansas, on the 28th ult., from an attack of the prevailing epidemic.

—Mr. H. N. Rust, a public-spirited citizen of Pasadena, Cal., appeals to a generous public to remember the children of John Brown. His only surviving daughter, Mrs. Thompson, and her husband, are living a few miles north of that city in much poverty. Aid is asked in their behalf. It may be sent to Morrison, Plummer & Co., Lake St., or the Inter Ocean office, in this city. The following item has been going the round of the papers: "Miss Eva Brown, only daughter of John Brown, of Harper's Ferry fame, is the private secretary of H. Faxon, of Quincy, Mass., and has the management of the Quincy Political Temperance Bureau." It is hardly necessary to say to well-informed people that this is untrue so far as relates to old John Brown. His only unmarried daughter, Sarah, died in California several years ago. Mrs. Thompson is the only daughter living. Her brother Jason lives near her on the spur of the mountain; Owen lies buried in his eyrie, far up the heights of the Sierra Madres; and John Brown, Jr., still lives, so far as we know, on his farm at Put-in-Bay, Ohio.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A band of evangelists, while holding a meeting at Hull, opposite Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 4, were attacked by a crowd of Catholic French-Canadians, who broke up the meeting. Mr. Frappier, one of the evangelists, was dragged outside the building and brutally beaten. His injuries, although not dangerous, will disfigure him for life. Alexander Rose was also seriously injured, and some of the young women were badly hurt by missiles thrown by the crowd. A squad of Ottawa police were dispatched to the scene and the evangelists were safely conveyed to the city. The outrages were subsequently continued, and great excitement is occasioned.

—There was a warm time at the Methodist ministers' meeting at Cincinnati, Feb. 10, when Dr. Pierson stated that the Rev. William Joiner had been sent to Greensboro, N. C., by Bishop Joyce, where once or twice he preached to the Negroes. His house was fired into, and he was wounded and his wife nearly killed. He is now on the verge of starvation, and Dr. Moore, of the Western Christian Advocate, says he has looked carefully in his Southern exchanges for some denunciation of this outrage, but finds only one paper which mentions it. A committee was appointed to draft an expression of feeling against such injustice and crime.

—The board of managers of the American Bible Society met in New York Feb. 6. Among the letters from foreign lands submitted to the consideration of the board were communications from the British and Scotch Bible Societies, approving of certain proposed plans for united work in distributing the Scriptures in Japan. On the recommendation of the committee on distribution, grants of books were made to the value of more than $9,500; including $4,000 for colportage, grants to the Zulu and West African Missions of the American Board, and consignments to the Society's Brazil and La Plata agencies. Issues from the Bible House during the month of January were 88,314 volumes; issues since April 1, 1889, 813,314 volumes.

—Mrs. Grover Cleveland has long been a member of the Presbyterian church, and a week ago she was joined by her husband, who united with the Central Presbyterian church, New York city, Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, pastor.

—At the fourteenth anniversary of the Railroad Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, in connection with the Grand Central depot, New York, the other evening, there were present to express their interest men representing an immense number of millions, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sidney Dillon, D. O. Mills, Cyrus W. Field, J. M. Taney, Chauncey Depew and others. Mr. Vanderbilt in his fine address showed that larger numbers are coming to avail themselves of the library, reading room, gymnasium, baths and other comforts, conveniences and appliances for instruction, recreation, pleasure and health maintained there exclusively for their benefit. The railroad service, he said, is constantly demanding better trained and educated employes, and the educational opportunities offered furnished unusual facilities for improvement in those things which fit men for promotion, and to fill the higher and more responsible places.

—The College Church, Wheaton, voted unanimously last Thursday evening to invite Rev. Albert Ethridge, of Marsailles, Ill., to be their pastor. It is understood that the present harmonious arrangement with Rev. Dr. S. H. Adams will not be disturbed, even if Mr. Ethridge accepts. Dr. Adams will preach until the close of the college year.

—Rev. Dr. A. A. Fulton, of Ashland, Ohio, who has been a missionary in Canton and Kwang-sai, China, for the past ten years, has returned home. He is accompanied by his family and sister, who is also a missionary. Dr. Fulton is one of the missionaries of the Kwang-sai or West province, who were mobbed, their building burned and looted, and who were driven out in 1886. Ever since then they have had a claim against the Chinese government for indemnity, but though Minister Charles Denby has called the attention of the United States to the claim and the Secretary of State has called on China to requite the missionaries it has not been done.

—J. L. Holmes, a Chicago man, has been attending St. Mary's Roman Catholic College, Baltimore, studying for the priesthood. He has quit, and become converted to Protestantism by ex-"Father" O'Connor. Holmes, in a meeting, said: "I learned that the Virgin Mary alone is invoked, together with Joseph, and that our dear risen Saviour is not approached in prayer. Not one prayer have I heard addressed to Christ. Yet, are we not directed to do so? And what also pained me is the total lack of study, not to say of interest, in God's Holy Word. 'If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments;' but how can we know what his commandments are unless we study his Word?"

—Senator Ingalls, in his latest utterance on the Negro question, gave the following figures of the money spent on Negro missions: "Since 1862 there has been given for the education of the enfranchised slaves, through the American Missionary Society, $10,000,000; through the Methodist Society, $2,250,000; through the Baptist Society, $2,000,000; through the Presbyterian society, $1,600,000, and not less than $1,000,000 from other sources; in all, about $17,000,000 from the North."

THE HOME.

A WINTER SUNSET.

A wintry eve and a wintry sky,
With dun clouds rolling swiftly by;
For in the east, like beacon light,
The crescent-moon foretells the night,
With silvery horn hung low.
A bright—a sudden flash, and lo!
To crimson burns the gleaming snow.
The skies with varied tints are lit,
And clouds, like golden chariots, flit
Athwart the western glow.

Far up the zenith streams the light
In fleecy folds and radiance bright,
While to the northward, fold on fold,
Like banners strung with molten gold,
The clouds are floating fast.
Through broken gleams of rifted light,
The glowing sun bursts on the right.
And all the heavens with mystic might,
Crown even mountain's purple height
With splendors rolling past.

A transient gleam, and brief as fair!
The shifting shadows, here and there,
Creep softly on, and twilight lends
A gorgeous gloom, as night descends
On purple pinions low.
The clouds have lost their rosy gleams
And float away, like shattered dreams,
To gloom and silence. Up the sky
The young moon climbeth silently,
And bends her silver bow.

Through drifting clouds, a single star
Emits a trembling radiance far,
And like some fair, translucent gem,
Glow softly in earth's diadem,
In splendor all alone.
The last swift arrows tipped with light,
The day sent forth, in realms of night,
Are lost forever; earth and sky
In sable garments sadly lie,
And night ascends her throne.

If earthly tintings are so fair,
Hills, valleys, crowned with beauty rare,
Till words grow meaningless and faint
To catch the hues the seasons paint
O'er vale and mountain grand,
What must those beauties be which lie
Beyond the reach of mortal eye?
Upon those heights where dear ones stand
With "Jesus in their midst," that land
Made fair by His all-powerful hand?

WHY THE DESERT ROUTE?

BY REV. GEORGE THOMPSON.

Why did God lead the Hebrews around through the desert? And why are his people so often led through deserts of trial on the way to Canaan? Many are stumbled by these things. A more direct route, it seems to them, would have been more desirable.

But God is wiser than his creatures. He knows what will be best for them, and always leads in the right and best way.

1. The Hebrews were not prepared to return to Canaan by the old route by which Jacob came to Egypt. This would have been short, and would have occupied not more than forty days. But it lay through the country of the Philistines, who would have fought them, and they were not prepared for war yet. See Gen. 13: 17, 18. As this is a reason given by God, it must be a good one. It was not a blunder.

2. The people of Canaan were idolaters, and the Hebrews had become much addicted to this sin in Egypt. This is manifest from their history in the Wilderness, "Make us gods to go before us," etc. And how easily they were seduced to join in the worship of Moabitish idols! They must be cured of this, and be grounded in the knowledge and worship of God, before they are fit to dwell in Canaan. They must be convinced, by the wonders of the Red Sea, of Sinai, the smitten rock, the manna, the destruction of Korah and his company, the brazen serpent, etc., etc., that JEHOVAH was the only true God, and that he alone must be worshiped, feared, loved and obeyed. They were not thus established when they left Egypt.

3. Had they taken the direct route, they would have been overtaken by their oppressors. But they must be destroyed, and hence the Red Sea must be crossed, where they could be engulfed, and God's people might look on them, and sing that wonderful song of Moses, confessing the hand of God, and giving all glory to him. What a lesson they would have lost, and what a lesson all the afflicted would have lost, had this people not been called to pass through the Sea!

Difficulties and dangers may thicken and surround, and no way of escape appear, but the voice of our Leader, "Go forward," is enough. Obedience and trust in God is ours: to open a way is his.

4. They had been for ages in oppression, and were scattered and undisciplined. The God of their fathers was but little known. It was needful that they should be organized and instructed; should have a law and a system of worship, should have priests and ordinances, and a tabernacle. Hence they must be detained in the desert for drill, and discipline, and instruction.

JOHN MARSHALL,

Chief Justice of U. S. Supreme Court.

John Marshall, Chief Justice, in a letter to Edward Everett, July 22, 1833, said of Freemasonry: "That the institution ought to be abandoned, as one capable of producing much evil, and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

As H. C. Trumbull says, "Egypt is the land of bondage. Arabia is the land of training. Canaan is the land of rest. He who would pass from Egypt to Canaan must needs go through Arabia. It was into Arabia that Moses was led, in his training for his work as leader and lawgiver, after his dwelling in Egypt. Elijah the prophet had his training there. And thither was Paul sent, in preparation for his work as Apostle to the Gentiles."

5. The large body, so corrupt, must be purged of the rebellious spirits and the "mixed multitude" that accompanied it. They were ever making trouble, longing for the "leeks and onions," and in their hearts "turning back to Egypt." They murmured against Moses and against God. They stirred up discontent and rebellion, bringing great plagues upon the people. They would not have been suitable material to settle Canaan. They must be sloughed, purged out, cut off. Hence the need of the thirty-eight years wandering in the Wilderness, with its plagues, and serpents, etc., till they are all gone—then the purged body may enter Canaan.

6. The remainder must learn to be obedient, and repose undoubting confidence in God and their leader. And this we find them ready to promise to Moses and to Joshua, on the east of Jordan, before Canaan was given into their hands.

So the chosen of God, in all ages, have been, and will be, called to passed through deep waters, and fiery trials, not in anger, but in love, "for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness." "Afterward, it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness." "Blessed is the man who endureth trial." "For when he is tried, he shall receive the crown."

Christ leads in no darker paths than he himself has trod. And he has promised to be with us in every trial, and make "All things work together for good to them who love God." "The light afflictions" of this desert journey "work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

They teach us our weakness; the vanity and emptiness of earth as a portion; the faithfulness of God and fullness of his grace; and lead to desire and seek things "spiritual and eternal," where, in God's presence, is "fullness of joy and pleasures forevermore."

The lesson we all need to learn is implicit trust, and unquestioning obedience and delight in all the way God leads us. Remember, "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he (the good man) delighteth in his way." We can delight in God's way because we know he loves us, and can make no mistake, and will only do that which will be for our best and highest welfare. It is not needful that we should be able to see how it will be for the best. God's Word says so, and that should be enough.

MRS. LIVINGSTONE'S GRAVE.

Mr. Drummond, in Tropical Africa, says of Mrs. Mary Moffatt Livingstone: "We were to spend that night within a few yards of the place where Mrs. Livingstone died. Late in the afternoon we reached the spot—a low, ruined hut, a hundred yards from the river's bank, with a broad veranda shading its crumbling walls. A grass-grown path straggled to the doorway, and the fresh print of a hippopotamus told how neglected the spot is now. Pushing the door open we found ourselves in a long, dark room, its mud floor broken into fragments, and remains of native fires betraying its latest occupants. Turning to the right we entered a smaller chamber, the walls bare and stained, with two glassless windows, facing the river. The evening sun, setting over the far-off Morumballa Mountains, filled the room with its soft glow, and took our thoughts back to that Sunday evening twenty years ago, when in this same bed-room, at this same hour, Livingstone knelt over his dying wife, and witnessed the great sunset of his life. Under a huge bab-bab tree, a miracle of vegetable vitality and luxuriance, stands Mrs. Livingstone's grave. The picture in Mr. Livingstone's book represents the place as well kept and surrounded with neatly planted trees. But now it is an utter wilderness, matted with jungle grass and trodden by the beasts of the forest; and as I looked at the forsaken mound and contrasted it with her husband's marble tomb at Westminster Abbey, I thought, perhaps, the woman's love which brought her to a spot like this might be not less worthy of immortality."

BOYS! GUNS! DEATH!

My boy wrote that he had been out hunting with his big cousin. I knew what would come next. Sure enough, next week's letter said he wanted to have a gun as soon as he could get money enough.

On the train I thought over it. I like to give my boys some good reasons for my opinions, so I will see what news I can find about boys and guns. That night I stopped with a minister, Rev. Oates, from the Southern States. His wife told me the following cases, which she personally knew:

About three years ago a lad of 16 shot himself while getting over a fence. He was found in a dying condition by a friend.

Last year, 1889, a son of Rev. Dye of Mississippi, aged 15, was passing a house in which some boys were handling a gun. It was accidentally fired, and the ball struck young Dye, killing him.

A youth of 17 went out hunting, and was found dead. The gun had fired by the trigger catching on a bush. While lying there alone, dying, he wrote to his younger sister, telling of his sad fate and bidding her good-bye.

Rev. Samuel Stone's young sons were playing with a toy gun. The older one fired it off, killing his dear little brother.

Mrs. Oates' uncles at the age of 12 and 8 were allowed to take a rusty musket to play with. It had lain in the garret many years, and was thought to be empty and harmless. But it proved to be charged with several balls; for the older boy somehow fired it off, and the charge went into his brother's shoulder and arm. The balls were all taken out except one, which he carried in his flesh all his life.

In an Arkansas paper, just received by Mr. Oates, the following touching account is given of the son of a Methodist minister killing himself:

"KISS MAMMA FOR ME.

"While hunting at Hill's Lake, eight miles from this city [Little Rock], on Saturday morning, Dec. 28 [1889], John P. Lowery, aged 14 years, was fatally wounded by the accidental discharge of his gun. As soon as possible after the distressing intelligence reached this city, his father, Rev. John P. Lowery, with Drs. Dibrell and Prather, rushed to his relief. About 2 P.M. his leg was amputated, but he continued to sink till the bright spirit of the noble boy returned to God who gave it. To his grief-stricken father the dear son spoke words of much comfort, as he bravely met death; and just before the loving heart ceased to beat, he whispered tenderly, 'Kiss mamma for me.' An immense and sorrowful congregation attended his funeral Sunday afternoon from our First Church, Dr. M. B. Chapman preaching the sermon from the verse of Scripture repeated by the deceased at family prayer on Friday night—'Watch, therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh.'"

As I sat down to write this, I told an old gentleman, James Ferguson, of my subject. Said he: "I know a great many cases of boys killing some one with guns." He then gave some that he remembered most clearly. I add them to the above list.

About a year ago two young men, about 20, went out to hunt in the mountains near Pasadena, Cal. Being separated, one saw the other dimly through the bushes at a distance, and mistaking him for a deer, fired and killed him. His poor mother mourns over her only son, and has been nearly out of her mind over the cruel loss.

Mr. Ferguson tells of a cousin of his father who was shot in a similar manner. He and a friend were hunting wild turkeys, using the turkey-call whistle for a decoy. Going apart for some time, the cousin was using his decoy call, and his comrade supposed it was a turkey. Holding his gun ready, he fired at the first dim object he saw, ran to the spot, and found he had shot his friend through the head! His life has been melancholy over his terrible blunder.

A son of Mr. Ferguson had an excellent gun, and a friend borrowed it to use as he was driving out. Taking the gun carelessly out of his wagon, this friend shot himself dead.

The last case Mr. F. told me was an awful one. A young man had a sister whom he loved most tenderly. They were alone at the house one day, when he took his gun as he was going to find some cattle. He had discharged the gun only a day or so before, and felt sure that it was empty. His sister begged him to be careful, when he rebuked her for being such a coward, and playfully turned the gun toward her. She shouted out in fright, and plead with him not to do it. Just to make her "get used to it," he said, "Sis, I have a notion to shoot you," leveled the gun at her head, and pulled the trigger. She dropped dead with a ball through her forehead! The disconsolate young man has lingered out a most wretched life, being nearly crazy over his unintentional murder of his darling sister.

I have not told others of this writing, for I could easily get a list long enough to fill pages of your paper!

Now, brother, I think just this about the boy-and-gun question: Bullets are as dangerous as ballots. The law does not allow men under 21 to vote. It does not allow liquor to be sold to boys up to a certain age. Ought not the law to prohibit children from owning or using firearms up to a comparatively safe age?

I hope my sons will not get a gun or pistol until they get whiskers. By that time they will see, I am sure, that guns are worse than useless to peaceable citizens, except to poor men on the frontier, who need to get game for food. Yours in peace and good-will,

W. JAY GEE.

DECEIVING THE ENEMY.

In the spring of 1888 a pair of red foxes took up their home on a Dakota farm. They dug several holes on a knoll in a wheat field, and soon after four "kits," or young foxes, arrived. Every day, while harrowing and sowing wheat in the field, I saw the two old foxes lying on the little mound in front of their home. The kits rolled about in the sun, played with the bushy tails of their parents, and enjoyed themselves apparently as much as a group of kittens. One morning a neighbor came to work in a field adjoining, bringing with him a dog, and the dog, with all the curiosity of his kind, soon began the investigation of both farms. He was still a long distance from the fox den when I heard a sharp, warning bark and saw the kits disappear. As I looked the mother fox lay on the ground, her ears erect, her nose on the ground, all attention. The father of the family, with his tail swinging in the wind, trotted toward the dog. Can he intend to attack him, I wondered. I had never heard of such a thing, and the dog, though not a large one, was still larger than the fox. But Reynard knew his business better than I. He approached the intruder until the dog saw him, when both stopped for an instant, and then the dog gave chase. The fox, with a bark of defiance, turned and ran in a direction away from his home. At first the dog seemed to gain rapidly upon the fox, but I watched them for nearly a mile before they disappeared in the long prairie grass, and concluded that the fox was able to keep out of the other's way. In about an hour the dog returned from a fruitless chase, and for a time he contentedly followed his master. Then he began prowling around again. All this time the mother fox had remained on the mound, a picture of quiet vigilance; but now, as the dog again ventured near, she rose and trotted toward him, and the dog was soon chasing her over the prairie. Hardly had they disappeared when the mate trotted back from some hiding-place and took the position vacated by his mate. The dog returned after a time unsuccessful as before. During the day he was again and again tempted to a chase, first by the male and then by the female, and while the one kept him busy, the other watched over the young, who did not show themselves after the first sight of the dog. It is hard to say which we admire most; the bravery of the pair in challenging the dog to a race that would have proved fatal had he caught them, their ingenuity in taking turns so that each might be fresh when chased, their skill in leading him away from their young, or their cleverness in throwing him off their track when far enough away.—Methodist Protestant.

TEMPERANCE.

"NO BACKWARD STEP."

BY JOHN N. LLOYD.

A call was issued to the temperance people of Buchanan county, Iowa, to meet in mass convention at Independence, to voice the sentiment of the people against the repeal of the prohibitory law. That call was headed in large letters, "NO BACKWARD STEP."

No backward step! It will not do,
The world moves on, for God moves too;
Then we must take a firm, true stand,
For God and home and native land.

No backward step! For mothers plead,
As mothers can whose hearts will bleed,
As bleed they must, if this vile rum
With its hell-traps again shall come.

No backward step! For children, too,
With clinging arms appeal to you;
Whose innocent and loving ways,
With gladness brighten all your days.

No backward step! For this reform
Is passing on amid the storm.
Reverses come, but not defeat,
The hosts of God will ne'er retreat.

THE CIGARETTE.

SOME SOBER WORDS ABOUT IT.

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

About a week ago a lad thirteen years of age was arrested in Philadelphia, charged with robbing offices in the building in which he was employed as elevator boy. His pilferings, it appeared, were used for the purchase, amongst other things, of cigarettes. The magistrate having bound the offender over to appear at court, it is to be hoped that the evidence in the case will be so utilized there as to enable the Commonwealth to place its condemnation upon that dealer in tobacco who has so flagrantly violated the well-published statute enacted by the last Legislature, which provides "that if any person or persons shall sell cigarettes to any person or persons under the age of 16 years, he or she so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than three hundred dollars."

Some may be disposed to look upon the offence as a light one, and the extreme penalty provided as heavy. But is it so? A convincing argument, I think, to the contrary, was found in the case of the boy Robinson, fifteen years of age, who died last spring in Philadelphia, from the effects of the use of tobacco. The verdict of the Coroner's jury, as it appeared upon the register, which I personally inspected, is "Narcotic poisoning from the excessive use of tobacco." Considerations of simple humanity, exclusive of any requirement of penal law, ought to operate against the selling of cigarettes to our boys, and I trust that any proved violations of the act will receive deserved punishment for the sake of society at large, for the protection of the boys, and as a rightful warning and true kindness to dealers, who may even, as in the above case, make themselves morally liable as contributory to death by poisoning.

And it is not merely body poisoning to which a large number of the dealers have lent themselves. Referring to the degradation of those cigarette manufacturers who send out impure pictures, the Southern Churchman several months ago said, in alluding to some efforts made to stop the evil in Philadelphia:

"We know not whether there are such (manufacturers) in Virginia or Richmond—we take for granted our people would not be guilty of a crime against humanity—but if there be, we need only say they are criminal in the eyes of Virginia laws, as well as detestable in the estimation of the pure and holy Christ. One of the false charges brought against Socrates was that he was a 'depraver of youth.' Even heathen Athens felt the enormity of such an offence. But how little the influence of any one man in a small community like Athens, compared with that of men who send out such pictures by the million, the only effect of which is to corrupt our youth and bring untold evil into the family and community."

Those are straightforward words to be used in such a tobacco mart as the capital of Virginia, and the writer can say from knowledge that they were sorely needed right there. In Lynchburgh over a year ago the prosecuting attorney of the Commonwealth, with the approval of the Mayor, prepared indictments against a number of tobacco manufacturers who had grossly offended in this direction, and only withheld determinate action upon the promise of the accused parties that they would thenceforward cease their debasing work. The outcry all over the land against the iniquity has been such that many of the offensive productions have been withdrawn, though not a few of the manufacturers and dealers, unpitying, remorseless in their tactics, in dropping perforce the indecent, have taken up the brutal, and have deluged the land with millions of pictures of prize-fighters, handed to the boys who purchase their cigarettes.

So the Commissioner of Internal Revenue informs the country that the increase in the production of cigarettes the past year has been so many hundreds of millions; and so also when a certain prize-fight was announced not long ago to take place in the State of Mississippi, there was manifested an intensity of interest throughout the length and breadth of the land that was as singular a comment upon our civilization as it was humiliating to our profession of Christianity. Nevertheless, it was but the legitimate outcome of an unscrupulous, persistent and pitifully demoralizing education.

Had those moulders of public opinion, the "great dailies" of our cities, while furnishing an over-abundance of the particulars of the brutal encounter, and clamoring (in some places very faintly) for the punishment of the principals, gone a step further toward the root of the evil and that which ministered to its popularity, had they laid the finger of strong condemnation upon the purveyors of the brutalizing and crime-inciting pictures and prints, then the prize-fighting distemper and its aiders and abettors would have received a most deserved rebuke, and public opinion would have had a salutary uplift and an impetus in the right direction.

The German Government a few years ago, taking alarm at the evident physical deterioration of the people, especially of the rising generation, through the excessive use of tobacco, prohibited its sale (as our own States have been doing) to minors, or to those under a specified age. The morale of the imperial army and of fresh recruits for that army must be kept up, and only those of the best physique were desired as "food for powder." Similarly, when the old cruiser Michigan (the only naval vessel on the Lakes), made her yearly visit some weeks ago to Chicago to obtain recruits for the marine service, there was a great weeding out of the applicants. Of nine who called on the medical officer in one morning, all but three were found lacking, and this ratio of selection to applicants holds good, it is said, during the whole term of recruiting. Dr. Edgar, the surgeon, when asked the causes of the bodily conditions which led to the rejection of so large a proportion of the boys, said, "The main cause is cigarette smoking."

But the smoking of cigarettes, and the bad effects of the smoking, are by no means confined to boys. I lately read a letter written by an officer upon the Government ship Nipsic, when on its way to Samoa previous to the great and disastrous hurricane, in which the writer stated that he had met the well-known author, Robert L. Stevenson, at one of the South Sea Island ports touched at by the vessel; that he was in a nervous condition, evidently caused by his free use of cigarettes, and that he frankly admitted that he would not and could not give them up.

Of a talented marine painter of the city of St. Louis, who died the present autumn at the early age of thirty-six, the account states that his physician couldn't say what was the matter with him. His father, however, candidly admitted that his death was due to cigarettes.

Now, ere yielding to a habit before which such men of might as Senator Hill, General Grant, and the Emperor Frederick succumbed, would it not be greatly wise to emulate the example of the converted Namaqua chief, Titus Africaner, who, when "bowed under the convictions of the Holy Spirit, confessed his sins, went to his garden, pulled up the dekka which he formerly smoked and stamped its seed into the ground where he knew it would not vegetate." So he did with the honey beer which had made him drunk, breaking the vessel which contained it.

It is true that this Titus was only an uncultured South African, yet how thoroughly brave, consistent and animated with the Christ-like spirit was his course in putting away that which he was convinced was a stumbling-block in his own pathway and in that of others! How compares it for instance with the self-indulgent position of a certain Superintendent of a New England School District, who having admitted that the tobacco habit "is expensive, uncleanly, almost always hurtful to children, and perhaps sometimes to adults," concludes with the complacent reflection that his cigar has comforted him in the past, and he "will not malign it now." But many a confirmed user of the bottle has said just that. And further and far more important, an uncleanly or physically-harmful habit, and the associations connected with the habit, may mar or stain the better part in man, long before the body gives evidence of the progress of the work of impairment.

As a practical query, the pertinency of which I think is sufficiently evident—Which of the two above cited examples is most desirable to set before the cigarette-tempted children of this generation?

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Christ in his native city, vs. 16-19. It seems a most natural thing that Jesus should proclaim the Gospel first in Nazareth, where he had spent not only his childhood and youth, but the opening years of his manhood; yet quite a period had elapsed in his ministry before this first and only recorded visit to his native town. He seems to have laid himself out especially to win them by preaching from one of the sweetest texts in the Bible a sermon entirely on the love and mercy of God. Pentecost, in his Bible Notes, notices that in his quotations from Isaiah Christ stops at a comma, and leaves out the conclusion of the sentence, "and the day of vengeance of our God." There are times when it is best to deal more in promises than in threatenings, and other times when we need to paint in the most vivid colors the terrible consequences of sin! A minister, or any Christian to whom it is given to speak to sinners "will not err in judgment" if "the Spirit of the Lord is upon him," but will portion out the word of truth according to the needs and spiritual condition of his hearers. As Christ was, so are we in this world. His true followers must be all "anointed by the Spirit," in order that they do the work of Christ, in contradistinction to the works of the devil which Christ came to destroy. Individually and collectively the church must "preach the Gospel to the poor" if she would regain her ancient power. Every true Christian is, or should be, "a son of consolation," with a mission to heal broken hearts and wounded souls. Made free himself, it is his mission to deliver others. Some are bound in the chains of evil habits, some by unbelief; but the worst fetters of all, because the hardest to break, are the fetters of a false belief. A religion that has Christ in it, however the truth regarding him may be obscured by superstition and priestcraft, can never be quite so bad as a religion entirely without Christ, and which makes man his own savior. This is why every Christian, pastor or layman, who knows that the lodge is a Christless religion, is bound not only to warn men against such a snare, but to try to break the chains of those who are already its captives. Lastly, "to preach the acceptable year of the Lord," to offer men a present salvation and impress upon them that now is the accepted time. The church which leaves these things undone will become a dead branch.

2. God's free grace, vs. 20-27. This was a Gospel sermon in its fullest sense. It was the first they had ever heard, but instead of being melted by it they only admired the grace and eloquence with which he spoke. It made no real impression on their hearts. Mark says "they were offended at him." That they had known Christ and his family intimately from his childhood stood in the way of their receiving him, just as now-a-days it often seems harder to convert those who have heard about Christ, and been familiar with Bible truths all their lives, than the untutored heathen. Mark tells us that he healed a few sick people, but any especial display of his divine power was impossible because of their unbelief. While in Capernaum he was constantly besieged by those who sought for healing; yet not one sick person either came or was brought to the synagogue, at Nazareth, though from verse 23 it is plain that they knew all about his mighty works and were expecting, or at least requiring in their hearts that he should do the same there. But no miracle would have satisfied their stubborn unbelief. They would have been still the same captious critics. If they would not have believed his words, neither would they have believed his works.

3. Christ rejected, vs. 28-32. Unbelief is always exclusive. True faith embraces the whole world; and the measure of our faith is the earnestness of our desire that souls should be saved. When Christ told them that the despised Gentiles were to be given that share in the Gospel feast which they refused, they were filled with wrath and rose up at once in a mob prepared to treat him as a religious blasphemer. People who let their prejudices stand in the way of truth are the first ones to get angry at the truth. Those who refuse Christ's message are always his enemies, though they may never consider themselves such. To deliberately reject Jesus never fails to put the soul which does so in an attitude of antagonism towards him. This was Christ's last visit to Nazareth. The golden opportunity we fail to seize will be given to another, and neither in time nor eternity will it be offered us again.

—In different parts of the world, under the auspices of sixteen different societies, there are twenty-seven vessels engaged in missionary work. Six of these are employed in the Pacific Ocean, and sixteen of them along the coast or on the rivers of Africa.

—The sale of the Report of the World's Missionary Conference held in London, has already been very large, but a friend of missions, by a most liberal contribution, authorizes Mr. Fleming H. Revell of Chicago to send the two complete volumes, postpaid, to any Protestant minister or missionary in any part of the world, on receipt of only $1.50. The volumes are a thesaurus of missionary information.

—Churches are being built in New York more rapidly than ever. According to Harper's Weekly plans for fifty new church edifices have been made up within the past two years, involving an expense of about $4,000,000. Of the new churches built or begun since Jan. 1, 1888, there are twelve Roman Catholic, eight Protestant Episcopal, eight Presbyterian, three Methodist, three Baptist, one Unitarian, one Lutheran, one Congregational, two Jewish, besides several of a miscellaneous character. The Protestant Episcopal are the most costly, as a rule, and the Roman Catholic the next in cost.

LODGE NOTES.

A resolution was adopted at the Pennsylvania encampment of the G. A. R. at Shamokin, Pa., Wednesday, requesting the United States Government to prevent the erection of Confederate monuments on the Gettysburg battle-field.

The supreme lodge "Knights of Honor" has adopted designs for honorary jewels of past officers, which may be worn by them in place of badges. They are described as expensive and extravagant pieces of lodge "furniture."

A lively contest is anticipated at Quincy for the position of commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic of Illinois. The Chicago men have brought out the Rev. Horace W. Bolton, past commander of post 28 and the pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church. Col. W. L. Diston of Quincy is an active candidate, and it is proposed to run Gen. John McNulta of Bloomington.

A district convention of lake sailors, including the members of Assembly 136, Knights of Labor, and a number of visiting delegates, said to represent between 3,000 and 4,000 sailors, began the other day, in this city. Several important measures were before the meeting. The most prominent one is the advisability of wholly withdrawing from the Knights of Labor and the jurisdiction of Master Workman Powderly.

James Johnson, "Past Great Sachem" of the Red Men lodge of Colorado, is said to be by the organ of that society "thoroughly imbued with the principles" of lodgery, being also a member of the Freemasons, United Workmen, Sons of Veterans, Chieftain's League, Knights of Pythias, and various other leagues too numerous to mention. Most men who attain to magnificent titles in any one of the orders are familiar figures in several others.

The secret fraternities of the Northwestern University at Evanston lately banqueted for about five or six hours. It was at the annual Pan-Hellenic banquet. The press report says: "The fraternities represented were Phi Kappa Psi, Beta Theta Pi, Sigma Chi, Phi Kappa Sigma, and Phi Delta Theta. After the banquet the symposiarch, Mr. A. R. Edwards, of Beta Theta Pi, made a few remarks and the 'Pan-Hell' chorus sung a song. The program was varied by fraternity and college songs, and at its close the boys went out serenading."

The following item is going the round of the lodge papers: "Chicago is to have an Odd-fellows' temple, and like everything else undertaken in that city, it is to be erected on a grand scale, and will cost $1,000,000. The new building will be located in the business portion of Chicago, and will be arranged to accommodate all the Odd-fellow lodges in the city. In addition to the lodge-rooms there will be a large auditorium that will accommodate 10,000 people. Office rooms will also be arranged for, and it is the intention of the association to make it the finest temple in the country." We hardly need say that it is only an echo of the Masonic temple project, and that is all. The idea of the Odd-fellows providing a hall to hold 10,000 people is a good joke.

Wm. E. Curtis, the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Daily News, is responsible for the following: At the end of the old and the beginning of the new year the newspapers are usually full of advertisements announcing the election of officers of various financial, commercial, social, and benevolent societies, and it is amusing to note the names of the organizations in vogue among the colored people, who have a penchant for clubs, literary circles, and charitable societies. The following is a list of some of the titles of these organizations: "Junior Rising Sons and Daughters of Joshua," "Benevolent Sons of the Young Army Shining," "First National Phoenix Sisters," "Young Ladies' Golden Harp of America," "Daughters of the First Star of Jacob," "Rising Sons and Daughters of the East," "Loving Daughters of Paradise," "Young Rising Sons of Ham,"

"Sisters of the Lord's Delight Society," "Heavenly Called Laborers of the Vineyard," "Originating Sons and Daughters of Business," "Young Home Search Daughters of Love," "I Hope to be Righteous Society," "United Sons and Daughters of Rising Morning Star," "The Seven Golden Candlesticks," "Benevolent Daughters of Weeping Mary Society," "Following Sons of Abraham," "Loving Sons and Daughters of Revelations," "Grand United Sons and Daughters of the Living Council of the Cross," "Young Lambs," "Peaceable Daughters of Bethlehem," "Young Daughters of the Aid of Shiloh," "Young National Daughters of Phoenix," "Infant Daughters of Love," "United Sons of Adam," "Daughters of the Golden Chariot," "Sweet Prospects of Paradise," "Loving Daughters of the Sepulcher."

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

OBITUARY.

DEACON DAVID WEST died at Sycamore, Ill., on Tuesday, February 4, 1890.

He was born in Waterville, Oneida Co., N. Y., July 16, 1806, and at his death was past the middle of his eighty-fourth year. He lived during the years of his earlier manhood at Evans, Erie Co., N. Y., where he felled hundreds of acres of the forests and made them fruitful and smiling fields. He removed in 1843 with his family to Sycamore, Ill., and his home till his death was on the farm he then made from the then wild prairie.

He was a giant in physical strength, but his greatness was in his great, God-loving, God-fearing, God-serving heart. In his youth, while in spiritual darkness and somewhat in despair about ever finding the way of life, he went alone to the woods, and there in the solitude of the forests, alone with God, he made the firm resolve that, whether he ever found the light of life or not, he would never neglect any known duty. From that moment he never knew the want of that light which with him grew brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

He was the early friend of the slave, casting his vote for Birney in 1840, and that position he held politically, far above and aloof from the petty and selfish wrangles of the old slavery political parties till the shackles were stricken from every slave in the land.

His house in Sycamore was a station on the old underground railroad where many a dark-skinned fugitive from oppression rested during the day to be carried in the darkness to the next station on the road to freedom. He was ever a leader in the temperance reformation. He formed his ideas of secret societies during the times of the Morgan excitement, and has been a life-long worker against all forms of secrecy, with an earnestness of purpose that was as deep as his religion. Always active in all revival work, he has probably labored personally with more people concerning their spiritual interests than any other man in the community in which he lived.

His influence in building up a people amongst whom he lived, and in moulding all religious and social and political institutions aright during the formative period of a new settlement, was greater than can ever be told. There was a time after the building of the first school, church and other public buildings in Sycamore, and of the Chicago Theological Seminary, that he could say that he had paid more for public buildings than for his own buildings on the farm.

Many a man will say in his heart as the king said to his servant of old, know ye not that a prince and a great man is fallen this day in Israel? Let us rejoice that such a prince and great man has been permitted to walk so long with us; and in our sadness at our loss, we will also rejoice that he has gone as a prince to reign with Christ in his kingdom forever.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of Wheaton College (Wheaton, Illinois), Feb. 6, 1890, a committee, consisting of A. H. Hiatt, J. M. Hitchcock and L. N. Stratton, was appointed to give an expression in writing of the life, character and services of Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, deceased, which they did as follows:

WHEREAS, in the infinite wisdom of the All-wise Father it has seemed good for the fulfilment of his divine plan as it related to Mrs. Mary A. Bent Blanchard, wife of President Emeritus Jonathan Blanchard, to remove her from the scenes and vicissitudes of earth to the place prepared for the finally faithful of God; therefore,

Resolved, 1st, That while her physical presence is henceforth removed, we feel assured that her spirit lives, and her influence survives, and will endure while motherly kindness is remembered by the students she has encouraged, and while matronly traits are copied and womanly virtues are prized by the widening circle of influence she has projected among the

"THE KING'S TOUCH" SUPERSTITION.

In England, two centuries ago, popular superstition credited the "Royal Touch" with curing scrofula; and although for scoffing at the idea in 1691 the King was declared to be an "infidel," even his "faithless" touch was credited with a cure. These superstitious practices have now become obsolete, and in their place we have a scientific remedy in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which eliminates the impurities from the blood by the natural channels, thereby cleansing the system of all taints and impurities from whatever cause arising. It is truly a royal remedy, world-famed and guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. The only blood-purifier ever so guaranteed and sold by druggists. As a regulator of the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, "Golden Medical Discovery" cures all bilious attacks, Indigestion and Dyspepsia, Chronic Diarrhea and kindred ailments. For all derangements caused by malaria, as Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, and Bilious Fever, it is specific. As an alterative or blood-purifier, it manifests its marvelous properties in the cure of the worst Skin and Scalp Diseases, Salt-rheum, Tetters, Eczema, and Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, as well as Lung-scrofula, commonly known as Pulmonary Consumption, if taken in time and given a fair trial. educated young for nearly fifty years.

Resolved, 2nd, That the Board of Trustees of Wheaton College can but feel deeply the loss to this institution in the removal after thirty years of continued service from the "Ladies Advisory Board" of so safe a guardian and so wise a counselor as was she.

Resolved, 3d, That we hereby personally and collectively tender our deep sympathies, and fervent prayers to the desolated husband and bereaved children, for the great loss they have severally sustained in yielding up at the hand of death a devoted wife and a precious mother, though it be to give her to the more complete enjoyment of the "better things prepared" in the house of many mansions.

Resolved, 4th, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this board and furnished for publication to the Christian Cynosure and Wheaton Illinoisan.

FARM NOTES.

AGRICULTURAL MULTIPLICATION.

We have always held that many farmers are land poor; that they would make more money if they had less land; that the thorough cultivation of a small farm would produce better results than a large farm poorly cultivated. These truths are pointedly enforced by a short dialogue in the Western Plowman. The conversation runs thus:

"How many acres of land have you?"

"One hundred."

"Then you have bought some more; you had only twenty."

"No, I haven't bought any, I haven't had any given to me; I haven't rented any. Still I claim that I have one hundred acres."

"How do you make it out?"

"Just this way. I plowed it thoroughly, utilizing every foot of ground, making on an average one acre equal to two. That gave me forty acres."

"Just so."

"I then fertilized the land so that one acre produced as much as three did before. That made me twenty acres more, making the total sixty."

"I see."

"Then I practiced persistent cultivation, which I can prove will double the yield of an acre. Twenty acres more, you see, which makes me eighty."

"Yes, and now for the other twenty."

"The other twenty I got by only using the best of seed and by putting brains and system into my work. And to prove that my farm contains one hundred acres I am willing to compare results with the average one hundred acres anywhere in this section of the country. Things equal to the same things are equal to each other, you know."

THE FARMER'S HEALTH.

The farmer's health is vastly more important than the health of his stock or the dimensions of his purse. Next to a certain provision for the great beyond, the health of the farmer and that of his household should be his first concern. Oftentimes he makes it his last concern. His table might be spread with the purest health-giving food in the world, and yet oftener it groans beneath heaps and heaps of dyspeptic germs in great variety. But this is rather for the consideration of the farmer's wife than for that of the farmer. Then that cesspool of abominations, the receptacle of the slops of the house, is again, on the approach of warm weather, commencing its work of death. The air above it becomes contaminated with the virus of disease, which finds its way into the farmer's lungs and preys upon his vitality. Then its hidden percolations find their way, perchance, into the well, and ultimately into the system of the inmates of the house. The farmer is by nature so situated that he might enjoy a larger measure of health than any other class, and yet he does not. The extra vigor given him by a perpetual inhalation of fresh air is more than neutralized by improper conditions of living, self-imposed, and these, like a stern miner chipping away at the foundation of existence, deprive him of his great strength. There is no item of farm expenditure that runs up so fast as a doctor's bill, and nothing so destructive of the material interest of the farmer as the deprivations of sickness.—Christian at Work.

DON'T MORTGAGE THE FARM.

Keep your homestead free from mortgage. No matter how promising the speculation may be, how large a return the investment may afford, don't mortgage your home to raise money. We know of but one good cause for a mortgage on the homestead—hunger.

The rate of interest to be paid for borrowed money, added to the taxes and the current expenses, will eat up the best farm in Kansas.

Hundreds of homes throughout the West are passing into strangers' hands under foreclosure of mortgage. Money borrowed three or five years ago, at 12 or 18 per cent. interest on improved lands, worth at the time it was borrowed three times the amount loaned, could not, in many cases, to-day be paid if the farm

Sufferers

FROM Stomach and Liver derangements—Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick-Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. T. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says: "Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W. Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S. Wanderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

was sold for it. Unexpected expenses, losses of crops, poor markets, one cause and another makes the payment of the principal almost impossible. Money loaners may glibly tell how easy it is to pay the interest, and as times get better, meet the principal. Thousands and tens of thousands of dollars released from manufacturing enterprises of the East, are now offered in every town of the West. If the contraction of currency continues and we are to reach specie resumption in 1879, the payment of the mortgages made to-day will take the farm upon which they are placed. Shun the mortgage as you would a contagious disease. The Legislation of to-day is in the hands of money, and all that will guard, protect and make money more valuable will be done. Better to live in the homestead cabin with the clothes ragged, and the implements old and worn, than sign a mortgage which, after years of worry and suffering causes the home to go to the usurer. Wait; if prosperity comes, the mortgage will not be needed; if it does not, all the more reason to have the home clear from debt. Mothers and fathers, if you want the home for the children, don't sign the mortgage.—Kansas Farmer.

It is pure economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 doses one dollar." It is stronger, purer, and better than any other blood purifier.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason. 15 cents each.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church. Paper covers, price, 20 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DEGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each.

Anti-Masonic Sermons and Addresses. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the sermons of Messrs. Cross, Williams, McNary, Dow and Sarver; the two addresses of Pres't Blanchard, the addresses of Pres't H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion" and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 297 pages. cloth, $1.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinful oaths of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres't J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Masonic Salvation, as taught by its standard authors. This pamphlet is a compilation from standard Masonic works, in proof of the following proposition: Freemasonry claims to be a religion that saves men from all sin, and purifies them for heaven. 111 pages, price, postpaid, 20 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 32 pages. Single copy, six cents.

Masonic Outrages. Compiled by Rev. H. H. Hinman. Showing Masonic assault on lives of seceders, on reputation, and on free speech; its interference with justice in courts, etc. Postpaid, 20 cents.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or FREEMASONRY SELF-CONVICTED. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. 207 pages. Postpaid, 40 cents each.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. 15 cents each.

Judge Whitney's Defense before THE GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. H. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. 25 cents each.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 35 cents.

Hon. Thurlow Weed on the Morgan ABDUCTION. This is the legally attested statement of this eminent Christian journalist and statesman concerning the unlawful seizure and confinement of Capt. Morgan in Canandaigua jail, his removal to Fort Niagara and subsequent drowning in Lake Ontario. 5 cents each.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres't J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James W. Hams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. Five cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 336 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Harrison, on Monday, nominated Charles Emory Smith, of Pennsylvania, to be United States Minister to Russia.

The President, on Monday, signed the proclamation opening the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. He also issued an order establishing land offices at Pierre and Chamberlain.

Attorney-General Miller has decided to instruct the United States district attorney at New Orleans to bring suit against the directors of the Southern Exposition held in that city in 1884-5 for an unpaid balance of $700,000 of the $1,500,000 loaned by the government. The directors are among the most influential and wealthy men of the city—bank presidents, merchants, and commission men, worth together $5,000,000 or $6,000,000—so that if judgments be obtained the money can be collected.

The Senate Wednesday afternoon in executive session confirmed the nomination of Thomas J. Morgan to be Commissioner of Indian Affairs by a vote of 28 to 16. The case was discussed for nearly five hours. Senators Spooner and Manderson took up especially the charges affecting General Morgan's military career and answered them at length. Senator Jones, of Arkansas, who has led the opposition to confirmation on the floor of the Senate, closed the debate.

CHICAGO.

Seth Twombly, the engineer who was responsible for the South Englewood collision in which seven people lost their lives, with his fireman and conductor, were put on trial, Feb. 10.

The heirs of the late Conrad Seipp, the brewer, yesterday distributed $135,000 among seventeen hospitals and other charitable institutions, in sums ranging between $15,000 and $5,000.

John Graham, charged with jury bribing in the Cronin case, did not appear in court and his bonds for $15,000, with F. H. Trude and W. P. Whelan as sureties, was forfeited.

At the meeting of the Chicago Presbytery, Feb. 14, the advocates of a moderate revision of the creed were successful, the extremists who wanted a new declaration only mustering twenty votes.

Fire in the great Farwell Building, at Adams and Market streets, Feb. 14, damaged the stock of Work Bros., Taylor Bros., and Mendel & Co. to the extent of $375,000. The damage to the building was about $75,000. All were fully insured.

Carnegie, Phipps & Co., of Pittsburg, Pa., were on Wednesday awarded the contract for three and a half miles of iron work on the Chicago Alley Elevated Railroad, the work to be completed by July.

COUNTRY.

The question of closing saloons on Sunday in Racine, Wis., is coming up for considerable discussion just at present. Mayor Mitchell has recently issued orders urging policemen to be very watchful and arrest all who should sell liquor on the Lord's day. The municipal election will, in all probability, be fought on this issue next April.

Monday night at Central Lake, Mich., Oliver Benway's house was destroyed by fire, resulting in the burning to death of Mrs. Benway's mother. Two children were also seriously burned.

The excitement over the lottery bill claimed to be in the interest of the Louisiana Lottery Company, reached its climax Feb. 10 in the House of North Dakota, when further consideration of it was indefinitely postponed.

It is expected the prohibition bill of South Dakota will be sent to the Governor some time this week. The Senate and House have agreed upon the penalties, the date of enforcement, and a number of other points of importance, but a committee of conference will doubtless effect unanimity in a few days at the outside. There is a feeling that the sooner the bill is out of the way the sooner the legislative wheels will get under motion again, and it is certain some pretty fast time must be made hereafter, or the results will be meager and few.

The municipal election in Salt Lake City, Monday, resulted in the defeat of the Mormons, causing the wildest demonstrations of joy on the part of the "gentile" population. The "saints" threaten to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is reported from Allendale, Barnwell county, S. C., that a Negress who had not denounced the recent wholesale lynchings, was decoyed to her door at night by Negro women dressed in male attire who beat her almost to death and killed her infant. Fifteen of the women are said to have been arrested.

The steamer Amsterdam, which arrived at New York Monday, passed through an icefield 165 miles long.

The boiler of a locomotive burst Friday near Douglas Station, Pa., killing Engineer John Ludwig and Flagman Charles Jenkins and injuring three or four others.

Albert P. Miller, colored pastor of Dixwell Avenue Congregational church at New Haven, N. Y. was awarded $500 damages against an Albany steamboat captain for discriminating against him on account of his color.

In accordance with the opinion of the Colorado Supreme Court rendered Friday that the State had the right to close the saloons in Denver on Sunday, all those places, with one or two exceptions, where liquor was sold in restaurants closed their doors at midnight last night, and will be closed until Monday morning. This is the first time the law has been enforced in Denver. There was no disturbance, and the general expression was that the law would be successfully carried out in the future.

FOREIGN.

The religious riot at Hull, Canada, caused a heated debate, Wednesday, in the Canadian Parliament, creating such wild excitement that the Speaker at one time left the chair.

A close friend of Dom Pedro says he has received a letter from Brazil announcing that the movement there to place the ex-emperor in nomination for president of the republic is strengthening and spreading. The emperor has been informed of the intention of his friends and they await his consent to the use of his name. The emperor has already expressed his willingness to return to Brazil in any capacity, public or private, it being his supreme desire to be allowed to die among his people.

As we go to press there is an anxious interest in four great cities over the vote on the Columbus fair in the House of Representatives. The struggle for this prize has occupied the attention of the country for months, and the vote of Monday will not settle the question. On the fourth ballot Chicago was supported by 134 members, New York by 95, St. Louis by 48, and Washington by 29. The majority must be 154 votes. The attempt to drag the affair into party politics in New York has been deprecated by every man of patriotic spirit. The Senate must yet vote and may not agree with the House, so the end is not yet. With all the anxiety to secure the fair, if it is opened upon the Sabbath day it will be a curse to whatever city secures it.

The formation of Sunday Rest Leagues in the different wards of Chicago is an interesting feature of the Sabbath reform. Their organization was suggested and is urged by the city Sabbath association and their object is "to co-operate with the Chicago Sunday-Closing association in securing, by all proper means, freedom from unnecessary Sunday labor, and especially the closing of factories, shops, stores, and saloons on Sunday." A number of wards have organized and it is believed that 40,000 voters have already enrolled their names in favor of this movement, and it is certain to have a strong influence on city politics. These leagues, ignoring party politics, will endeavor to select for the city council men who favor the objects above named. Their success means an infinite boon to thousands of laboring men, and a great opportunity for the churches.

With the new hope of regeneration for Utah a bill has been brought before the U. S. Senate to provide a school system for the Territory which shall keep pace with the revival, and both lead and nurture it. It is an elaborate and comprehensive measure, providing for all needed legislation. It secures a Commissioner of Education, who is to supervise the conduct of the public schools in each county and appoint assistants with the aid of the Governor and probate judges. It provides, moreover, for instruction in temperance and good morals and the use of the Holy Bible, and forbids sectarian or denominational books or doctrines. The Word of God is upon every Mormon pulpit, but it is seldom opened, and always set aside in favor of the dogmas of the Mormon prophets. If it is quoted its words are wrested to support these impious tenets. Senator Edmund's bill, if honorably enforced, would illumine every Mormon valley with that holy light which must ever banish superstition and false worship.

Our esteemed English correspondent, Rev. John Boyes, sends us a note from one of his papers which claims that the recent restrictions upon the movements of the anarchists in Switzerland have led to important changes in their mode of operations, and to the adoption of alliances in conspiracy likely to produce bad effect in Ireland. So-called political refugees were prevented by the Swiss police from holding secret meeting, and although some anarchists tried to escape the vigilance of the authorities not only in Berne, but also in Zurich and Schaffhausen, their plot was discovered. A few of them left for Sweden, while others decided to proceed to Alexandria. The necessary funds were supplied by the Russian Revolutionary Committee. The Nihilists are said to be in communication with the Clan-na-Gael for the purpose of aiding the agitators in Ireland, and also with the Austrian Socialist Association, in view of creating disturbances and strikes throughout Austria. A Russian woman, who belongs to the Nihilist Committee, has started for Ireland, where she intends to stay for several months.

Permission has been granted, by the inside ring of the G. A. R., to the colored ex-soldiers of the South, 30,000 of whom are said to live in Louisiana and Mississippi, to organize colored Grand Army posts. Gen. Alger, "commander-in-chief," concurred in this action, and organization goes forward. Like its Masonic parent, however, the Grand Army, at least in the South, refuses to receive colored men into companionship. At a recent departmental encampment of the G. A. R., held in Augusta, Ga., colored delegates claimed admission into the body from the colored posts which they represented, but were refused. The Augusta post gave a banquet to the encampment in the evening, to which the colored delegates were not invited. This action reveals the inevitable lodge nature to be inhering in the G. A. R. as all the rest.

The Champion, published at Louisville, Ky., is a paper respectable in size and ability, and aims to represent the colored citizens of that city. The colored people do well to have their own papers. Many facts and arguments that would never find expression in the Southern press have a voice, and reach the national heart. But the Champion seeks to do more than this. It is an especial organ of the secret lodge system, and champions Freemasonry. It has one or two columns especially devoted to this object. Never could there be a greater mistake. A paper that seeks to elevate a poor and oppressed people, and begins by teaching them to emulate the extravagance, the folly and the wickedness of those who call themselves "the superior race," is doing much to mislead and injure them. The best moral sentiment of the nation is opposed to the lodges; the worst is in favor of it, or at least quite indifferent. Some of the colored men who have recently suffered mob violence were prominent members of colored lodges. Their Freemasonry availed them nothing as against Georgia ruffians, whether Masons or not. The time, money and attention given to this order by colored men, would be a vast help to them if wisely appropriated. We are glad to know that many prominent members of the race are becoming awake to this fact.

A call has gone forth for a national convention to be held in this city, it is thought, at an early date, of the Triangles, or I. N. B. branch of what was once the United Brotherhood. In the seventies the Clan-na-Gael began its existence in this country as a physical-force, secret revolutionary body. At first its affairs were governed by a national executive committee, but, through the efforts of professional patriots, the executive officers were reduced to seven, then five, and finally, under the reign of Alexander Sullivan, to three—himself, Michael Boland and Dennis C. Feeley. These three formed the triangle. This triumvirate became infamous, and a split in the order ensued. In the summer of 1888 the two factions, the Clan-na-Gael and the Irish National Brotherhood, came together again in the United Brotherhood. When the I. N. B. murdered Cronin, last May, another split occurred; and, in national convention assembled, the Clan-na-Gael, by far the larger faction, unceremoniously ousted the I. N. B., or Triangles. Now the Triangles are to have their innings, and this call is for the purpose of organization.

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

'Tis better thus to live,
Though burdens crush our hearts until they break,
And all our way is hedged about with thorns;
Though morning brings fresh woes to hearts that ache.
'Twill only brighten crowns which heaven adorns
Upon each conqueror's brow,
So white with suffering now.

'Tis better thus to live,
And drink the cup once drained by martyr lips,
When standing girt about with burning flame;
To count each drop of blood that slowly drips,
And bear it all in agony and shame,
Because, by this we wear
A chaplet over there.

'Tis better thus to live:
What have we gained by living? Much, indeed,
Because 'tis only once that we can live
This life of pain and turmoil. May we read
In lines of flaming light, what he will give
In that land of endless calm,
With chaplet, robe and palm.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT IN BRITAIN.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The various churches of this country are vieing with each other in what is called the forward movement, and it would indicate some deficiency either in piety or pluck if Methodism were to stand disconnected with this progressive movement. This departure consists in new ways of doing old work, and the new ways are more or less imitations of Salvation Army methods, and have probably been suggested thereby. This is not necessarily the case, as the same thought will often take rise in minds diverse and unknown to each other, as might be shown by many of the discoveries and inventions of the last few years. The formation of Christian bands for visitation purposes, the introduction of brass bands of music into church work, evangelistic services, lectures, cheap restaurants, clothing clubs, temperance and thrift societies, and numerous other agencies in connection with our churches is modern.

In our large centers of population many of the churches were formerly filled with attentive congregations, but the houses have given place to mills and warehouses. As a consequence the congregations are small and the buildings comparatively useless. These buildings are being remodelled at considerable expense, their ecclesiastical look taken away and made into a kind of halls. Some of them, under the new arrangement, have been wonderfully successful, so far as getting people into them is concerned, though there are a few cynics who say with partial truth that many who become attendants at these halls are those who otherwise would have been in our churches, and that the new excitement is acting prejudicially on them by impairing the feeling of reverence. There is an unwarrantable tendency on the part of some to blame the churches for not doing more in helping on the working classes to a higher social and spiritual plane, as if the working classes were the only ones that ought to enlist the sympathy of the churches. A large amount of this kind of talk seems to us a bid for spurious popularity. One thing is certain, namely, that there never was a period in the history of our world when the working classes were in such a good condition. They never had better wages, better food, better homes, better institutions of an educational, philanthropic and religious kind than during the present age; and certainly Christianity has played an important part in this work of amendment. The churches are representative of Christian life, work and enterprise; and whatever may be said of exceptional individuals and their doings, the churches of the present century have been the best friends of the working man. The present forward movement seems an honest attempt to bring Christianity into fuller touch with the working population. The great danger is lest the leaders of the movement should become so excited as to lose their balance and so drift off into communism, which would be fatal to the welfare both of the church and the commonwealth.

THE GAMBLING OF PUBLIC MEN.

BY ANTHONY COMSTOCK.

It is urged, "Our judges and other high officials, both State and Federal, and gentlemen of prominence all patronize the races and buy pool." The races are the veriest subterfuge. How many go to the races except for the sake of gambling and with the hope and expectation of enriching themselves from the sharpers' ring? Professional gamblers, sharp, keen, experienced tricksters many of them, are the fellows to pluck the crowd. They hold the pool into which the dishonest employee, the bank embezzler, the defaulting cashier, the sneaking husband who carries off the bread and clothing of his wife and children, all bring and deposit their stealings. It is not hazarding too much to say that a pool is never made up upon any race in which some dishonest fund is not a component part.

The wretched part of it is "the sure tips." These are often the inventions of the gamblers. Young men get the idea that they are sure to win, and they are so carried away with the certainty of a hit that they are bound to try their luck by fair or foul means. Two young men of most reputable families were brought to my notice last summer who obtained over $100 worth of jewelry upon false pretences, went at once and pawned it for $50 and staked it in a notorious den in Barclay street upon a "sure tip," only to lose it. Then ruin and a prospect of arrest for grand larceny stared them in the face. Friends brought the case to the Society for the suppression of vice. The gambling den was raided and closed, and we saved these two youths and their families from disgrace.

A mother with a nursing babe, a lady of great refinement, recently was asking for advice and assistance, having been forced from a comfortable and happy home to a hovel in the rear of a tenement house because her husband had robbed her of about $3,000 and spent it in one of the New York city pool rooms.

The iniquitous Ives Pool bill is responsible for these and hundreds of similar crimes. Although it pretends to prohibit pool selling and book-making everywhere, except upon the race courses between the 15th of May and 15th of October of each year, and has been upon the statute books nearly four years, yet not a single conviction has been secured under it. Nearly fifty of these dens have existed in New York alone up to within a few days.

It is not infrequent that judges and prosecuting attorneys and other officials are seen at these places dipping their fingers in the gambler's pool, although at common law it has for centuries been held that a gambling house is indictable as a public nuisance. Imagine a young man stealing a thousand dollars and placing it in the gambler's pool. He is detected and convicted of his crime. The judge who is to sentence him bet in the same pool, and, being more fortunate than the prisoner, won, and, as he sits in judgment, some of the very money which this young man stole and lost is in the judge's pocket, his proportion of the gambler's pool of stolen plunder.

The Society for the suppression of vice has undertaken to defend innocent women and children, remove temptations from our young men, and prevent the tempter from decoying honest labor to feed its capacious maw.

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

We said some things in our last article that would lead us to infer that there was a profound secular as well as religious and moral import in those words of Paul to Timothy, in which he exclaims with considerable fervor that "the love of money is the root of all evil." While this is true it is equally true that money is the root of all good; that is to say, as a civilizing tool, it is as indispensable to our progress as movable type to the printer, and labor-saving machinery to the farmer. I wish to say a few things about money as a tool, as a means to an end, and in this way point out the folly of loving money in such a way as to make men miserly and grasping.

If we trace our English word "pecuniary" back to its sources we shall find that pecus means ox, that all wealth once consisted in oxen; oxen were money, and there was no other. If a man wished to buy a certain article, and did not have his ox with him to barter, he drew from his pocket a piece of leather, on which was written the word pecus, ox, and gave it in exchange for what he desired. That piece of leather was good for one ox. When the Romans became an agricultural and mercantile people, and had other wealth besides cattle, they still called their money pecunia. When we to-day ask our lawyer what his fee will be, we are in reality asking what his ox will be. The old Anglo-Saxon word for ox is feoh. The Spartans used wood and iron for money, the Abyssinians used salt, the Chinese little cubes of compressed tea. Mr. Mill tells us of an African tribe that has a standard of value called the macute, so that they speak of an ox being worth so many macutes, a house worth so many macutes, and so on. But there is no macute made; it is just an imaginary thing. A very cute idea this, but we would feel sore perplexed if our silver dollars were all imaginary. Let us see how we can buy and sell in such a state of civilization. I have a bushel of potatoes, and want five pounds of sugar. I go to the man who has sugar to sell, but he doesn't want any potatoes. He does want apples, and would exchange sugar for them. I have no apples, so we can't trade. I go to another man. Yes, he has sugar to sell, but doesn't want potatoes. Could I let him have butter and eggs in exchange? No, I have no butter and eggs, but I must have sugar, and I must hunt till I can find some one to exchange with me. Imagine the delay, the inconvenience, the impossibility of carrying on business in such a way. Yet at one time men had to do just this. When man discovered fire he was able to make a long stride forward, but he could not have gone far had he not also discovered that wonderful tool, that most labor-saving of all machines, money. Now I sell what I have for money, and with money buy what I desire. And as Carlyle has said, "Whoso has ten cents is lord of the whole world to the extent of ten cents."

In those old days a man could not barter and obtain what he wanted, so he fell to making his own clothes, his own weapons, his own tools, and raised whatever he desired for food. Each man was a "jack of all trades," and as a consequence "good at none." But when the new tool, money, was discovered; money, the measure of value and tool for effecting exchanges, then men began to progress very fast, to specialize in their work, and became able to perform a certain definite kind of work rapidly and accurately.

Quick estimates are now made of the money value of men and things. In the book of Job we are not told that Job was worth so many thousands or millions of shekels, for at that time there was no such coin in common use. So we are told in a long list what Job's wealth consisted in. It would be tedious to have to resort to such a method now.

Money makes it possible for men to specialize, and this habit of knowing how to do one thing rapidly and well has led to nearly all the important inventions since then, as we shall see in another article.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

This is the great question both for the South and for the nation. Grant all that is claimed as to the ignorance of the Negro, and his unfitness for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, yet this is not the great obstacle to securing him his political rights. It is not that he is ignorant, but that he is a Negro. Among the mountain whites there is a vast amount of illiteracy, but this has been no objection to their voting. The opposition is even greater to the educated colored man than to the ignorant. The latter can be bull-dozed or cheated out of his ballot. With the former it is not so easy. Hence it is that with the growth of education there has been no abatement of bitterness, hatred and violence, but an increase, until the political demagogues that at first denied that they had deprived the Negro of his political rights, now openly boast of it, and affirm that they can never be restored. They give as their reason, that the race conflict is irrepressible, and that a man who has a trace of African blood is unfit to have a voice in National or State legislation. They appeal to race prejudice as their justification. Education alone, though the most pressing necessity, is not in itself a sufficient remedy. Nor is expatriation. This, if it were possible, which it is not, would be unjust, unwise and inhuman. Voluntary emigration can never secure the consent of more than a fraction of the colored people. Forced emigration would be strongly opposed by all but the worst elements in society. We must conquer the South. Not with arms and violence, but with the power of truth, and an appeal to their true interests. No people was ever conquered whose convictions were not changed. In this sense the South was never conquered. It will take something mightier than the sword to conquer them. Mr. Grady, in one of his brilliant speeches, charged Vice President Wilson with saying that this was "a war of ideas," and that the South "must give up her convictions." Mr. Grady said, "this could never be." And yet it must be, if they, and we, would have peace. Whatever might be true of ignorant slaves, it cannot be true that educated freedmen will consent to be deprived of the rights to which they are legally entitled. Nor can it ever be that the Christian people of the land will regard with indifference a perpetual violation of a fundamental law of the nation—the 14th and 15th amendments of the Constitution. The people of both the North and the South have greatly changed their convictions in the matter of slavery, and they will be changed as to Negro suffrage. Political animosities will never settle this question. They rather inflame it. The Gospel of Christ is the most powerful factor. Next to this the necessities of the public welfare will be a potent educator, and will finally eradicate the spirit of caste.

Comparatively little is said by the public press about the recent death of Rev. Johnston at Huntington, W. Va., in consequence of a fall that he received while being initiated in the Royal Arch degree of Masonry. It was an accident, by which a Methodist congregation lost its pastor, and that is all that is made of it. This Methodist minister, too, who lived a day or two yet after the accident occurred, seems to have had no thought that he was not about his Master's business when the disaster befell him, but spoke about constant readiness for death. Christians ought to bethink themselves, however, that putting themselves into needless danger is tempting God and placing themselves beyond the pale of the divine promise of protection. Masonry is an institution with which the disciples of Jesus should have nothing to do, because it does not recognize him to be the Lord of all and the Saviour of the world, and if they meet their death while going out of their way to court its favors, the accident is doubly sad. Masons say that "there is less danger about the Royal Arch degree than any of the others." But there is danger enough about this degree to result in death. Those who will not heed the warning of danger to their souls in Masonry ought at least to heed such warning of danger to their bodies.—Lutheran Standard.

AN INFAMOUS INSTITUTION.

JUDGE GRESHAM ON THE LOUISIANA LOTTERY.

"The Louisiana lottery is an infamous and pernicious institution, and it is only the tolerant or collusive policy of Congress that perpetuates it."

Judge Walter Q. Gresham is the one Postmaster-General of the United States who has made a fight against the Louisiana lottery on the ground of its illegal use of the mails for gambling purposes. He is familiar with the details of the lottery company's operations and the power of the United States Government to stop the business, and his positive declaration cited above embodies the result of years of investigation into this wholesale gambling. The judge was found ill in his room at the Palmer House, but he consented to an interview on the lottery question, and spoke as freely as his peculiar relations with the Louisiana company would permit.

"The present efforts of the lottery company to perpetuate its lease on life by getting into new territory," continued the judge, "is significant, and the possibility—I might almost say probability—of its succeeding should induce the government to take the most stringent measures to abolish the evil once for all. It was only the force of public sentiment that has put matters in a state of abeyance in North Dakota, and an evil of such gigantic proportions should not be left merely to public opinion as recorded by an enterprising press. The lottery company has preyed for years upon the ignorant and credulous. Its profits have been enormous, and its influence a sort of cancer on the public. It has gained its power largely by underhanded wire-pulling and bribery, and I doubt if it will see its franchise terminate without the most persistent efforts to transplant itself to one of the new and poor States where public opinion is not so strong as in the East."

"Do you think the company could get a renewal of its charter in Louisiana?"

"By means of bribery and purchase money I certainly do, and hence I think the general government should take the matter in hand. There is a strong feeling against the lottery in Louisiana among the best people, but ample funds in the hands of shrewd, unscrupulous men, such as the managers of the lottery are, can accomplish what is desired. That the company has an enormous influence among the members of Congress I know, but its manipulations are of such a character that to make direct charges of corruption or bribery is impossible. It is one of the things suspected and believed, even to certainty, and still not provable.

"In a measure my lips are sealed as to the lottery business, from the fact that I am now the defendant at Washington in two suits for damages of $100,000 each, growing out of the crusade against the legalized gambling of the Louisiana company. I am anxious to get the suits in court and get the matter out of mind, and as a judge here can't consistently anticipate my case in Washington, where I shall be a defendant. But the lottery gambling can be stopped, I am confident. When I was Postmaster-General, merely by enforcing the law relative to the use of the mails, I compelled the company to do its business in the name of a New Orleans bank. I followed the matter up and almost suspended these secondary operations. The result was that both the lottery company and the bank brought suits for damages, which have been pending ever since. The suits may have been mere bluffs, but the fact remains that the enforcing of the mail laws interposed a barrier to the company's nefarious proceedings that it deemed necessary to remove. The company knows it is in bad business. It presumes to a certain extent on its patrons for protection, and it is willing to furnish purchase money for what it cannot get otherwise. When I was in Washington the city was a veritable hot-bed of agents for the concern. What is needed is a vigorous fight, and an honest, fearless Congress."

"What legislative steps are necessary, in your opinion, to suppress lottery gambling?"

"Partly from the reasons already given, and partly from the fact that I have not followed closely what has been done in Congress since I was Postmaster-General, I do not care to particularize. I will say this positively, however. I know that it is in the power of Congress, by the enactment of a suitable law, to utterly abolish the whole traffic, and I further believe that if the matter were taken up in earnest the necessary legislation would have support enough to carry. I say this with a full sense of the power of the lottery people at Washington. Steps can be and should be taken to remove the whole question from the realm of uncertainty. The trouble in leaving the matter in abeyance, as in North Dakota, is that it leaves an opportunity for bribery and hasty action before public opinion can assert itself. This is liable to occur in the legislatures of any of the newly-admitted States, and it behooves the national government to preclude the possibility of such a course."

"You think, then, that the recent attempt to get a charter in North Dakota was but the beginning of an organized movement on the part of the lottery company?"

"I do; and I further believe that the company would spend enormous sums of money to get a charter. What is more, I fear that in the absence of proper legislation this company will succeed. Definite and conclusive action by Congress is the only safety, and to that end popular sentiment should be directed. Legislation is needed, and should be clamored for till secured."—Chicago News, Feb. 15.

THE TOBACCO MANIA.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

The Evening Journal of Rochester, N. Y., published not long ago an article on "THE EFFECTS OF TOBACCO!" The article was evidently written in the interest of the tobacco mongers, and was an attempt to palliate the evils of this poison weed. As the article was misleading in many of its statements, and calculated to do great harm, especially to the young and inexperienced, a reply was sent to that paper, but after keeping it several days, finally, by request, it was returned to the writer. It was then taken to every other daily paper in the city, where it shared the same fate!—"all with one accord making excuses!" And all their offices with the same accord stinking with poisonous tobacco smoke!

It would seem the mercenary tobacco interest, like its twin incarnation, the liquor interest, has come to muzzle and control the press. Said article starts out with the strange assertion, "That no two doctors agree on the injurious effects of tobacco." How an intelligent person, aiming at the truth and understanding the subject on which he essayed to write, could make such a statement, is indeed a marvel!

Nearly all the well-read, most learned, and eminent physicians, surgeons and physiologists agree with remarkable unanimity on the utter uselessness, the great wastefulness and the serious hurtfulness of the tobacco vice, and scholarly men of high standing and wide repute on both sides the Atlantic, as Drs. Rush, Warren, Sewell, Mott, Muzzy, Brodie, Spoor, Williams, and Dr. Holland; Drs. Woodward, Monroe, Hosack, Gibbon, Whitfield, of St. Thomas Hospital; Dr. McCosh, professor in the Calcutta Medical College; Prof. Dudley Reynolds, of the Hospital of Medicine, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. Lizar, professor of surgery in the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, and also Surgeon McDonald; Drs. Jackson and Kellogg, at the head of the two largest sanitariums in the world, and many others. And such learned of the profession in the Old World as Dr. Lallemon, Dr. Duroy, Dr. Perring, Drs. Delaunay, Thevenot, Bouley, Goyard, etc., of the French Faculty, with Dr. McCulloch, of the Scotch, and Sir Edward Smith, F. R. S., Dr. Drisdale, Dr. B. W. Richardson, F. R. S., of London, Eng., most eminent of the English Faculty, and the celebrated Dr. Krause, of Annaburg, in the kingdom of Saxony. These, with nameless others, most emphatically "agree," and have spoken able and earnest words of condemnation and warning; have issued learned treatises on the poison nature and evil effects of tobacco; some of them thundering out through the London Times. They charge tobacco with being "hostile to health, virility, morality and religion;" as a "wicked waste of time and money; fostering selfishness; indifference to the comfort of others; as inducing indolence, carelessness and callousness;" declare it causes and aggravates many diseases, such as "deathly nausea, giddiness, dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney disease, congestion of the brain, loss of memory, epilepsy, amarooses, deafness, blindness, heart disease, cancers, nervous irritability, idiocy, apoplexy, palsey, paralysis, with sudden and violent deaths." Such deaths by tobacco poisoning are frequent and fearful. I have known many myself, but the papers seldom give the true cause.

My own next-door neighbor died suddenly of tobacco paralysis. A young man in New York, only 30 years of age, not long ago a victim of the cigar, was stricken with tobacco paralysis, and after fearfully and helplessly struggling for several days and nights, died a most pitiful death. His friends and six doctors did all in their power to save him, but in vain.

Dr. Willard Parker, of New York, gives another similar, sad case of a young man only 26 years of age, in the vigor and prime of life, a victim of tobacco poisoning, who also died an untimely and terrible death from the same cause. I could give many similar cases did time and space allow. Again, many and fearful deaths occur every year from tobacco cancers; cancers in the mouth, on the tongue, on the lip, etc. I have personally known several sad cases. In one the cancer had eaten a hole in the side of his mouth, so that I could see the roots of his tongue; then it turned and ate down into the windpipe, and the victim died after great suffering. An old acquaintance of mine in Buffalo had a cancer on his lip where he carried his pipe. I advised him to go to Dr. Kingsley, at Rome, which he did, and had the cancer taken out, but it disfigured him badly. He died not long after. Dr. Carson, of Chicago, had a similar case and cut the man's lower jaw all away to save him, but in vain. He died a horrible death. I have a recent case, a distinguished man, a legislator of long experience and ability, Judge Kelley, whom nothing could release from terrible suffering but death. This foul destroyer makes no distinction between high, low, rich or poor. Among its conquered and slain victims are also such men as Senator Carpenter, Senator Hill, Gen. McClellan, Gen. Sheridan, and Gen. Grant; and the amiable and promising "Fritz," Emperor of Germany. What a serious loss to Germany where so much was expected from his reign! These able men might have been in most robust health, on duty, and enjoying active, wholesome life to-day, but for the useless indulgence of the poison and pernicious weed.

And yet, after all these and hundreds of other cases constantly occurring of the deadly effects of tobacco poisoning, the article alluded to very strangely asserts "there are only two cases of fatal nicotine poisoning on record." I could give many more marked fatal cases did space permit. It is time such Rip Van Winkle writers awakened to the terrible effects of this widespread evil.

Again, one of the least considered, and yet most serious and far-reaching evils of this tobacco mania, is the transmission of its deadly effects to offspring. The inexorable law of heredity accepts no excuses, tolerates no ignorance, makes no compromises, allows no evasions. It exacts its retributions up to the very line. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Here also wise doctors (not themselves victims of tobacco) "agree." Drs. Piddock, Kellogg, Ambrose, Zeiglar, Carson, Jackson, and others say, "In no instance is the sin of the fathers more strikingly visited upon the children than in the sin of tobacco smoking." The enervation, the hysteria, the insanity, the dwarfish deformities, the consumption, the irritability, the long train of nervous affections, the suffering lives and early death of the children of smokers bear ample testimony to the feebleness and unsoundness of the constitution transmitted by this pernicious habit. I know of three marked cases of malformation, and physical and mental malaction from this same inexcusable cause. An old doctor told me he knew of two families in which there was a nest of little children made idiots by the tobacco vices of their parents. O! ye tobacco fathers, think of this! A little child was taken sick and its parents feared it would die. The doctor prescribed, but in vain. He then advised the mother to take the child into the country, which she did, and it was soon restored. But soon after its return home it was stricken again in the same way, but another visit to the country soon restored the little one again to health. But after returning home, and it was seized again with the third attack of the same symptoms, the doctor suggested what he should have advised at first, that the father "stop smoking in the house," which he did. The little child was soon well again, and had no more of such attacks.

Again, many doctors "agree," such as Drs. Rush, Muzzy, Agnew, Kellogg, Jackson, that the use of tobacco creates unnatural thirst, rendering water and simple drinks insipid and unsatisfying, and hence leads to strong drinks, and is therefore a feeder to intemperance and drunkenness. "Take a cigar" and "take a drink" are synonymous terms; they both appeal to the same class of sensuous, depraved, morbid appetites. Dr. Adam Clark, the great Methodist commentator, in an able work on the evils of tobacco, said: "So inseparable an attendant on smoking is drinking, that in some places the same word expresses both, thus: peened, in the Bengalee language, signifies both to smoke and to drink." And he touchingly adds, "It is with pain of heart I am obliged to say many I have known, through their attachment to the pipe, have become mere driveling sots." Raphael Thorious attributes the discovery of "tobacco" to "Bacchus, Silenus and the Satyrs," the three representatives of drunkenness, gluttony and lust. Sylvester, the poet, derives the name "tobacco" from "Tobacchus," and naturally couples the two together, thus: "The pipe or else the pot."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19, 1890.

What is there of special interest happening in Washington at present? Well, much is transpiring, but its interest depends entirely upon you, what you are, what you do, what you like, and what you think. The woman suffragists, doubtless, think that it is their annual convention that opened here on Monday morning last. Others who know much about such matters, and are interested in them, would say that it is the proceedings of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, several hundred strong, which knows all about metals, that is holding its annual convention here now. The Presbyterians would be likely to say that by far the most interesting event of the week was the discussion by some of their noted Washington divines of the proposed revision of the Confession of Faith. As a rule, Washingtonians would say the absorbing theme is the business now before Congress, for that much abused and alway tardy body has at last undertaken to consider the World's Fair project, and its present intention is to vote on the question of a site next Monday. But zealous advocates of prohibition would say while some of these matters are well enough, and interesting in their way, the most important work of which the capital can boast is being done for the cause of temperance.

The non-partisan temperance organization of Washington, that recently-organized union which wants prohibition without politics, held its first meeting here last Sunday, and was supported by Congressman Stewart, of Georgia, and Morse, of Massachusetts.

The former began his address by relating a touching story which caused him to become a temperance man. When a lad, living among the Georgia hills, he had a friend, bright and promising, who married a beautiful and wealthy girl. He fell a victim to drink, and coming home once in a debauch, seized his little child who ran forward to meet him and dashed it against the wall. Not knowing what he had done, he threw himself upon the bed and was soon in a drunken slumber. When told a few hours later by the crazed wife and mother that the child was dead, he rushed out of the house and no one ever saw him again. "That day," the speaker said, "I looked up to God and swore that I would always fight the curse." He thought no section of the country was so much in need of prohibition as the South.

It would enable the two races to live together in peace. Of the ten race riots during the holidays in Georgia, eight of them were directly traceable to whisky. He said if every church member of every denomination would do their duty in working for temperance, prohibition would sweep the land. The Massachusetts legislator paid due honor to Postmaster-General Wanamaker for the manly stand he had taken on the temperance question, and said that those who claimed that they could drink or let it alone were simply mistaken.

All the famous advocates of woman suffrage who came to the city to attend their suffrage convention now in session, gathered at a banquet last Saturday at the Riggs house, and celebrated Miss Susan B. Anthony's 70th birthday. The first toast was "St. Susan," and all drank to it in cold water, Phoebe Cousins, the St. Louis lawyer, making the speech. A dozen others followed, among them "Susan's Wedding" in rhyme, by Mrs. Blatch, a daughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who herself sat among the skirted knights of her long crusade. This able stateswoman, who looked like a lord chief justice with her snowy hair puffed all over her head, a la the time of Louis XIV., says that in less than ten years women will all vote.

Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, sat beside Miss Anthony, and when asked to tell something new that might be done for the cause, proposed that a crusade be made upon the South. Said he: "The people of the South are quick to acknowledge it if they find they are wrong; not like us of the North, who maintain and hold to errors we have committed."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

ACROSS THE THRESHOLD OF SEVERAL CITIES IN EASTERN MASSACHUSETTS, WITH PROMISES OF FUTURE VISITS.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 15, 1890.

Last Sabbath I supplied the Reformed Presbyterian Chambers Street Church in this city morning and afternoon. The congregation is itself a tribute to its founder and pastor, whose "works live after him" in the intelligent, well-instructed people who so long attended upon Bro. McFall's faithful ministry. No one admitted to this pulpit need hesitate to take advanced ground or to speak freely of any real reform or living question of the day.

On Monday morning I joined Mrs. Stoddard, who had preceded me to Wellesley, spending Sabbath with our gifted N. E. correspondent. We were glad to find her so far restored as to be able to go about the house, and occasionally walk to church without the aid of a cane. Her restoration now seems assured, and I hope yet to hear from her lips on the platform such words of strength and courage as delight those who read her articles. Since she has taken the office department of the Independent Christian her quiet cottage parlor has put on the appearance of the "editor's sanctum," and the numerous exchanges indicate a wide field through which she may range to gather facts for many less favored to read.

We were disappointed in not finding Rev. P. D. Cowan at home when we called, but Mrs. C. gave us facts of interest, and assured us of her own and her husband's aversion to the lodge. Special services had been held in their church and were to be resumed, and one young man who belonged to the Odd-fellows in a neighboring town had been seriously impressed, so that when the question came up whether he should attend the lodge or the church service, he decided to "Go up unto the house of the Lord," lest the festivities of the lodge should dispel more profitable and serious thoughts. As Bro. Geo. C. Needham is to conduct services there during next week, it is to be hoped that this and other young men, perhaps more needy, will receive instruction on the danger from this system of false worship.

At Wellesley College we met Miss Tuttle, assistant lady principal, and informed her of the student's plan of correspondence, which seemed to be received with favor, and a promise of further consideration. Mrs. Stoddard called on some of the most active W. C. T. U. ladies and explained our work.

At Worcester we were entertained by our longtime friend, Mrs. T. S. Bliss, whose kindness greatly enhanced the pleasure of our stay. This good lady fearlessly maintains the testimony of her sainted companion, and is, in her quiet way, making her influence felt. Bro. Pratt and his wife have put us under new and great indebtedness to them by their attention to our wants and their liberality in support of the cause. Of the six pastors seen in Worcester five had decided convictions against the lodge, J. F. Lovering being the exception. This, perhaps, was to be expected, since he is an active member of several lodges, and is reported in the papers as having taken eighteen degrees of Scottish Masonry, and figured prominently with Geo. F. Hewitt, a liquor dealer, in some of their public exhibits. I cannot vouch for the statement, but incidentally learned that of the $25,000 paid in salaries for administering the city government, $23,000 go to active members in the secret orders. If this is correct Worcester is certainly governed and taxed at the discretion of the lodge.

At Putnam, our next stop, we were received at Hon. George Buck's, and treated "right royally" by our host and hostess. The Congregational church, of which they are members, is at present without a pastor, Rev. A. I. Love having recently resigned and started on a trip to the Holy Land. We attended and enjoyed their Thursday evening prayer meeting, in which Dea. Davenport spoke of the Universalists as not differing materially in the ultimate analysis of their creed from the Congregationalists. Dr. Sharp felt called upon to correct what he thought an error in the statement of theological teachings, and made some very pointed remarks, but all in a most excellent spirit.

Bro. George M. Morse was away at the time, but his pastor, Rev. Mr. Stubbert, of the Baptist church, reassured me of his views in opposition to the whole system of secret brotherhoods. He has but five secretists in his large church; and, if I rightly understood him, all but one of these joined while in the army. He conferred freely in regard to meetings there to discuss the subject, and is willing to attend and give his testimony. Bro. Morse has an annual holiness convention which opens this year in his hall, March 4. I hope to attend and present our work, and to induce others of our friends to attend and take part in the discussion, if it is allowed.

At Webster, Mass., I found a union meeting in progress. Calling on the four pastors of the city I learned that two were decided and outspoken against the orders, and that neither of the others belonged or were favorable. Rev. N. H. Harri-men, evangelist, said he found the lodge one of the greatest obstructions in revival work. The M. E. pastor told of very unpleasant experiences with the orders at funerals, and said one of the saddest things he had known of late was that of four promising young ministers being initiated the same night in a Masonic lodge at Springfield. Owing to special services in progress it was not thought advisable to have the subject discussed there at present, but I was encouraged to hope for a future opening when meetings could be held with the co-operation of some, at least, if not all the pastors.

Leaving Webster, my next stop was at Oxford. Repairing to the Congregationalist parsonage, I was met by the intelligent wife of pastor W. L. T. Dean, who informed me that her husband received only emergent calls until after 1 p. m. I did not insist, but stated my mission, to which she responded with most hearty assurances of sympathy, and assured me of her husband's accord. Passing on to the M. E. parsonage I found Bro. P. R. Stratton a member of a college secret society, and of some insurance order that is, he said, in a sense secret. He had received and read four copies of the Christian Cynosure, and agreed with its general teachings as far as Masonry and the older orders were concerned. I shall correspond with the brethren at Oxford and Webster, in the favorable expectation of obtaining a hearing for our cause in both those cities.

Returning to Boston, I find a marked copy of the West Boylston Enterprise, in which Bro. L. W. Frink states very clearly, and in excellent taste and spirit, some of the objectionable features of the Grange ritual. Evidently there is an interest in this question at West Boylston, and a lively discussion going on, which can only result in good. Rev. E. C. Faris, from Barnet, Vt., is here to supply the Chambers Street R. P. church for two Sabbaths, and in a conference with him it has been agreed that I am to go to his State and fill appointments as they may be arranged. Will friends in Vermont and along lines of railway leading from Boston, who desire to have the lodge discussed, write me at No. 309 Tremont street, Boston?

OVER THE HILLS TO PITTSBURGH.

ALLEGHENY, Pa., Feb. 19, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have often desired to ascend some mountain that I might behold what God hath wrought in nature. My trip of fifteen miles over Stone mountain to McAlevy's Fort on foot was a weary, but in many ways a pleasant, one. At Readsville I found myself in a narrow but fertile valley. Two miles on toward the mountain I found an old stone woolen factory, where honest toilers were engaged, as had been their fathers and grandfathers, in producing durable homespun goods. A bubbling mountain stream next attracted attention. The clear and sparkling water seemed to sing a merry song as it rushed on to turn the mill below. Numerous signs, "No fishing allowed," told that the finny tribe knew where health was found. As I neared the mountain the song of the brook was hushed. Its source, doubtless, lay buried thousands of feet where no explorer has ever been. Suddenly it came leaping forth from its dark caverns with such force as to turn the mill-wheel which some ingenious farmer had placed in its way. The woodmen I met were rough and dark-skinned, as a class, having long black hair extending to the shoulders and clipped off in front just above the eyes, resembling in this regard the "bangs" of some silly girls who do not enjoy modern enlightenment.

The iron ore secured in these mountains is said to be of the finest quality. Many men are engaged in mining and preparing it for market. Long caravans of mule teams, six being attached to each wagon, are daily seen bearing it to the railway.

Space forbids my recital here of many things of much interest to me. I found many warm friends at the Fort who turned out largely to my lectures, notwithstanding the bad roads. Rev. J. M. Adair, for years pastor of the U. P. church, had not neglected to instruct his people as to the evils and dangers of the lodge. Other pastors had not been so faithful, but had encouraged this thing of darkness which, unless checked, will destroy all vital piety in the churches they endeavor to build.

A secret society having some prominence here styles itself "The Golden Eagle." A few deluded souls imagine by going through its ceremonies and wearing a bright string around their hats they will gain a great insurance and much assistance. Although they only profess to insure for this world, they assume to themselves such titles as the following: "High Priest," "Venerable Hermit," "Worthy Bard," "Noble Chief," etc. If officers are what their titles would indicate, there is certainly a strange mixture. Every thing possible for my comfort and assistance was provided by kind friends. I departed with feelings of gratitude, after having given three addresses and planted twenty-one subscriptions to the Cynosure. Dr. Lussey kindly volunteered to act as Cynosure agent at the Fort. Any who can get their friends to take it will do them a great favor.

When stopping at the hotel at Petersburg for dinner, a young man who knew I had just come from the Fort in the stage inquired if I had attended the anti-secrecy lectures there. I assured him that I had, and inquired what he had heard about them. He replied that he understood it had made a great stir there, that the "Eagles" were pretty mad, but he guessed they did not amount to much.

I inquired what was said to make them angry. "Why," he replied, "they said he said they were a lot of Barn-burners."

I explained that the lecturer had not called them Barn-burners, but by way of illustration had said, "Suppose I join a lodge and bind myself with what is considered an oath to keep secret the plans and workings of that lodge, and then find they are plotting against my neighbor to burn his barn or destroy his property; should I keep my pledge to secrecy, or warn my neighbor?"

This is one of the many illustrations where prejudice and a muddled brain mixes. A number of meetings are planned for this city and vicinity. Some circumstances are discouraging, but I shall find more doors open than I can enter.

A HOPEFUL WORK IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I left home the next day after the N. C. A. Board meeting, Feb. 10th, and stopped at Creston. I called on an old friend whom I had not seen for twenty years. He subscribed for the Cynosure. He introduced me to Mr. Mettler, who subscribed for two copies for the ministers of Creston. Mr. Mettler took me four miles into the country to see Mr. N. Countryman, who subscribed five dollars to send the Cynosure for one month to fifty Illinois ministers.

I called upon the ministers of Creston. One of

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CYNOSURE COLPORTEUR IN INDIA.

It is a fact! My "dream" has come true! Just received a letter from Bombay which says that our colporteur exangelist mission committee have employed a native Christian as a regular colporteur upon the funds collected through the Cynosure office. Will every Christian who reads this please stop right here, bow your head a moment and pray: God bless the Cynosure colporteur in India!

Now, while your heart is happy over it, just think what an easy thing it would be for God's people to have a dozen such workers out in poor old India. Only $5.00 per month. Many a man or woman could give that much. Many more could give one dollar or less per month and so bear a share in this useful work. All this with no decrease of gifts elsewhere.

The Cynosure colporteur is working under the immediate direction of a missionary who was converted in Moody's mission work in Chicago, and has proved a successful minister in Bombay. Bro. Prautch is pushing the sales of books and tracts in Bombay in an excellent style, and the new Cynosure colporteur will do great good there.

Bro. C. B. Ward, my blessed colleague in the India Watchman, has recently sent one of his Telegu mission workers to sell books for the Watchman Repository. This will be still another worker to spread the anti-secrecy literature, along with other excellent books, in various parts of India.

Will everybody please remember that India needs thirty thousand more missionaries to give her the same proportion of Christian workers that you have in the United States. Who will go? Who will send?

THE CHALLENGE RENEWED.

SCHUYLER'S LAKE, N. Y.

Rev. D. P. Rathbun's lectures on Freemasonry having been slurred and belittled last fall by the Schuyler's Lake correspondent of the Richfield Springs, N. Y., Mercury, Mr. W. B. Stoddard read the allusions in the pulpit before opening his sermon and in comment said that this was conformable to the methods of Masonry, which fought with falsehood and misrepresentation; that Masons had declined an opportunity to reply at the end of lectures and subsequently a challenge for debate, but chose an unfair, unmanly and underhand defense. In his sermon he also casually remarked that Christian parents should oppose Masonry because it seduced their children, like the animal that stole their chickens, which was subsequently made a special catchword of reprobation in default of more important matter for censure. Misled by reporters, general remark was magnified into personal insult to excite his anger, but attacks on the order was the principal offence as proved by the opposite terms of the mingled praise and denunciation. The correspondent, who is a justice, the orderliest of the orderlies, opened the gates of his wrath and raged, raved, stigmatized and denounced to the climax of the lie and "vile cur snarling at Masonry" which suggests if it does not imply the deepest affront of the vulgar, when he exhausted his vocabulary but assured that more was forthcoming if his dignity was again assailed, and graciously offered to shake hands "across the bloody chasm" with a lady correspondent who had lucklessly come in for a share of his venom.

After the correspondent had ventilated his anger and before the other party had been allowed more than a finger's breadth in reply, the editor stated that the discussion of the Masonic question at Schuyler's Lake was closed to all parties. This was in response to offer for publication of the following, which, despairing of a fair and equal opportunity in print, demanded a public debate. But even this was too much for personal or business interests and a suggestion of a defense was refused:

The correspondent at Schuyler's Lake having closed his one-sided discussion of reformers to his satisfaction, the opposite party would like to speak in its own defense, and desiring a fair field and no favor, hereby challenges him and his lodge to a public debate by their champion at the above place. The question is: "Resolved, that Freemasonry is inconsistent with the Christian religion and a republican form of government," which embodies the issue. The Rev. D. P. Rathbun will take the affirmative as the advocate of the reform. If the challenge is accepted, it is to be announced in the Mercury with address of committee on arrangements.

In revenge for use of churches by reformers the correspondent withheld his annual contribution of two dollars, and another Mason refused after promising the same, which I believe substantially completes the history of the episode to the present time.

In his attacks the correspondent attempts to mislead by the extremes of exaggeration, but merely deceives himself. His boasted institution is a fraud of modern growth. It had its inception less than two hundred years ago and proved its recent origin by its immediate spread with a score of years to every country of Europe and through colonies to the four quarters of the globe. It is a parasite on Christianity and followed to the utmost parts to wage war upon it and convert churches into hollow pretences where it could gain access; for a man that swears to murder in the lodge cannot be otherwise than a hypocrite in a church founded on the Bible that forbids it; and a church controlled by such must be dead to efficiency like an insect loaded with parasites on a body with malaria. It is a rival and enemy of government,—a pattern and justification of Mollie Maguires, Clan-na-Gaels, Socialists and a multitude of the ilk who imitate to assassination. All who unite justify by the act the fact and principle of the murder of Morgan and are guilty by example of that of Cronin and others. But if it is wrong for an individual, it is worse for a combination to murder, for the crime is aggravated by conspiracy which adds to the evil and the penalty. Slavery in a free country once shamed the conscientious man, and Masonry with "servant societies" now walks hand in hand with the law of assassination, to proclaim the failure of free institutions. Recent excesses should excite opposition, but seemingly makes more indifference. American Catholics, overawed, it is said, recently resolved to receive all secret societies but Masonry, and promised to accept this within a year, although a few years ago it was called by the Pope the head of all evils in our day.

A good cause courts publicity but a bad one cloaks itself in a virtue as a need, sails under false colors like a pirate, and like him murders for silence. It is the antipodes of morals, and honeyed praise is the refuge of deceit like tyed doors.

In view of a second visit to the county by the Rev. D. P. Rathbun in the immediate future, it is proposed that the question of debate be reopened, and the above challenge is hereby renewed to the above parties.

CITIZEN.

THE WORK AND NEEDS OF THE MEMPHIS SCHOOL.

February 13, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your many readers will be surprised to know that I am now in Brooklyn, N. Y. Four weeks ago I left Memphis, and took the field in the interest of our Memphis school. The shortness of the cotton crop in the counties adjacent to our city, cut off a large amount of money pledged by our own people for the support of the school, in the way of pay for teachers and other expenses. Many of our country friends lost their mules, cows, and even their hogs, in some instances, have been taken away from them to satisfy the supply merchant. Your readers are, no doubt, aware of the fact that we have nearly all over our Southland the iniquitous mortgage system, and most crops are mortgaged ere they have peeped out of the soil. These mortgages are made: first, to the owner of the soil; and second, to the merchant who supplies the planter with provisions for himself and family.

But I must tell you of my missionary tour, for I have been, and am off on a mission. Having heard of the broad and generous heart of the New Englanders, and especially their interest in the colored people of the South, I thought I would visit some portions of it. Being favorably impressed with my visit during the meeting of the N. C. A. in December last, I returned to canvass this district. My efforts were first to get into the churches of Boston irrespective of color. I could not hide or cover in any way the true flag or creed of our school—"anti-tobacco, anti-liquor and anti-secret society." The first two were excellent, but the last one was a "stunner," as the little boy would say. I managed to get into a very few churches. Our creed would not go down. I met pastors who were heart and soul in sympathy with our creed, but they were afraid for me to go before their congregations.

I went to my boarding-house day after day and would pray to God in the deepest agony of my soul, when I saw and heard of the general cowardice of men who were occupying the sacred office of message-bearers for the Lord Jesus, yet were moral cowards, afraid to give the world their honest convictions. When that time comes to me I want the Lord to take me home to heaven, for I must never cease to have the courage to express my convictions, no matter where I am placed.

This plainness has militated against me, and has made my tour almost a failure, and the most I have done has been among the colored people. I have visited Boston, Worcester, Providence, Stonington, New London, Lyme, New Haven, and now I am in Brooklyn. In every place I found the ministers—Methodist, Baptist, and Congregationalists—devotees at the altar of Baal. And what surprised me more than aught else was that most of these colored ministers were men of learning. Some of them were graduates of Newton, Cambridge, Yale, Fisk, Richmond (Va.) Institute, and other schools; and yet they were, without exception, worshipers of the lodge. And then the women and men, deacons, class-leaders, stewards, local preachers and the children belonged to the lodge; and not one of them seemed to be awake to the blasphemy of their institution.

In Providence I met one A. J. Green, presiding elder of New England A. M. E. Zion church, with whom I had quite a lengthy debate through the Boston Advocate in 1887, on the subject of "Secret Societies as a Handmaid to Christianity." We met then for the first time. He was sitting in the pulpit of one of his elders, and having had an introduction to me he immediately called to my memory the subject of our debate. He was adorned with the badge of Baal.

Everywhere I stopped, except at Lyme, Conn., I had a fight with the minister on this subject, and I found myself at times very much hampered, but I prayed unto Him who hath promised to help me, and in every pulpit I gave no uncertain sound. In New Haven the Baptist and Congregational pastors are Masons, and the Methodist pastor is a seceding Odd-fellow; he met me with open hands and with joy. I sounded in his congregation the tocsin of war against the lodge, and it was no little surprise for him to learn that several of his members were ready to leave the lodge. The church was draped in mourning, because of the death of one of the officers a few weeks ago. This officer was a high Mason. The lodge met, made arrangements for the funeral, and sent the pastor word that the Baptist and Congregational pastors, as they were Masons, would conduct the funeral services at his church, and he could say a few words when they were through. He informed them quietly that they had "the cart before the horse." It was enough; they unhitched and did the right thing. The Congregational pastor is a graduate of Fisk University, has spent two years as a missionary in Africa, and is an old resident of Tennessee. His wife met me with joy, and is a radical anti-secret society woman. Both of them know of my society record, and both were glad to see me. The sister said she hoped God had sent me to talk to her husband, for every time he spoke of the lodge he caused her to sin. She had one baby boy, and laying her hand on his head she said, "If I thought this boy would grow up and be a member of any lodge, I should pray night and day for God to take him away now."

I preached for this brother with no uncertain sound, and at each place I would preach and tell of our work and ask for a collection.

I have raised in my four weeks' tour only $100, and I was hoping to get $500. We are needing this much now, and I shall return home on Monday, the 17th, and ask the Father of all to open a door by which the amount may come to us.

Our school is doing well, and is becoming a great moralizer in our community. Last week one of our young men was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist church, Chelsea, North Memphis. He accepted the call, is to be ordained next Sabbath, the 23rd inst., but is now serving, and has already organized a fund in the church to care for the sick and bury the dead, and has told the members they must one and all leave the lodge, and they are obeying his call without a murmur. Praise the Lord. I feel almost ready to take the field among the colored churches and pastors here in the North, for they are honeycombed and hampered under lodge influence.

You must excuse my long letter. Pray for us that God will help us and prosper us in our work. Yours for truth and righteousness,

R. N. COUNTEE.

PITH AND POINT.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Your circular concerning a call for a Conference on the Secret Lodge System meets my approval, and although I may not expect to attend, yet I heartily second the movement. Hoping that much may be accomplished by the Conference in the right direction, I remain,—J. V. GRISWOLD.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

I sign the call which you send me for a Conference on the Secret Lodge System with a great deal of pleasure. The whole system is one of the worst evils with which we have to contend, and the time certainly seems propitious for such a Conference. I trust that a hearty response will be given by all classes of Christian people, and that the Conference will be held and will be a grand success. My prayers will be with you in your efforts.—J. S. THOMPSON.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

If you desire it, I will present the call to our Ministers' Association and gain as many signatures as I can. "Murder will out." Then it is time for execution. I am in hearty accord with the movement.—PETER SWAN.

Our hearts are with you in your work against the secret order system. Hoping you may have a good convention, I am, yours,—S. L. BALDRIDGE.

CONGREGATIONAL.

As to the call of the convention, I am greatly in favor of it, and shall be delighted to be present. Perhaps age and increasing infirmities may cause my absence. I authorize you to put my name to the call.—NATHANIEL SMITH.

Most willingly do I sign the call for a convention against the Secret Lodge System, and return the same herewith. Rev. S. W. Eaton (pastor here) told me that he should sign the call sent to him. God help us! The professors on your list are my dear friends.—ERNEST COLTON

I can and will say that I believe that oath-bound secret lodges are a detriment to both church and state. I am a member of the G. A. R., and in it I see things I do not like, and I am willing to give it all up if it is in the way of Christ and his work.—P. D. WALLACE.

Cannot the time of this Conference be set in the week before the Commencement of the Congregational Theological Seminary, or in the week following, so that those at a distance from Chicago who may wish to attend that Commencement can attend the proposed Conference in connection?—SAMUEL D. COCHRAN.

UNITED BRETHREN.

I heartily endorse such a call, and feel that now is a very proper time for such a Conference, as now the nation is aroused as never before on this question. The only difficulty is to publish anything in the noted papers of our land.—N. L. HEIDGER.

I have signed without mental reservation, except that I can not certainly promise to attend the Conference. In addition to the secret clans mentioned as making the Conference imperative, might also be mentioned the Ku-klux and other secret political organizations, which have for their object not only the overthrow of free suffrage and free constitutional government, but also the subversion of all RELIGIOUS FREEDOM; and which seek on the one hand a religious despotism; or on the other, an anti-religious communism. May God prosper this endeavor!—P. H. MAGNES

LITERATURE.

In Babyhood for February is described a recently discovered means of relieving whooping cough, which is purely mechanical and so simple and harmless that it seems worthy of trial by mothers and intelligent attendants. Another medical article which will interest parents is that on "A Diet Disease," by Dr. James H. Young, in which the results of the injudicious feeding of infants are strikingly brought out.

Biblia, a monthly magazine for Bible students, teachers and readers, is the authorized organ of the Bible-Readers' Union. The February number contains the fifth paper on "Proper Names in Genesis," an interesting study. The daily Bible readings for the month are upon the attributes of God as Person, giving the various Scripture references with an expository note. The department for Christian Endeavor societies is ably edited. Published at 198 Broadway, New York.

The American Agriculturist for February is a full number. This is one of the oldest farm papers, having entered upon its fiftieth volume. It makes a fifty-paged magazine, calculated to meet the needs of farmers in the way of information in all departments of their business. Also the household department of the paper makes it valuable to the good wives. Some of the subjects treated are: "Making Rooms Comfortable in Winter," "Hints about Winter Work," etc. The children are not overlooked in the make-up of the magazine. Several pages are devoted to them.

Good Health for February, issues from the Battle Creek, Mich., Sanitarium in its uniformly attractive form. Dr. Oswald's health study is this month devoted to the Polar Regions. Various health topics are discussed. Dr. Kellogg, the editor, under "Medical Frauds," takes up the matter of specialists, and particularly the "pile doctors" or "officialists," as they now term themselves. He takes up the case of "E. H. Pratt, A.M., M.D., LL.D., homeopathist, officialist, etc." The proposals of this "specialist" are reviewed and severely ridiculed at length. This same "M.D., LL.D." was many years ago expelled from Wheaton College for membership in a secret society in defiance of the rules.

The Illustrated Review is not meant to fill a long-felt want. Instead it purposes to fill some portion of the public mind with entertaining fact, and the pockets of its publishers with coin of the commonwealth. It aims to illustrate the picturesque in contemporary life, and to review judiciously leading persons, places and things. The February number gives as a frontispiece a fine portrait of Henry George, along with a sketch of his life. "The Landless," otherwise life in the slums, sketched on the spot by artist and author; "A Place of Concord," an authoritative account of the new Lenox Lyceum, very fully illustrated, and a charming bit about F. Hopkinson Smith, along with reproductions of two of his pictures. Published by Cornish and Co., No. 2 and 4 Spruce street, New York, for $1 per year.

The February number of Our Day opens with an article, from the Negro's point of view, on "Unsolved Negro Problems." Mr. W. H. Thomas, from whose pen it comes, is agent for the Lincoln Institute, near Columbia, S. C. He was a member of the Otterheim University in the class of 1862, and has made a prolonged study of these problems. He speaks thus for his race: "We state our case. The Negroes are a law-abiding class. They are sincerely solicitous for the best development of the South and its people. The chief and foremost grievance of the colored population of the Southern States is our rigorous subjection to a universal and intolerable bondage of illiteracy. A second cause of complaint will be found in our industrial slavery. The ex-slave holders have at this time almost as complete a command of the persons and movements of the freedmen as before their emancipation." On the moral side of the Southern problem an evil of grave magnitude has laid its withering blight. A glance will reveal the hideousness of the situation and the helplessness of the victims, when it is affirmed that a majority of the so-called better class of white men have colored mistresses. Mr. Blaine and Mr. Gladstone fight what Mr. Gladstone calls a duel on the great theme of Free Trade and Protection, Mr. Gladstone basing his argument chiefly on large generalization, and Mr. Blaine on the concrete facts of American industrial industry. An account of the large meeting of the Imperial Federation League, held in London, Nov. 15, will be of interest to "annexationists." England will not let Canada go if she can help it. Dr. A. J. Gordon arrays the critics of the Prayer Cure: Rev. J. M. Buckley, D.D., Prof. A. A. Hodge, Prof. W. H. Whitsett, and Prof. John Tyndall. Hon. John Jay of New York, President of the National League, answers the questions to specialists. Several pages are devoted to Dr. Storrs and Dr. Thompson on the missionary policy of the American Board, and to the proposed reunion creed for Churchmen and Non-conformists. The editorials touch Mr. Covell's case before the American Board; Broad-church Theology; International efforts for the suppression of the slave trade in Africa; Unstable Government in Brazil; Afro-American League.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE

—OF—

CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM,

—TO BE HELD—

APRIL 22 and 23, 1890,

—IN—

First M. E. Church, Corner Washington and Clark Streets, CHICAGO.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake City, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces, have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian Church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we the undersigned, hereby give our voices in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago, on April 22 and 23, 1890.

HERRICK JOHNSON, Prof. McCormick (Pres.) Theo. Seminary, Chicago.
G. W. NORTHRUP, President Baptist Union Theo. Seminary, Morgan Park, Ill.
E. B. HURLBERT, Prof. in do.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD, EDITOR.

HENRY L. KELLOGG, ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1890.

THE CALL FOR THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE and its 333 signers have a place in this number. It is worth an ordinary convention, by itself. It is a convincing argument that our pastors and educators at least are ready for the discussion of secretism. In this list there are represented thirty institutions for higher instruction, and at least sixteen religious denominations. There are the names of 201 pastors, 115 professors in colleges, and 17 editors, lawyers, etc.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE will cost something. The hall rent, printing, railway fare of speakers, etc., etc., will be several hundred dollars. The committee appointed by the N. C. A. Board to arrange for the meeting make hereby a personal request of the friends of the movement, that the amount needed be made up before the date of the conference, April 22. This can easily be done if a small amount is sent from each. A hundred $5 bills would do it. Already the enterprise begins to pay many fold. Read the long list of signatures in this number, and answer if it is not of more value to the reform than the whole cost of the meeting. Some of those signing have done so with a true spirit of self-sacrifice. Let their good deed be met with a liberal hand.

CHRIST'S "GREAT TEMPTATION."

Dr. E. P. Goodwin preached an exceedingly able sermon in the First Congregational church, Chicago, last Sabbath, on Christ tempted by Satan (Luke 4). His doctrine was that believed by the evangelical churches: that Christ was tempted as a man; that the temptation was literal, as the Bible should be taken when no other intimation is given; that the devil doubtless tempted in person, not in his true character, but as a plausible fiend simulating an angel of light. The discourse produced a strong effect upon his hearers, and enforced his closing appeal to them to embrace their triumphant Saviour.

We wish to submit to Dr. Goodwin, and to the several theological seminaries of Chicago and vicinity, the following questions, to which we respectfully and earnestly beg answers:

1. Does Gentile worship (1 Cor. 10: 20) mean all the worships then practiced on earth, invented by men, without a Messiah or Mediator?
2. Are all like worships of the present day offered, as those were, "to devils and not to God?"
3. Are all self-projected, idolatrous worships, whether in pagan lands or Christian, now paid to devils as Paul says those were?
4. As almost all secret lodges have altars omitting the Messiah or Christ, and as every pagan shrine was a lodge (see Bishop Warburton), is not our secret lodge system, as that of the pagans, a system of demon, or devil worship?
5. As we are tempted in all points, like as Christ was, should not these self-projected worships be the chief burden of a sermon on the temptation of Christ?
6. And is not this our chief temptation, as it was that of Christ's?
7. Since covetousness, or mammon, or world-worship are considered idolatry, are not these pagan and Christian lodge-worships now covering the earth, in fact, by omitting the Mediator, Christ Jesus, the grand cause which obstructs Christ's coming, and makes this earth the moral ruin we see?
8. And as such altars dissolved and destroyed the United States of Palestine, are not our United States, by the same false worships, tending rapidly to the same dissolution and destruction?
9. Do these altars by omitting the Mediator, by whom alone finite minds can reach the infinite God, deprive our race of the knowledge of the true God, and leave mankind no alternative but atheism, or the worship of "the god of this world?"

We respectfully submit the above questions, imperfect as they are, to the religious teachers of the teachers of the present day. And we earnestly beg Dr. Goodwin, or some other fearless advocate of God's truth, to put these topics in clearer and more cogent form, and give their answer to the public through the Cynosure or other religious papers. We humbly submit to our respected brethren, that the above propositions contain the pivot of the destiny of our beloved country and the human race.

RELIGION AS RELATED TO INSANITY, SUICIDE AND DIVORCE.

Nothing in social science concerns us more than the great increase of mental disease and suicide that has been manifested during the last fifty years. If we add to these the enormous increase of divorces, so great that in some of the States they are nearly equal to one-fifth of the marriages, we see great occasion for anxiety if not of alarm. Within twenty years the percentage of cases of insanity in Massachusetts has increased at the rate of 135, while the population has increased at only 36 per cent. The increase of suicides has probably been as great. All this indicates an unhealthy condition of society, and demands inquiry as to the causes. We cannot attribute it to diminished physical health, or any deterioration of physical vigor. There has been a manifest increase in longevity, and there has been no deterioration in size or strength. Five hundred years ago men were smaller and shorter lived than to-day.

Nor has it resulted from greater difficulty of securing the necessities and comforts of life. Wages of laborers have been better than in the first half of the present century, while the cost of both necessities and luxuries has steadily diminished. The average native American is better housed, clothed and fed than half a century ago. The use of intoxicating drinks, though contributing largely to the result, cannot account for this increase, for a smaller amount of alcohol per capita is consumed now than in 1830; and there is a larger percentage of total abstainers.

The great facilities, as well as uncertainties in the accumulation of wealth have developed a morbid activity and greed for gain. This has been a contributing influence. But the main cause has been and is, in lowered tone of piety and the elimination, in a large degree, of the element of self-sacrifice from our religion. This is manifested in many ways; the substitution of some other method of raising funds besides direct giving, the institution of ritualistic ceremonies or similar attractions solely for the human side in all, or nearly all, of churches as an allurements to the outside world, and especially the practice of making pleasure-seeking a prominent element in religious work. Our holiness people, including the best element in the religious world, are wont to meet at some watering place or other pleasure resort and there spend some days or weeks in a sort of intellectual and spiritual dissipation. The poor cannot possibly be there, and rarely know anything of the thoughts that are presented. These religious junketings are attended with great expense, and to that extent, diminish the ability to give for any real benevolence, while they have ministered to a morbid estheticism that has tended largely to eliminate from religion the vital element of self-denial. Doubtless Chautauqua, Lake Side and Lake Bluff have contributed somewhat to knowledge and piety, but instead of benefiting the masses they have tended to separate them from all interest in Christianity.

Whether the church has followed the world, or the world the church, in this chase for pleasure, it is quite evident that pleasure-seeking has become in so large a degree the business of the people, that self-restraint has been greatly weakened, and the fear of God largely eliminated. Growing out of this general condition of the religious world there has been a great increase in what is called "liberal" theology, not among the illiterate, but in the centers of religious thought. So long as a considerable percentage of our religious teachers hold the present life is not a final probation, and a large and mixed church council can give this doctrine their implied sanction, it is no wonder that the ungodly should see little necessity of becoming Christians just now; nor that all forms of looseness in morals should be practiced in the churches. Secret societies have both grown out of and promoted this condition of the religious world, and are the legitimate fruits of false teaching.

Now it is abundantly evident that the fear of God is the great conservative element in society, and that whatever takes away or materially diminishes the element of self-denial for conscience' sake, but opens the flood-gates for all manner of profligacy, insanity, and suicides. The remedy, if we ever reach it, must be a radical one. The strictness of Puritanism was inconceivably better than the looseness of modern liberalism. Men who "count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ," are not the men who become insane. It is rather those who have set their hearts on pleasures and have been disappointed. The best security for the marriage tie is Christian forbearance with the infirmities of others; and its greatest danger is in the self-indulgent spirit. No doubt we want better divorce laws, and that there ought to be more care in entering into the marriage relation. But what we most need is a return to the original doctrine of Christ, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."

MAY THE LORD'S TABLE BE GUARDED?

The present revival of the discussion of the lodge evil in Oberlin began, as we understand, in large part from the public defense of the rule of the First Church by Prof. Ballantine. This rule, adopted in 1866 or 7 when President Finney was yet the pastor, was understood to embody his radical views of secret societies and exclude them from Christian fellowship. When the rule was defended last year, it was on the ground of Christ's explicit word, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." The argument of Prof. Ballantine met a hearty response, and the result has been the able address of Prof. Henry C. King, which has been published for wide circulation, and which, with a few modifications which we have lately noted, we hope may be heard from the lips of its author by many thousands in different parts of the country.

The Wesleyan brethren are now being tried as were the United brethren by an influential part of their communion who chafe at the restrictive rule against all secret societies. It is with much regret that we see names of good men supporting the agitation to admit members of some secret orders while excluding the rest. Without claiming to exhaust the argument, or derogating from the reasoning of others, there are some considerations we wish to present.

It is said that we have no right to exclude from church fellowship those whom Christ receives and claims as his own. The proposition is accepted. But it includes the presenting of evidence, and such evidence as will satisfy, not the infinite God, the searcher of hearts, but of fallible church members. They have a right to be assured of the Christian faith and purpose and life of those who would join them. Philip required as much of the eunuch before he would baptize him—"If thou believest with all thine heart." Acts 8: 37. Nowhere in Christ's instructions for baptism can there be found anything less. In all the churches founded by Paul the test of admission was the sharp separation from the old life of paganism. In the Samaritan revival there was perhaps no lack of care, but Peter and Philip did not at first discern the real character of Simon Magus. Simon believed and was baptized as a Christian, but Peter had to say sternly that he had "no part or lot" in Christ. Acts 8: 21.

Christ is no longer here in person to question those who would follow him as in Mat. 8: 19; 16: 24; 19: 21; Luke 9: 49, 57-62; but he has left rules for our guidance which we must use with Christian fidelity and love in maintaining the purity of the church, and we are plainly guilty if we ignore them.

The second consideration is that no one secret society can be fairly singled out for exclusion and the rest admitted. They are all parts of one system. Because Freemasonry has a religious literature and its pagan philosophy and derivation fairly understood, we may not therefore condemn it to the exclusion of the rest. Every secret order has its religious ceremony. The Good Templars have an altar and one to minister at that altar; so the railway conductors' fraternity and all the rest. That means some sort of religion. Even the Woodmen, started by a Freemason, who was determined to shut out religion,—yet this order cannot exist without its burial service, which is a religious performance; and their throwing evergreen sprigs into the grave is just as much religion as putting the branch to the nose in Ezekial 8: 17. These lodges require a belief in God, but no such belief as shuts out Jews and other unbelievers in Christ. This can not therefore be a Christian creed, and those who accept that creed in the churches of Christ cannot honorably turn about and confess the creed of the lodge, any more than they can honorably be confessors in a Presbyterian or Wesleyan church, and in a Catholic or Mormon at one and the same time.

These orders claim to instruct their members in various moral precepts, but in the church these virtues are enforced and sustained by Christian faith and the command of God; not so the lodge. Thus the temperance lodges, make men sober not by the grace of God, but by a human obligation. There is no place in the secret rituals for such Christian faith.

These are some considerations which have not, we fear, been fully considered by brethren whose demands would open the church to the lodges of every name, as the United Brethren are sadly proving.

—The committee of the N. C. A. Board having in charge the preliminary arrangements of the Chicago conference, April 22 and 23, desire to thank especially the religious papers that have rendered their assistance. Among these are the Wesleyan Methodist, which prints about three columns, the Wesleyan Herald, Christian Worker, Free Methodist, United Presbyterian and others.

—Bro. H. W. Johnston, former editor of the Crank of College Springs, Iowa, and afterward assistant on the American of Washington, is now a Wesleyan missionary in Africa. He writes to the Wesleyan Methodist of his journey and arrival at Freetown where he was welcomed by Rev. J. Augustus Cole and others. He begins his new work with good courage. His wife and little child are with him.

—There has been such a demand for our issue of January 23 containing the account of the Royal Arch sacrifice of a West Virginia clergyman that the issue was long ago exhausted and many orders could not be filled. As they continue to come, we judge the interest is sufficient to warrant the republication. This will be done, God willing, next week. Those who wish copies for circulation will do well to order early. Orders already on file in this office will be filled.

—The editor of the Vanguard of St. Louis, seeing the notice in these columns that Bro. A. W. Parry, late of Evansville, Wisconsin, was preaching for the Congregational church of Annawan, Ill., published the indiscreet comment that he would rather have heard that he had gone to heaven, supposing that of necessity he had joined the church to which he is preaching. Bro. Parry still, however, retains his connection with the Wisconsin Free Methodist Conference. If the judgment was a correct one, and the Congregationalists are as bad as is implied, Bro. Parry is surely justified in preaching to them so that they may repent.

—The beautiful souvenir for Washington's birthday is admired by every one. Framed it becomes a handsome ornament for the wall. Its best use, however, is for posting in some public place. Our publisher sent last week a copy to all those who have made donations to the National Association since last annual meeting. In response he immediately received orders from several for a number of copies. The picture is finely printed on heavy paper, the fourteen portraits of Washington and his compatriots making a splendid group. It is safely mailed on a paste-board roller, and no one will regret the investment of a dime for it.

—In a letter from Secretary Stoddard we learn that the address of Rev. Roland D. Grant of Beverly in the Boston conference was widely reprinted in the local papers of northeastern Massachusetts from the Cynosure report. It was revised and 2,000 copies printed and circulated by a gentleman who was much interested in the argument. Notwithstanding this publicity given to his radical views, Mr. Grant's congregations have increased until they number from 2,000 to 2,700, and his call from the Harvard St. Baptist church, Boston, shows that some people in New England are not afraid of a preacher who stands by his convictions. Let us all be encouraged, and especially the timid pastors.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Some weather notes—Singular phenomena—Hampden ministers speak out against increasing the navy—Mr. Cook on the race problem—The hand of the Jesuit as seen in the daily preees of Boston—A most excellent High Priest—Masonic salvation.

A thunderstorm on the 18th of February is a rare experience, particularly when snow is falling fast at the time, but this has only been one of the phenomena attending our remarkably open winter. Besides pansies and dandelions blossoming in unexpected places, Connecticut farmers are happy over the unlooked-for success of their potato crop, which many had left in the ground in fall as not worth digging. Tobacco in Connecticut, I am happy to say, has lately given but unsatisfactory returns, owing to Jack Frost's appearing early and nipping the Virginian weed before it had gained maturity. Leaders in agriculture advised the substituting of potatoes instead, but though the frost kept off, the wet weather wrought havoc with all the farmer's hopes. Now these same farmers have begun to dig the potatoes they abandoned as worthless, and are delighted to find the crop excellent. Leaving them in the ground and the open winter seem to have acted both as a preservative and a restorative, and may lead to some experiments on the part of practical agriculturists by which this foe of the farmer—the potato rot—may be successfully combatted. Everybody agrees that New England winters are changing. Drifts as high as the fences at Thanksgiving are things of the past; but nobody pretends to understand why, though any amount of ingenious theories have been put forth. The most marked change seems to be in the slowness, the kind of lingering reluctance with which winter now approaches. His nipping breath is still "keen and shrewd;" but February is here, and March with its bluebirds already at the door before he wakes up to business sufficiently to give us a good, hearty grip.

The Globe states it as a curious fact that among all the Chinese of Boston there has not developed one solitary case of la grippe. Dr. Gee Joe, the only celestial practitioner in the city, being interviewed as to the cause for this singular immunity, attributed it to the fact that "the Melican man" wore tight collars and covered up his throat; and when he had a cold dosed too much instead of applying simple natural remedies. When further asked if he was not afraid some of his people might yet catch the grip, Dr. Joe added this rather severe stricture on his Occidental brethren in the healing art, "No, no; me no lettee Chinaman go to Melican doctor when sickee. Then he no die." Lack of proper caution and too much patronage of the drug stores, I believe to be the cause of three-quarters of the deaths which have been set down as resulting from the epidemic.

The Congregational ministers of Hampden county, Mass., passed a resolution at their last regular conference that I could wish might be adopted by every conference and convention in the land, whether made up of pastoral or lay workers. Charles Sumner, greatest of American statesmen, said in his day many things whose wisdom we shall not soon outgrow, and one was that "a big naval armament was the child of suspicion and the forerunner of violence." The Hampden ministers planted themselves squarely on the same great principle, and resolved that "whereas, the proposed plan for the construction of heavy armored line-of-battle ships for service on the high seas is likely to be construed as a policy of defiance rather than defence; is a departure from the established principles of the Republic; a menace to the peace of nations; a detriment to the true glory of our country, and a project opposed to sound political and financial morality, our representatives in both houses of Congress are hereby humbly petitioned to oppose all schemes for the construction of a navy for other than defensive purposes."

Mr. Cook, in the prelude to his second lecture on "The Race Riots of the South," put the whole question in a nutshell when he said "it was a question of party rather than color, and Democratic shotgun supremacy would not be endured forever by the nation." In treating of the remedies he said: "I want improved industrial conditions in the South, and legal defence co-operation. I want federal appointments at home and abroad made among men who are not in sympathy with the oligarchy of the ex-slaveholders. And lastly I want immediate and continual elimination of fraudulent representatives from Congress." To which every patriotic American, North or South, can but say Amen, even if they do not consider these measures a complete cure all. Race troubles in the South will never cease while the taint of the old slavery regimen with all its nameless barbarism and revolting immorality still lingers in the air.

Some people are surprised, almost incredulous, when told that every daily paper in Boston is controlled by the Jesuits, but internal evidence that this is so is patent to every thinking mind. It isn't simply that all anti-Romanist news is studiously left out, but every now and then some editorial will show in its whole animus the masked face of the Jesuit behind it. For instance, here comes the Transcript, sometimes sneered at as "a ladies' paper" by lovers of the Globe and the Herald because of its literary and refined tone. Noticing the fact that the independent women voters of Boston are already raising funds to be expended for the campaign next fall, it kindly warns them to take care lest their zeal lead to intolerance. And the Traveler which prints more religious and reform news than any other daily, in a lengthy article on the recent Romish riots in Hull, Canada, instead of standing up for freedom of speech and rights of conscience, would cravenly stop the mouths of these noble female evangelists, and actually reads them a lesson on the inexpediency of pressing religious work or holding meetings in opposition to the prejudices of a community. This advice acted upon would stop all missionary work, home or foreign; nay, it would have stopped Christianity at the outset. Would the Traveler have given such advice to the Apostle Paul? and if not to him, why to the devoted men and women of the present day who are but following in his steps? Thus humbly does our daily press bend the knee to Rome!

Most Excellent High Priest Thomas Kellough, of East Boston, was recently "presented with a magnificent jewel and diamond by his Masonic friends." The address which accompanied it as given in an East Boston paper has some unique points. Readers of the Cynosure may enjoy the following choice bit:

"The name of Kellough is synonymous with good Masonic work, and your brethren have always felt safe when the master hand of Tom Kellough was at the helm, for then they knew that the Masonic ship would not deviate from its course, and although we have addressed you as Most Excellent High Priest we pay you no less respect when we say that in our heart of hearts your name will forever be inscribed as our friend and companion, Tom Kellough." How can the un-Masonic reader help a shock when he thinks of a Most Excellent High Priest being addressed as Tom! We have all known the proverbial "Tom, Dick and Harry;" men of a low standard of culture, who read neither Plato nor Shakespeare nor the Bible; who have little dignity and less religion. Everybody knows the type. But read Heb. 4: 14, and kindred passages and think of the blasphemy of applying to a man whom his companions can dub in this low familiar style, a term that can never have any true application even to the most spotless of the human race—but only to the God man, our blessed Redeemer who has passed into the heavens and by concentrating in himself all priestly titles abolished them forever.

At the risk of wearing the reader I will quote one more passage: "When you arrive at the East Gate and pass through its portals to the light beyond, and the glory of the sunlight of a new day flashing with refulgent splendor from the east of the sanctuary breaks on your waking vision, and you tread the tessellated pavements of the celestial lodge to the grand old anthem of 'All hail to the morning,' and bow in adoration before the Grand High Priest, may he extend to you the right hand of love, and welcome you to a seat in his Celestial Chapter, where you shall go out no more forever."

Who shall say after this that Masonry is not a religion, and that the Mason who tells you that all good and worthy members of the craft are sure of final salvation, has not fully apprehended the teachings of the order? ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

THE HOME.

WHY?

Why do we suffer? Why should God,
Who loves his creatures, scourge them so?
He hath the right—we need the rod;
That is enough for us to know.

We search and question, to what end?
No providence hath made it plain;
The finite can not comprehend
The infinite mystery of pain.

Shall earth-worms burrowing in the soil,
Aspire to gauge creation's plan?
Or strive to measure, 'mid their toil,
The strange complexities of man?

As well may we, earth-born and low,
Stretch upward from our mole-hill clod,
And ask, with daring front, to know
The "wherefore and the why" of God!

THE POWER OF GOD IN HEALING.

From an article by A. J. Gordon, Boston, D. D., in "Our Day."

If called to choose between a faith which tends to fanaticism, and a reason which tends to rationalism, we must frankly give our vote for the former. And in a time when the school of unbelief has such an efficient and respectable faculty we cannot quite understand why eminent confessors of the faith need enter the lists side by side with notable impugnors of the faith to do battle against certain humble Christians who hold that God recovers the sick by purely divine means. That he did so once is so truly an article of the Christian creed that it is counted infidelity to deny it; that he does so now is, by some, considered such scandalous fanaticism that they are ready to adopt the weapons of infidelity in order to put down the delusion. "The age of miracles is past, and I am heartily glad of it," vociferates a teacher of teachers from the platform of Tremont Temple, a remark which would be startlingly bold but for the fact that there are others who are willing to go so much farther and protest that there never was an age of miracles. Skeptics, on the whole, may be trusted to do their duty, and the philosophic Christianity of to-day having been reclaimed from the irruptions of that supernaturalism by which it was originally environed, if any credulous believer should attempt again to let in the flood, we may be sure that the rationalists can be depended on to stop the gaps and repair the dikes, and so save our religion from such an inundation.

Of the articles above cited we notice first, "Faith Healing and Kindred Phenomena," by Dr. J. M. Buckley, the "kindred phenomena" meaning, as the context shows, the occult performances of mesmerism and spiritualism and esoteric Mormonism. By making these akin to "faith-healing" it is of course intended to disgrace it at the outset by disreputable family connections. As to the writer of the article, he may be supposed to speak for modernized Methodism, the Methodism which is shrewd, politic, and prudent, not given to tampering with anything indiscreetly supernatural, but on the contrary having an eye to worldly advantage and holding it very desirable that the ecclesiastical chariot should be hitched to General Grant or some other notable as opportunity may offer. If any one supposes that we are slurring a great and noble body of Christians by this remark he is mistaken. We are simply about to take sides with the excellent remnant,—we trust excellent majority,—of that honored communion who prefer the Methodism of John Wesley to that of Dr. Buckley, the Methodism which came into being on bended knees, and with both hands clasping the horns of the altar, and which believed with all its heart that whatsoever the Lord did in the beginning he can do to-day and will do according to the faith of his people. For the glory of primitive Wesleyanism was in this, that at a time when the church had become utterly materialized and rationalized it appealed to the original sources of power; and believing that he that descended in the person of the Holy Ghost to abide in the church forever is the same as he that ascended up above all heavens, it laid tremendous siege to the doors of the supernatural, whose hinges had become rusted by long disuse, until those doors re-opened and ushered in a new Pentecost upon the church,—a Pentecost in which thousands were again converted under a single sermon, and in which the lame man who had long lain at the gate of the temple was again seen "walking and leaping and praising God." We do not exaggerate. The annals of early Methodism, which detail the marvelous pulpit triumphs of Wesley and Whitfield by which multitudes were brought to repentance, record with the same unqualified frankness the victorious faith of Joseph Benson, who, praying over Ann Mather, a cripple in both feet, so prevailed with God that "immediately her feet and ankle bones received strength," and she rose up and walked. "All believed," says Benson, "that the power to walk which she received in an instant was communicated by an immediate act of omnipotence." Read that, oh wise and prudent Doctor, and beware lest in trying to discredit Divine healing by introducing it as kinsman to certain ill-favored and ill-savored relations you do not stain your own family escutcheon.

Dr. Hodge, the late honored Professor of Theology in Princeton, by his sharp arraignment of supernatural healing, incurs a like danger of reproaching venerated ancestors. For if there be any body of Christians more deeply implicated in "Faith Healing and Kindred Phenomena" than the fathers and founders of Presbyterianism we know not where to find them. Only in this case the alleged phenomena were really kindred, prophecy, the discerning of spirits, the casting out of devils, etc. And the men involved in these doings were no illiterate and nameless fanatics either, but the most illustrious in the Scottish Kirk,—Knox, and Wishart, and Welch, and Peden, and Bruce, and Scrimgeour. Let the reader procure a copy of that famous book, "The Scots Worthies," and read for himself if he would learn how little novel these phenomena are in that church. We must remind the investigator, however, not to take up with an expurgated edition of this work. For some critics of later time, judging no doubt that the stories therein recorded constitute an unseemly exposure of the miraculous, have woven for the book a texture of footnotes, and erasures, and glosses, and apologies, and scientific explanations, and with these, like the sons of Noah, have with averted faces gone backward and covered the nakedness of their fathers.

Dr. Whitsitt confutes the prayer cure from the standpoint of a Baptist theological professor, though his entire argument is based on quotations from the "Book of Mormon." As the authority of that book is not generally conceded, it is to be regretted that the discussion should be needlessly embarrassed by bringing it forward, since there is plenty of wholesome Scripture of inspired quality to which appeal could have been made. "Ah! but are you so stupid," we imagine the professor would say, "as not to perceive that I am outflanking the defenders of the faith cure by showing that the execrable sect of polygamists appeal to the same texts of the New Testament, and profess the same answers to prayer for the sick which the faith healers adduce? You don't understand me; it is not that I believe in the Mormons or in their books, but if I can only taint the prayer curers with the bad odor which clings to the followers of Joseph Smith, they will be shunned by their neighbors; don't you see? Do me justice. I am not in love with the Mormon Bible because I use it as a small-pox flag to hang upon the doors of Pastor Simpson and Dr. Cullis to scare away visitors."

To which we should reply: "You represent a denomination which preaches immersion as the only true baptism and you insist on excommunicating the rest of Christendom because it does not agree with you on this point. But the Mormons see eye to eye with you on this question, and rigidly hold immersion as the true baptism. Ought not this fact to be sufficient to attain forever the whole Baptist family, and to justify the rest of the Christian world in sending them into ecclesiastical quarantine, till they are disinfected of this eccentricity?" . . .

Finally, in what we have written we have been less intent on defending the advocates of Divine healing than in opposing their critics. It may be that some of those who have espoused the doctrine in question have been indiscreet in their statements, and fanatical in their practice. Be that as it may, there is no reason why their Christian critics should go to the other extreme, and recoil towards skepticism because they have rushed towards enthusiasm. What is this but to avenge excess by excess—excess of credulity by excess of unbelief?

Let us gather ourselves up and inquire what all this discussion is about. In the New Testament, which all orthodox Christians are supposed to accept as an unquestionable authority, it is written, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up." There is no more explicit and unambiguous promise in Scripture than this. Many devout Christians of our day have had the presumption to believe these words and to act upon them; and from different parts of Christendom have come reports of remarkable answers to prayer for the sick. Whereupon more than half a score of theologians, many of them eminent as defenders of the faith, have attacked the doctrine of "faith healing," as they have derisively termed it. The plain logic of it is that they have impugned a text of Holy Scripture and attempted to discredit any alleged fulfillment of the promise therein contained. Against their course this paper is a protest. We ask, what has come over us, that, whereas Saul has sometimes been found among the prophets, now the prophets are found with Saul? When Professor Tyndall attacked the doctrine of the prayer cure, although with many qualifications and concessions, he received such a church-mauling as has not been administered to any public man in this generation. But now, when eminent doctors and expounders of Christianity repeat his offense, we hear no outcry against them. We recognize, indeed, the pains which these writers have taken to blunt the edge of their denials; we observe the padding of faith which they have been careful to insert here and there between the layers of their irony, lest tender believers might be too much jolted by their utterances; but we recognize just as distinctly that the whole drift of their argument is to dissuade Christians from expecting any supernatural help in sickness in response to believing prayer. For this, we fervently blame them, while we charitably concede that they have intended to do nothing against the truth, but for the truth. If they have seen no instances of Divine healing which satisfy them as being genuine, they are perfectly right in saying so; but this fact does not justify them in satirizing other Christians who believe, with the most unshaken confidence, that they have seen such instances or have been the subjects of such healing. For if there are genuine miracles in the world to-day it is barely possible that these writers might not have encountered them. Miracles have never moved in what is called the best society, social or philosophical, as theologians are supposed to do; therefore the two may not have met, even though both have an undoubted existence.

It is not therefore the mere question of demonstrated facts which we are discussing; but of Scripture promise. If Divine healings do not exist we allege that the Bible, at all events, calls for them; and if evangelical doctors have no faith in the reals which human witnesses bring forward, they are not therefore justified in smiting the ideals which the Holy Scriptures set before us.

BREAKING OF THE OCEAN.

Mr. Ruskin, writing incidentally about what "Wandering Willie" in "Red-gauntlet" calls "the roar of Solway," gives a fine description of the breaking of the ocean:

"No other sound of the sea is for an instant comparable to the breaking of deep ocean, as it rises over great spaces of sand. In its rise and fall on a rocky coast, it is either perfectly silent, or if it strike, it is with a crash, or a blow, like that of a heavy gun. Therefore, under ordinary conditions, there may be either splash, or crash, or sigh, or boom, but not roar. But the hollow sound of the countless ranks of surfy breakers, rolling mile after mile in ceaseless following, every one of them with the apparent anger and threatening of a fate which is assured death unless fled from—the sound of this approach, over quicksands and into inextricable gulfs of mountain bay, this, heard far out at sea, or heard far inland, through the peace of secure night, or stormless day, is still an eternal voice, with the harmony in it of a mighty law, and the gloom of a mortal warning."

The greatest event in a hen's life is made up of an egg and a cackle. But eagles never cackle.—H. W. Beecher.

THE PILLOW PARTY.

Perhaps I should not call it a party, for there were only two persons at it, one, the hostess, the other, of course, the invited guest. The name of the former was Sadie Howell, that of the latter Laura Dodd. The party was held in the garret, a long, low room with a window at each end. One window faced the west, and very close to it the two girls sat upon two old boxes tearing paper into bits. "What for?" do you ask? To make pillows.

Sadie and Laura had recently called upon a sick child whose mother had once been employed in both of their families as washerwoman. The sick child, Mamie Snow, they had found bolstered up in bed with one small pillow and a bundle of old clothes.

"It seems to me," Sadie had remarked, "that you don't lie comfortably. Wouldn't pillows be easier for you than these clothes?"

"I'm sure they would," Mamie had replied with a faint smile that had no joy in it, "but I have to put up with the clothes because this is the only pillow mamma owns."

"The only pillow!" exclaimed Sadie.

"The only pillow!" echoed Laura.

A flush came into Mamie's face. "We had more pillows," she said, "but they're all gone."

"Where do you suppose Mrs. Snow's pillows went to?" asked Sadie of her mother that evening.

"Perhaps she has pawned them," said Mrs. Howell, "or sold them to get money to buy food. Poor soul, I suppose she has a hard time. I ought to look after her."

She really intended "looking after the poor woman," but like a great many others she put off her aid until a more convenient season. Meanwhile Sadie, wondering how she could get a pillow for Mamie Snow, saw an item in the paper concerning pillows made of bits of paper. She clapped her hands in joy, and then ran over to tell her intimate friend, Laura Dodd, all about her plan.

"We have a great big box full of old letters in our garret," she said, "and mamma doesn't want them. She said she was going to make a bon-fire of them when she cleaned house. Oh, Laura, won't it be fun to make the pillows!"

Laura thought it would, and so, right after dinner, she went over to Mrs. Howell's to begin work. She found Sadie at the sewing-machine.

"Why, Sadie Howell!" she exclaimed, "does your mother let you fuss over her machine? Mine doesn't."

"I'm not 'fussing,'" answered Sadie, laughing. "I know how to sew a straight seam, and see, I managed to turn those corners," and she held up to view something that she had just finished.

"For the pillows?"

"Yes, the ticks. Now for the garret!" and the girls ran a race to see who would get there first.

"Do you dare read them?" asked Laura, as they began tearing the letters into bits.

"Perhaps mamma would be willing that we should read some of them, but I haven't asked her, and so we'd better not read any of them. Besides, we can work faster if we don't read."

The little hands were very busy, and so were the little tongues for a long time, but at last hands and tongues both grew weary. Thoughts of "Araminta" and "Victoria," the beloved dolls, waiting for them down stairs, made them long to stop work for awhile and have a play.

"My hands are getting stiff," said Laura, "aren't yours?"

"Yes, mine are stiff. They've been so some time."

"We haven't got to finish these pillows to-day," ventured Laura.

"No, we haven't got to," asserted Sadie, wondering if any one had disturbed "Araminta" since she left her sleeping on the couch. But just then a face that was not "Araminta's" obtruded itself on her mind,—a pale, sweet, human face, with gentle, pleading eyes. That face decided her.

"But we will finish them," was the way she finished her sentence, "for Mamie needs them to-night."

And they were finished. The children carried them down stairs to show to Mrs. Howell.

"Look, mamma," Sadie said. "What do you think of our pillows?"

Mrs. Howell took them and examined them critically. "Where did you get them?" she asked.

"We made them," and they told her of the process, "and we are going to give them to Mamie Snow."

"What made you think of such a thing?" Mrs. Howell asked in surprise.

"Why, she needed them, mamma, so we thought of it," Sadie said innocently, and then she wondered what made her mother's eyes so misty. "I wish we had some pretty pillow-cases for our pillows."

"Perhaps I can find some," said Mrs. Howell, her voice a little husky. "Come to supper first—it is all ready—and then I will see."

How good the supper tasted! much better than any supper had tasted for a long time.

"I wish I could take Mamie a biscuit and a piece of cold ham and a cream cake. Could I, mamma?"

"Yes, my dear," and again came that strange "mist," and a "quiver" in the voice.

After supper the children hugged "Araminta" and "Victoria," while Mrs. Howell went upstairs to see if she could find pillow-cases. She succeeded in her attempt, and brought down not only these, but a large bundle beside.

"I think I will go with you, children," she said, "if you are willing."

"Oh, mamma, we will be so glad," assented Sadie.

And pretty soon in Mrs. Snow's cottage there was a scene such as not only the angels must smile upon, but also He who has asked us to minister unto the "least of these."—Christian Intelligencer.

The school-house and the open Bible will conquer and redeem Utah and Idaho if given a fair chance. No other agency ever can succeed in curing such moral diseases and transforming such monstrosities. The best laws, backed by ignorance and supported by atheism or Buddhism or Mohammedanism, never have and never will lift up a people. Good laws grow naturally, as the seed is planted by the school-master and the Bible teaching missionary.—Inter-Ocean.

TEMPERANCE.

KANSAS STANDS FIRST.

Warden George H. Case, of the Kansas State penitentiary, made his settlement with the State Feb. 12. He says that the total convict population in the penitentiary is 855, a decrease of about thirty since he became warden, less than a year ago. The September term of the district courts have just closed, and they swelled the population about thirty. From now to June the number will be about the same, and from June to October the discharges will outnumber the admissions. There is a steady decline in the aggregate number of prisoners in the penitentiary from year to year in spite of a steady growth in the population of the State, a state of facts which it is believed exists in no other State in the Union.

A PUBLIC RIGHT.

I yesterday received from Meta Lander, the authoress of that comprehensive treatise, "The Tobacco Problem," (Boston: De Wolfe, Fiske and Co.) an excellent tract of 14 pages, entitled "Steamers and Smokers," being a reprint of an article in the Independent and published now by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 161, La Salle street, Chicago. Those who have experienced a common discomfort of river, lake and ocean travel, and had their journeys seriously spoiled, through the disregard shown by many users of the weed to the right of the public to the uncontaminated air with which the Creator has supplied them, will welcome this protest and, further, may aid in bringing about a change by interesting themselves in its circulation.

"The Right of the Public to a Non-Narcotized Atmosphere" is appropriately recognized by the Philadelphia and Reading R. R. Company in having had placed in their waiting-rooms lettered signs bearing this inscription: "SMOKING in any of the Stations of this Company is STRICTLY PROHIBITED, and All Agents Must see this Order RIGIDLY ENFORCED." Such a strong notification was sorely needed. The order has not been as fully respected as it should be, but the change for the better has been marked. I remember the fact, that, being in one of the waiting-rooms of the line mentioned, quite a number of years ago, I took the liberty of quietly asking a young smoker who was seated near me whether he would not please refrain, inasmuch as I found the odor was unpleasant and a placard on the wall said, "No Smoking Allowed." The man showed so much resentment at the request that thereafter I preferred to pace outside, even though fatigued, or else to seat myself in the room reserved for ladies. A large number of non-users of the weed have had a similar experience.—Josiah W. Leeds.

NO GREAT MAN SMOKES CIGARETTES.

It has come to be generally understood that the boy who smokes cigarettes makes himself smell bad and grows idiotic. The Charleston Sun on this subject says: "And now we learn that Emperor William of Germany is a cigarette smoker. That settles it. He will never turn the world upside down. Water cannot rise above its level, and smoking cigarettes never yet inspired anyone to heroic deeds. From Alexander to Napoleon Bonaparte, no great man was ever addicted to this habit. The man who spends the most appreciable portion of his existence striking matches to keep alive the lighted end of a roll of paper stuffed with vile smelling tobacco, rebashed out of castway cigar stumps, has very little brains, and soon fritters away the modicum with which nature has endowed him."—New Orleans Picayune.

"PROHIBITION DOESN'T PROHIBIT."

One of the best replies that have been made to the stock argument of the opponents of sumptuary legislation—to-wit, "Prohibition doesn't prohibit"—is that of Mr. F. P. Baker of Kansas, who was for twenty-five years the editor of the Topeka Commonwealth. He was asked by a Tribune reporter about the anti-prohibition movement, and here is his reply:

"I fought prohibition for years. It was adopted in spite of my best efforts, and I have now seen it work. Let me tell you. Kansas will never go back to the open saloon. If the question were resubmitted to-day prohibition would have a majority of 50,000 votes. The Eastern people talk about prohibition not prohibiting. It doesn't. If I want a drink in Topeka I can get it. But the saloon has gone. I have a grandson growing up who has never seen a saloon. Isn't that a good thing? The saloon and its crowd of ward-workers are no longer a political power. That alone is worth all prohibition has cost. Thousands of the men who fought the measure the hardest have been converted as I have been. There isn't the possibility of a repeal of the law."

So, probably, it would be in Illinois. Nobody believes that a prohibition law in this State would absolutely stop the sale of liquor in Chicago any more than he believes that the criminal code effectually prevents crime. But it would destroy the saloon as a political power, and that alone, as Mr. Baker says, would be worth the cost of the experiment.—Daily News.

SOLUTION OF THE RACE PROBLEM.

The flow of whisky during the recent holidays, and the instigation of the devil, have led to local race disturbances here and there, and given a fresh start to the writers and speakers who make a specialty of the race problem in our country. Whisky-drinking and blood-shedding are as inseparable as cause and effect. Subtract from the sum-total of so-called race collisions, great and small, all that were the direct or indirect results of strong drink, and the number left would be astonishingly few. The danger is that the trouble started by a drunken brute of either color, through family ties, race affinities and exaggerated reports, induces a state of excitement that is unfavorable to fair judgment and sensible action on the part of all concerned, and draws better persons into its vortex. We deliberately affirm our conviction that if we could suppress drunkenness among us the race problem would thereby be at once half solved.—Nashville (Tenn.) Christian Advocate.

them remarked that he had never succeeded in winning a Freemason to Christ. When I was an unconverted youth I was advised by my teacher to study law. I decided not to do so, fearing that I would be hindered, as a lawyer, from becoming a Christian. Masonry is a religious institution. Its religious rites are heathen, and its confession of faith and ritual of worship are deistical. What a pity, therefore, that the fear of being ensnared by Satan, as flies are ensnared by spiders, does not keep our young men out of the lodge.

The Congregational minister of Creston has not been able to rescue a single soul from that dreadful snare. The Methodist minister had noticed that Masons who were members of his church were not helpful in the spiritual work of the church. He regarded the secret society system with disfavor, though he had himself joined the Grand Army, and for the sake of its insurance feature he was considering the propriety of joining the Woodmen. I referred him to the Total Abstinence Mutual Life Insurance Association, of which Gen. Singleton is agent, and told him if that was what he wanted, he had better seek insurance where he would not be giving countenance to organized secrecy, which, experience had demonstrated, was liable to be used for the most criminal purposes, for the obstruction of justice, and for the corruption and subversion of our holy Christianity. He signed the call for the Conference to be held in Chicago in April to consider the lodge question.

From Creston I went to Rochelle where I found one friend who subscribed $2.00 to send the Cynosure for one month to twenty Illinois ministers, that they might have the report of the coming Conference.

From Rochelle I came to Byron. I thought to arrange for lectures here, but found the ministers of Byron engaged in a union revival service. So I made a few calls and secured a subscription to send the Cynosure to the Byron ministers for three months each, and came to Leaf River and stopped over night with the radical U. B. minister. I arranged to preach for him Sabbath morning at Adaline, and also to preach at the same place in the evening on the relation of Freemasonry and kindred orders to the Christian religion.

There was a funeral late in the afternoon that was largely attended, so that many of the people could not return again that night, but, notwithstanding, there was a good attendance. I also arranged with Rev. Moshier, the U. B. minister, to lecture at Lightsville, another of his appointments, on Tuesday night. The brother with whom I stopped Saturday night subscribed to send the Cynosure for one month to fifteen Illinois ministers.

Let us unitedly pray for the triumph of the truth as it is in Jesus, and for the overthrow of the rum power, the lodge power, Jesuitism and Mormonism, that our land may be Immanuel's land, and the day hasten when the whole earth will be full of his glory. C. F. HAWLEY.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Unclean Spirit. Vs. 33, 34. We notice (1) that there is no place too holy for the devil to invade. We read in Job that "when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan came also among them." (2) All that the devil wants is to be let alone. If he can get Christians to concede him this one thing he will be perfectly satisfied. He knows that evils, like weeds, do not need to be cultivated or watered to make them grow. The gigantic growth of the lodge power within a few years is the result of this let-alone policy on the part of churches and ministers. Whatever the evil may be, all we have to do to make it thrive is simply to ignore it. (3) We must not wonder if we find unclean spirits in our churches. Lodge funerals, with all their paraphernalia, theatrical displays, fairs and festivals to raise money,—all belong to this world of which Satan is chief and prince. It is stated by Rev. E. P. Marvin that one Sunday-school gave—not three missionaries to preach the Gospel to the heathen, but—three actors for the stage; the natural result of the young people participating in dramatic entertainment with the sanction and approval of the church. (4) Where the Spirit of God is, though Satan may intrude, he will always be cast out. Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil, and if Satan is at peace with us and does not fear us, we may know that we are not Christ's.

2. The devil cast out. Vs. 35-37. Jesus refused the testimony of devils, though they acknowledged him to be the Son of God. It might seem at first view that testimony from such a source was peculiarly valuable. Christ did not think so. It could only be prejudicial to his high mission to accept anything from Satan—even unwilling homage. The true church does not want the praise of the ungodly; still less does she accept their unrighteous gains. As soon as she courts the favor of the world she loses all spiritual power. "The devil threw him"—a vivid picture of the malicious yet impotent wrath of Satan against his escaping victim; "but he hurt him not." Satan may take advantage of the infirmities of a pardoned sinner, but it is impossible for even the devil himself to do him any actual harm if he is really trusting in Jesus.

3. The healing of Simeon's wife's mother. Vs. 38, 39. Christ is a Saviour for the body as well as the soul. He cares for our physical well-being. He does not want his people to be sick and suffering; but disease and death is a consequence of sin, and cannot always be averted even by prayer. But though we may not be saved thereby from the ordinary trials and sorrows that afflict humanity, it is always a blessing to have Jesus as our constant guest, for then we have an infinite Helper ever at hand. Christians who have their Lord's presence only occasionally, are weak of faith. It takes them a great while to find the Master and present their petition. There would be more cases of divine healing, because there would be more of the prayer of faith, if every Christian lived in constant nearness to the Lord. We forget too often that this is our blessed privilege, for he has promised to be with us—not at special seasons, not when we are engaged in active service for him, but "all the days;" sleeping or waking, in health or sickness. When Christ heals us through the divine communication of his Spirit, it must impart to us at the same time so much of his own likeness that we can't help using our recovered strength to minister to others.

4. Our debt to the heathen. Vs. 40-44. The people wanted to keep such a great Physician in their own city. They forgot there were demons and lepers, the fever-stricken, the palsied and the lame in other cities who needed Christ. So we are apt to forget how many there are in heathen lands who are sick in soul and body but have never heard of Christ. To give to home missions and none to foreign is to be as selfish as these dwellers in Capernaum. Let us not give less to evangelize our own heathen, but more to save the perishing world outside.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

CHRIST'S EXAMPLE AS TO THE TRUE METHOD OF SPREADING THE GOSPEL.—Like Christ, if we would succeed in saving men, we must (1) preach the Word of God with the authority of divine truth and of our experience; and (2) we must confirm the Word by good deeds,—helping the poor, visiting the sick, cheering the despondent, aiding the unfortunate, comforting the lonely, looking out on every side for some one whom we can help and whose burdens we can bear. Thus we can prove the strength and the sincerity of our efforts to save men's souls.

THE MISSIONARY IMPULSE.—1. Here is an example of the missionary impulse—not only an illustration, but an example.

2. This is utterly opposed to that spirit which is too prevalent in some churches, that they must wait till their own community is wholly converted before they give and do for the wider field; and that they must see all the needs of their own country supplied before they give to foreign missions.

3. To convert a whole town to a non-missionary Gospel, to a selfish religion, would be but a small gain even to themselves.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A revival has been going on at Plymouth, Ill., for two weeks. Twenty have been converted and many more are interested; congregations are so large that many times standing room cannot be obtained.

—Ex-President James McCosh of Princeton College suggests a return by all denominations to the old parish system as a means of securing the proclamation of the Gospel to every creature in the country districts and the cities of America.

—Rev. Sam Jones is preaching in New Orleans. He has fearlessly attacked the Louisiana State Lottery, and, as a consequence, is being ignored by the press.

—Twenty-five new members were recently admitted to the Pottsville, Mich., church, the fruits of revival meetings conducted by Rev. C. F. VanAuken.

—Friends of the McAll Mission in Paris distribute 50,000 copies of the Gospels, 22,000 religious newspapers, and over 250,000 tracts at the gates of the recent Exhibition. Besides these, at the British and Foreign Bible Society's stand inside the Exhibition, 134,000 Gospels and specimens of John 3: 16, in 287 languages, were taken from the tables.

—Rev. J. S. Stone, a former missionary of the Methodist Episcopal church abroad, is now engaged in city missionary work in New York. In an article on "Reaching the Masses," in the Christian Advocate, he describes his work during the past year. After describing a visit to a "dive" near the Forsyth Street church, he says: "I have visited black holes of sin in Calcutta and Bombay, where the depravity of the Orient shows its darkest sides, but I never saw degradation more hopeless. It seemed a hideous burlesque on our nineteenth century civilization. Mission work in Lucknow is easier, cleaner and pleasanter than work among the masses even of the Ninth Ward of this city. Work among the barbarians of New York is unromantic, downright hard work."

—The next annual convention of Christian Workers of the United States and Canada is to be held in Hartford, Conn. The convention is composed of delegates from the city missions, evangelistic workers, etc. The last convention was held in Detroit, Mich.

—Rev. John Stewart has been holding a series of meetings with the United Presbyterian church in Alliance, Neb. Over one hundred persons professed conversion, or made a re-profession of their faith. Mr. Stewart has determined to give himself to evangelistic work entirely.

—A gracious season of revival has been enjoyed by the U. P. church of Colorado Springs, Col., Rev. H. H. Bell, pastor. There has been an accession of thirty to the membership.

—Mr. Henry Villard of New York city, president of the Northern Pacific railway company, has just made a gift of two thousand dollars to the Brainerd, Minn., Railway Young Men's Christian Association toward the erection of their building.

—Evangelist Merrill has held a series of meetings in Medford, Minn., assisted by Pastor Sutherland of the Congregational church. The whole community was moved and a large number of conversions are reported. The work still continues.

—Up to Dec. 10, 4,632 students in American colleges had expressed their willingness to go as missionaries to foreign fields. Of these 78 per cent are men, 22 per cent women, 35 per cent graduates; 27½ per cent are Presbyterians, 18 per cent Congregationalists, 14 per cent Methodists, 11½ per cent Baptists. Forty denominations are represented.

—Twelve hundred converts have been baptized in the Baptist Mission in Russia in the past two years. The mission is principally among the German colonists in South Russia. There is also a successful mission in Roumania and Bulgaria.

—The Gustavus Adolphus Society, to carry the Gospel into Catholic countries, last year received $230,000, or $5,600,000 since 1832. The society has had 1,444 applications for aid from Roman Catholic countries.

OBITUARY.

Died in Menomonie, Wisconsin, Thursday, Feb. 6th, 1890, REV. ISAAC B. BRANCH, D.D.S.

Born in Middletown Vt., May 1st, 1815, carefully nurtured by pious parents, he became a Christian when 11 years of age. His best years were given to the Baptist ministry. Sister's son to Rev. Nathaniel Colver, he entered heartily into his uncle's views and enterprises in the interests of Anti-masonry, anti-slavery, anti-ignorance, anti-sin. He was married Nov. 6, 1842, to Miss Elizabeth Willson of Fort Madison, Iowa, sister to Capt. William Willson of Menomonie, Wis. The Sabbath preceding his death (Feb. 2) he taught his Bible class with his usual vigor and interest. Not until the Tuesday following did he exhibit specially alarming symptoms. His interest in Christian work and general helpfulness was unabated, but he welcomed the call to come home. His wife and three sons survive. C. K. C.

MRS. ELLEN M. CAMPBELL closed her eyes to earthly scenes at her home in Geneva, Allen county, Kansas, Feb. 3, 1890, aged 29 years, 4 months, and 5 days.

Being acquainted with her for several years and knowing her true devotion to her religion, the text chosen for the funeral services was 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8, which seemed to be fitting to her pious life and her faith in death. After the services in the church at Geneva her husband, Dr. A. J. Campbell and her brother, J. T. Van Petten, took charge of the remains of the mother and of the babe, which followed her in death twelve hours later, and took the train for Washington county to bury them by the side of her father and sister, who had preceded her but a few months. ISAAC M. FRISLEY.

Washing Clothes

or cleaning house with ordinary soap is like rolling a heavy stone up hill; it takes main strength and a good deal of it. The same work done with Pearlina is like rolling the stone down hill—it's easy; quick; true; goes right to the mark; and with very little labor. All dirt must go before PEARLINE. It robs woman's hardest work of its drudgery—(a praiseworthy theft, by the way). The question is—does it or does it not hurt the hands, clothes or paint? We tell you it don't—but we are interested (as well as you)—so ask your friends who use it; you'll find most of them do; the annual consumption is equal to about three packages a year for every family in the land. But better yet—get a package (it costs but a few pennies, and every grocer keeps it), and try it for yourself—your gain will be larger than ours.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearlina, or the same as Pearlina. IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Wonderful and Startling!

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel, thus doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
 (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help (life that is to come).

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HYGIENE OF THE EYES.

Dr. Lincolnd of Boston, in the Annals of Hygiene, formulates the following rules to be observed in the care of the eyes for school work:

1. A comfortable temperature, and especially let the feet be warm and dry.
2. Good ventilation.
3. Clothing at the neck loose; the same as regards the rest of the body.
4. Posture erect: never read lying down or stooping.
5. Little study before breakfast or directly after a hearty meal; none at all at twilight or late at night.
6. Great caution about study after recovery from fevers.
7. Light abundant, but not dazzling.
8. Sun not shining on desk or on objects in front of the scholar.
9. Light coming from the left hand, or left or rear, under some circumstances from in front.
10. The book held at right angles to the line of sight, or nearly so.
11. Frequently a rest by looking up.
12. Distance of book from the eye, about fifteen inches.

CARE OF UMBRELLAS.

After coming in out of the rain let the umbrella down, and stand it on the handle, that it may dry in this position. The water will thus drip from the edges of the frame, and the cover dry uniformly. When placed with the handle upwards, as is frequently done, the water runs to the top of the umbrella, and the moisture is there retained in the lining underneath the ring for some length of time, causing the silk or fabric with which the frame is covered to become tender and soon rot. Ordinarily the top of an umbrella wears out sooner than any other part of it, and in the majority of cases may be thus accounted for. A silk umbrella is much injured by being left open to dry; the silk becomes stretched and stiff, and will sooner split thus cared for. When not in use let the folds hang loose, not fastened down. The creases are less apt to split from such usage. When carried in the hand, in anticipation of rainy weather, the folds may be strapped down, as it adds to the neatness of its appearance.

A SUGGESTION ABOUT IRONING BOARDS.

Is your ironing board fixed so it is a pleasure to iron on, and no trouble to keep clean? Let me tell you a good plan: Take a long wide board (a narrow one is a nuisance) tapering at the left hand end; cover it within a foot of each end, thickly and smoothly on both sides, with a woollen blanket; do not make a seam on the flat side, but with carpet tacks fasten the blanket on the narrow edge. Next cover tightly with a sheet doubled, keeping both sides of your board perfectly smooth. Now you are ready for the outside. Take stout muslin and make a cover the same as you would for a bolster case, open at both ends, make it to slip on tight; this is easily removed and laundered, and your board is always neat and clean. Iron calicoes on one side, white clothes on the other side. You will find this a great improvement on the old plan of ironing all on one side, and having the colored lint coming off on the starched white clothes.—Martha, in the Country Gentleman.

THINGS I HAVE LEARNED.

That to wash smoothing-irons in dish-water after washing skillets, will make them smooth and prevent rusting.

That if you fold your clothes as you take them from the line they would iron much easier.

That your copper wash boiler, if well rubbed with a cloth dipped in coal oil, will be clean and bright.

That you can sweep a rag carpet much cleaner sweeping crosswise of the width.

That if you want to keep your house free of moths, never put down your carpets till the floor is thoroughly dry.

That to keep your bedding pure and wholesome, open your beds to the air the first thing in the morning.

That in making up unbleached muslin, allow one inch to the yard for shrinkage.

SHE COULDN'T WAIT.

Lady—"I want to sit for a picture."

Artist—"I shall be very glad to paint you if you will wait a week, until I finish the one I am at work on now."

Lady—"Oh, my! I couldn't wait that long. Why, I promised to be home at dinner at five o'clock!"

That is the trouble with some people; they have no time to wait for results. Some women will take a dose or so of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and expect to feel well immediately. True, some do find marvelously speedy effects from its use, but chronic, or lingering, diseases, which have had possession of the system for years, cannot generally be cured in a day. Such maladies are generally slow in their inception, slow in their progress, and must be cured, if at all, by slow degrees and regular stages. Perseverance in the use of the "Favorite Prescription" for a reasonable length of time will cure all those chronic weaknesses, irregularities and distressing derangements with which so many females are afflicted. But the use of this world-famed medicine must be persisted in for a considerable time in long standing, complicated and obstinate cases. Do not expect speedy relief and cure, but have a mind of your own, and when you have decided to seek a cure of your malady through the medium of this wonderful medicine, show a little will-power and tenacity of purpose, and you will, in due time, rejoice in the complete restoration of your health and strength.

The "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for woman's peculiar ills guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded.

FARM NOTES.

WHY THE BOYS LEAVE THE FARM.

In this great city we see every day so many illustrations of the often-repeated folly of leaving good homes and prospects in the country for a "wider field" or "better chance," that we take deep interest in whatever may induce young men to stand by the old ways and succeed to the labors and rewards of their fathers. Doubtless modern facilities for travel have rendered impossible the old-time stability of population. Young men would not be worthy of their sires if they were content with less than the highest achievement which genuine enterprise can compass. If the great and fertile West is to be made productive, both of material and moral wealth, our sons and daughters must many of them leave their childhood's homes and bend their energies to the task. And our cities must also draw largely from the same source, that the great industries and the intellectual growths that center in them may be supplied with that which is more costly than capital—brains and moral principle.

Still, the mania for going away from home has too universally infected the present "rising generation." It seems to be regarded as a matter of course that the farmer's boy will try to better himself, as soon as he comes of age, by going to some great city or to some richer soil a thousand miles away. In many cases he would be wiser to better himself by staying at home. The farm ought to be bettered by constant culture, and his "chance" with it ought to be better than in a half-settled country anywhere. The advantages of country-life are underrated when those of city-life are depicted. City-life means a steady fight with heartless competition, with disproportionate expenses, with unhealthy physical and moral tendencies. City-life demands great waste of energy by friction, by undue excitement, by exhausting methods, and they who have fair opportunities to gain a livelihood and be useful to their kind in a country village have no need to envy the city clerk living in a hall bedroom at a rent of $200 a year.

We were prompted to these remarks by an article in the Country Gentleman, which contains some practical hints that we would commend to the attention of those who have sons anxious to leave the farm for a clerkship or factory.

The writer says that with boys, from the time they are large enough to do a few chores till they are twenty-one, it is apt to be work, work, from morning till night, the year round, without other hope of reward than their board and clothes. The father seldom consults his son in regard to his plans about the farm, and, as the boy grows older, he cares very little about them. After the work for the day is done, the boys come in and want something to do; they have been at work all day, and their muscles are tired; but their brains have been resting all day, and are pining for exercise. They look around, and perchance see a paper full of politics, or a paper whose columns are filled with local news of trivial importance, which they have read over and over, but see no books which tend to enlighten the mind and elevate the soul. Having nothing else to do, they go down to the village, and there they soon learn to smoke, chew, and swear with dissolute companions. After a time they come into contact with one of those fellows who has been off to "seek his fortune" and come home "dead broke" to live on his friends. They listen to his stories of adventures by land and sea, and, since they have seen little of the world outside of their native town, believe all he says; and as they have seen none of the advantages of a farmer's life, but all its disadvantages, they are disgusted with it, and resolve to get away from home and try their fortune in other parts. Here they make a great mistake, for they have no trade, no money, and are perfectly friendless in the great world. After being knocked about from place to place, until hard work has broken their constitutions, they return to their native town, homeless, penniless, friendless, to drag through a few more years, and then sink into the grave, with few to mourn their loss or take warning by their example.

In order to make them stay on the farm, you should get them interested in farm-work, tell them your plans, ask their opinion, and, when they have given it, ask them why they think so and so, and what has led them to such a conclusion. Draw out their thoughts, procure good agricultural and literary papers and books—not trashy, yellow-covered things, but books written by our best authors, no matter what they treat on, whether it be farming or astronomy; get something that will interest your sons. Once get them to reading, and they will take to good literature like ducks to the water, and instead of spending their hours at the village tavern they will be storing their minds with useful knowledge that will be of infinite value to them as they grow up.

As soon as they begin to read they will want to try experiments for themselves. Let them have a good piece of ground, help them to plow and get it ready, and then tell them to go ahead. If they come to you for advice, give it; but do not tell them they must do this and they must not do that, for they have quick perceptions, and if your advice is good they will soon find it out and follow it. Soon they will begin to talk about fixing up the house a little, and setting out some fruit and shade trees. A coat of paint, a few new blinds, and numerous other little attractions, render your house hardly recognizable to one who saw it a year ago, although your purse has not been made much lighter by the outlay. Then go to the woods and get some trees, and plant them around the house, and in a few years they will make a delightful shade, which you can enjoy on a hot midsummer's day. Next, help the girls to prepare some flower-beds, which will add wonderfully to the beauty of your grounds. Next, plant a hedge in place of the old, broken-down fence in front of the house, and other improvements of like trifling cost will follow in due time, the carrying out of which will render your home a lovely spot, which your children would never for a moment think of exchanging for a city home.—Selected.

What You Need Spring and Fall

WHEN you feel "all run down" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For restoring strength after sickness, or toning up the system at any time, this is the medicine of all others. Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

WASHINGTON.

The President has approved the joint resolution congratulating the people of Brazil on their adoption of a republican form of government and the act for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Nipsic at Apia, Samoan Islands.

COUNTRY.

It is said that St. Paul and Minneapolis street railway companies will within three months put in operation a complete electric power system.

In Beacon street, Boston, George H. Bradford, a wealthy resident, while enjoying a horseback ride, was run down by an electric street car and killed.

Mrs. Rebecca Bruchey, who was shot by White Caps Feb. 16 at Frederick, Md., while resisting expulsion from the town for leaving her husband, has not improved in condition, though the wound is not necessarily fatal.

A peculiar and fatal cattle disease is reported raging in the vicinity of Columbus, Ind., the animals becoming uncontrollable, and finally dying in convulsions.

Mrs. Burritt of Racine, Wis., finished a fast of twenty-one days as a cure for dyspepsia. She is in an exhausted condition, but was willing to continue the treatment several weeks longer if necessary.

Seventeen prominent citizens of Sharon, Ga., and vicinity were arrested on charges of conspiring against and intimidation of S. L. Duckworth, the newly-appointed postmaster there.

Miss Mary Louise Baldwin, a young colored teacher, has been appointed Principal of the Agassiz Public School at Cambridge, Mass. Miss Baldwin is highly educated, and has had several years training in different grades of the school to whose head she is now promoted.

Minnie Worley and Frank Middleton, night telephone operators, respectively, at South Bend and Michigan City, Ind., were married by telephone last week. They secured no license, and the justice who united them thought the matter a joke, but it is asserted that the ceremony is legal.

The Farmers' Co-operative Brotherhood of the United States was incorporated at Springfield, Ill., the 19th, with a capital stock of $50,000,000. Its object, as stated, is to do a general farming business, buy and store grain, and protect the farmers against trusts of all kinds.

Death warrants have been issued for the hanging of five men in Pennsylvania on the 9th of April.

While skating near Port Dover, Ont., the 19th, three boys were drowned.

The deadlock in the Iowa House was broken by arrangement of the parties. Mr. Hamilton, Democrat, was elected Speaker, while the Republicans secured the Speaker pro tem., the Chief Clerk, his first assistant, and important committee chairmanships.

By a vote of 21 to 8 the North Dakota Senate adopted Feb. 19 the Australian election system.

A near friend of Andrew Carnegie says that his gift of $2,000,000 for a public library in Pittsburgh will take but little more than one year's income from his enormous Bessemer steel business.

Warren Bloom and Warren Adkins, boys of 12, quarreled over a game of cards at Hope, Ind., the 19th, when Bloom drew a revolver and fatally shot his young companion.

FOREIGN.

The general election for members of the German Reichstag took place Feb. 20. The size of the vote polled was phenomenal. The election officials were overwhelmed with work, and at many of the polling-places were unable to cope with the crowds or electors who, during the dinner hour, hastened to deposit their votes. A majority of the factories were closed for the day. At midnight the

DR. TALMAGE says: "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you would not think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas-Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It aint so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once. Very Soapfully Yours, J. D. LARKIN & CO., Factories: Seneca, Heacock & Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

OUR MAMMOTH CHRISTMAS BOX

Our object in getting up this Mammoth Christmas Box is to introduce to the American people our "Sweet Home" Family Soap and Fine Toilet Articles. They are the purest, best, and most satisfactory, whether made in this country or Europe; everyone who uses them once become a permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once. Our goods are made for the select family trade and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial we accompany each case with many useful and valuable presents

Even the babies are delighted when the Christmas Box arrives and it will make 100,000 boys, girls, men and women, old and young, just as happy; because it contains the greatest lot of Christmas Presents ever seen. Beautiful things! Something for everyone in the family, father—mother—all of the boys and girls—the baby—and hired girl. Such fun opening the box you never heard of. It is a great surprise to all who get it. It contains so many of the very things everyone needs and wishes to receive. No where can such liberality be found.

The following are articles of our own manufacture which we take great pride in presenting to the readers of this paper. Send us your name on a postal card and we will deliver you freight prepaid, on terms given below, a Mammoth Christmas Box containing all of the articles named below:

That the giving way of the great storage reservoir at Walnut Grove, near Prescott, Arizona, was not attended with immense loss of life, is only because there were few people in the region. The dam is described and illustrated in a very entertaining article in Scribner's Magazine for January; but in that account nothing is said of its fraudulent construction. But even this defect was not finally any more the cause of fatalities than a saloon in the neighborhood. On the way to warn the settlers below, the messenger got drunk, and another was sent too late except to lose his own life.

Last week the new Governor of Iowa took his oath of office. He was elected by an Anti-prohibition vote, and is of course a Democrat, the first of the kind ever known in Iowa. His inaugural address is about half devoted to an argument against the law of the State which he took an oath to enforce, and a harangue for the saloon. To fitly celebrate the occasion a crowd of Chicago Democrats, led by such characters as "Mike" McDonald, the late gambler king, repaired to Des Moines. The following incident, reported by an admiring organ of the same party, shows the quality of the crowd: "Lieut.-Gov. Hull had rapped for order and requested the audience to rise while prayer was offered. One of Chicago's contingent, misunderstanding the chairman, called out in a loud voice, 'Three cheers for the new Governor of Iowa,' and the delegation arose as one man and cheered with great enthusiasm, after which the chaplain proceeded with his devotions." Iowa, will be very tired, we hope, before next election.

A Masonic member of one of the Congregational churches of this city has for more than a year been before the courts of this city. He was once prominent as a church officer, and had such influence and hardihood that he was able to drive ministers who did not approve the lodge from church councils. He was put on trial for issuing fraudulent warehouse receipts for many thousand dollars. Twice he has been tried and convicted, and now the Supreme Court has ordered him a third trial—and for what reason? Simply because the word "Savings" had been left out of the indictment! The name of the bank which was prosecuting the suit had been changed during the progress of the case, this word being left out. On such a flimsy pretext the Supreme Court of Illinois sets aside the judgment of courts. The other day a Springfield dispatch explained somewhat the moral condition of the State court. A lodge of the order called Elks was formed there by a number of Chicago Freemasons and other secretists, and S. P. Shope, the Chief Justice of this court, joined in the frivolous hilarity and was elected as the reward of his humiliation the "Esteemed Leading Knight" of the new lodge.

Two men are presumed to be training for the next Presidential race, whom we should pray may never reach that goal until they change their moral sentiments. Chauncey Depew, president of the New York Central railway, is one of these. A popular and able man, he is yet weak enough to urge from the beginning that the Columbus fair be opened on the Sabbath day. Russel B. Alger, the Michigan millionaire and present head of the Grand Army order, is another. The Chicago Tribune has openly declared for him, and so has Mr. Clarkson, the assistant Postmaster General whose principle business has been to run Democrats out of the postoffices and get in Republicans. It is some satisfaction to know that Clarkson wishes to resign and that he is not in sympathy with Mr. Wannamaker. The latter wishes the postoffice to be an efficient servant of the people, the former of the politicians. It was very generally believed that the G. A. R. office was to Alger a step only toward the White House. The nation should pray to be delivered from such aspirants.

The March number of the Chautauquan contains an able and excellent article by Senator Fry on the Pan-American Congress, in which he considers, among other topics, the importance of international arbitration. He says: "International and internecine wars weaken, impoverish and destroy. Prosperity, progress in the arts, science, literature, civilization and material affairs never can be promoted by an appeal to arms." He also quotes from the President's Message, asking "that better securities be devised for the maintenance of peace among American nations, and the settlement of all contentions by methods in harmony with Christian civilization." We are glad of these timely words, and trust this congress of republics will adopt measures tending to this result. But why stop with American nations? We are more nearly akin to the people of Europe than to those of South America. Instead of adopting the motto, "In time of peace prepare for war," by building a great navy and coast defences, let us rather say that in time of peace we will prepare for peace, by assembling in 1892 a congress of all Christian nations and the adoption of an international tribunal for the adjustment of all controversies. The first step in civilization is taken when a people commit the protection of the individual to the whole people, instead of his own hands. Why should not the nations of the earth commit the protection of each to the care of the whole, and declare that a people who break the world's peace are the common enemy of all others?

Dr. G. C. Lorimer of the Immanuel Baptist church in this city is the only Freemason of whom we ever knew whose vaulting ambition ever overstepped the line of temerity in defending the lodge. In a public welcome extended to Pere Hyacinthe in Farwell Hall ten or twelve years ago, this "Grand Lodge orator" took occasion to vindicate Freemasonry, and shield the order from the bull of the Pope. The Catholics have now their turn. They say Dr. Lorimer was drunk the other night at Holyoke, Mass. He was to lecture on the French Revolution. Instead he spent an hour in incoherent raving at the Catholic church. He explained later that he was so affected by an over-dose of quinine as to be without ordinary mental control. We may accept the apology, for he is known to be opposed to the saloon; and such accidents may happen to those who are not "devoured of a personal ambition," as is said of Dr. Lorimer by good judges. It may be a lesson of humility, which such a pet of Freemasonry as he should ponder with contrition.

Since writing the above Dr. Lorimer's church had a meeting, and on the motion of N. T. Gassette, "Commandant of the Lines" in the Knight Templar conclave of 1880, the reports of the address were pronounced untrue and malicious, and Dr. Lorimer given six weeks vacation to recruit from nervous prostration.

SHALL WE REVIVE THE ANTI-MASONIC PARTY?

BY REV. ALEXANDER THOMSON.

As an old member of that party and one who still believes in its principles, I answer, Yes, and No. No for the present; and yes for the future.

First, so far as I have been able to read the ways of God in the Bible and in history, there is no warrant for pushing our anti-lodgeism along party lines at present. There was a time when I did not know which was the next great question pushed by the providence of God to the front for settlement. I am in doubt no longer. On the question of the accursed saloon, which is degrading our people, debauching our politics and destroying our homes, God is to-day pouring such a flood of light as perhaps he has never given to man on any other question, save that of the cross. Dull indeed must that ear be that does not hear his solemn, "Forward, march," to the great battle against the saloon; and blind indeed must that man be who does not see the saloon hosts preparing for the decisive struggle.

Now I cannot find that God ever gave mankind but one great work to do at a time. I have been profoundly impressed with this fact. Did not slavery exist over the whole known world at the time of Christ? Was it not as wicked in those days, as practiced by the cruel Romans, as it was in our own country in the time previous to the civil war? Yet we do not find Peter, or John, or James, or Paul warring against it. Why? Manifestly because there was one thing for the people of that age to do; to break away from that idolatry and accept Christ the Lord.

Coming down to the time of the Reformation slavery still existed, and drunkenness, to an extent which in decent society cannot now be imagined. Yet little was said about these two great sins. The whole attention of man was concentrated upon an effort to escape from the spiritual adultery of the church of Rome.

Coming down to our own times we know that there were many questions agitating the public mind in the "sixties," but were they not all for the time swallowed up in the one tremendous question whether the slave-holder or the free man should control this nation?

Now what question has God called upon us to settle to-day? What question is being burned upon the hearts of the saints of God, stirring the wives and mothers of this nation as they have never been stirred before? On what question has religion and science and literature, and judicial opinion concentrated to pour a steady blaze of light that makes ignorance or indifference a mighty sin before God? Is it not this tremendous question of the saloon? If it is, then to push another question to the front cannot be in accordance with the design of Providence.

Again, how many, whose hearts are all afire on the question of saloon or no saloon, know little or nothing of this lodge devil, that is also destroying the people of God, to the utmost extent of his power, and lying like a huge stumbling-block in the way of souls, which would otherwise escape to their Father? Nay, how many thousands are caught in the great drag-net of the lodge who are yet sons of the true faith and brethren beloved of God, even as God's saints in the day of the Reformation sometimes held slaves, and drank intoxicating liquors—and for the same reason, the light not present. Now by working with these in the movement against the saloon, while at the same time we keep our own faith with God by refusing to vote for conspicuous lodge men, shall we not do more to open their minds to the truth on the lodge question than in any other way? And if, in the blessing of God, we live to see the saloon overthrown, then in the Anti-secret League we will have the skeleton of the party that is to be; and, free from the darkening influences of whisky and beer, will be able to take up the next great movement in the name of God.

Let the Cynosure and papers of a like character move on in their light-giving orbits. Let every teacher and pastor to whom God has given the light on the Secret Empire, be faithful to his trust. While storming the nearest stronghold of the devil, let us not fail to point out to God's warriors the dark and terrible fortress that lies just beyond, and sends out its succors to our present enemy, and when we have captured the first, the advancing army may be ready in God's name to assault the other.

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

It has been hinted that the use of money as a tool for effecting exchanges has led to other civilizing and economical inventions. Let us notice a few of these.

The first engine made was unable to propel itself without the aid of a small boy to turn the steam off and on. He was compelled to sit lever in hand all day and turn the steam into the rear of the cylinder to force the piston out, then reverse this, let the steam in at the front and force the piston back again. But this was so simple an operation that the boy thought the engine might do this itself and he invented the way. If we go through any large manufacturing establishment we shall see that the work of the laborers is narrowed down to one particular set of tasks. The simpler the work is made the more the laborer can accomplish. But at last his task becomes so simple he invents a machine that will do the work for him. And for this reason the machinery is made to specialize its work. We could not invent a machine that would turn out a watch ready made. But one machine makes the tiny screws, another the hair-spring, another the escapement and so on. But the machine for making screws was not invented until many a man had spent his whole life-time doing nothing but making these tiny screws by hand. Many men have lived and died knowing just one simple trade; but they studied their trade, they simplified and reduced to order every motion until at last a machine is found that can perform the work equally well. We see plainly that all this is impossible in an age without money when each man is a "Jack of all trades." We have heard of medicines warranted to cure every disease flesh is heir to, but a machine that shall do the work of a man in every department of activity is an impossibility.

Without money, that which has made this multifarious division of labor and possibility of progress a common place of life, we could never have advanced in civilization beyond the flocks and herds of Job, and the famines of Jacob's sons in Canaan while Joseph was in Egypt. But now a man may learn to do one thing well; and, however lowly the task, an honest laborer may turn that skill into dollars and his dollars will command the baker and grocer to feed his family; they will command the clothier and dry-goods merchant to wrap them warm and they will obey; they will command the architect to raise a home over their heads and it is so. What a wonder-worker is money! What a God-send, when once we learn how to win it, and, which is more important, how to spend it.

But this is exactly the lesson men fail to learn. Why doesn't some one who is a ready writer send his editor an article brim full of benevolence and shrewdness on "The Uses of Money"? When the laboring man learns how to use money his grievance is more than half appeased. I would almost dare to say that an honest man can earn money honestly—mark, I do not say inherit it from a rich Wall Street banker—in exactly the proportion that he knows how to spend it honestly. What we need to do is to teach men how to use their time and how to use the money into which they turn their time.

"Take the tax off of tobacco," says a certain circle of politicians, "it's the poor man's only luxury." It's his only luxury! Shall I kill myself eating candy colored with Paris green because it's the only colored candy I can afford to buy? Shall we encourage the poor laboring man in the use of whisky and tobacco because these are his only luxuries, when we know full well that it is the use of these that keeps him poor and ignorant, and, I might say, immoral?

These so-called luxuries, like the Paris green candy and a thousand other so-called luxuries, are first and foremost poisons, and they undermine the intellect and stupefy the heart; while every sane student of our social problem knows that what our laboring men need most of all is more brain, more moral fibre. And so I say let us give a little more attention to the uses of time, the uses of character and the uses of money in our discussions of the labor problem. Time, God's greatest gift to man; character, time's heavenly reward; money, time's earthly reward—let us study these.

SECRETISM AND CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

The following is from a paper read by Rev. H. A. Day, at an association of ministers held near Rives Junction, Mich., Dec. 17, 1889, and published in the Wesleyan Methodist:

To the question as to whether members of secret societies should be admitted to church membership while retaining their connection with, and standing in, any secret society, we answer, without any "equivocation, mental reservation, or secret evasion of mind in us whatever," certainly not.

The principle of secrecy in secret societies is the characteristic feature to which we object in these societies. We believe this principle to be in direct opposition to the openness of method inculcated by the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We believe the principle of secrecy in societies to be in accord with the darkness mentioned in Scripture and opposed to which the Word of God calls our attention to light. These two principles are set before us as the governing principles in the actions of men. "If we walk," i.e., move or act, "in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not tell the truth." John 1: 6. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." John 3: 19, 20, 21.

Paul says to the Romans: "Let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light." And again, to the Corinthians he puts the following queries, after having established the idea of the peculiar distinctiveness of Christianity from all other systems: "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

Assuming, as he had reason to do, that the church of God at Corinth, and in all other places, would and could, with consistency, give but one answer to his questions, he proceeds to exhort them to act in accord with the principle established by the answer which they must give to the questions, and says: "Wherefore, come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

On no other conditions will the Lord receive us as his children and grant us the privileges and benefits of his grace. We may profess to enjoy them, but we do not, and cannot, until we have complied with these conditions.

Paul, writing to the church at Thessalonica, tells them to "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good," and "Abstain from all appearance of evil."

Secrecy in any society gives it the appearance of evil. Therefore Christian churches should not grant them their fellowship and protection. Let it but appear that this fatal principle is incorporated into any society and its condemnation should be sealed in the minds of all good men. And, by the term "good men," we mean only those who are followers of Christ in the fullest sense.

Christ says: "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

John says, with reference to this: "He that saith he abideth in him ought himself so to walk even as he walked." Christ walked in the light. He dealt with openness and invited the world to look upon the work and see the methods by which it was accomplished. He said: "In secret have I said nothing." Why did he say that? Did he, the Saviour of man, anticipate the state of things in which we now find ourselves placed? Did he look forward to the time when there would seem to be what almost amounts to a passion for some form of secretism? when it seems as though people imagine there can be no success in any enterprise unless there be connected therewith this element of secrecy as a component part? when churches are rent over the question and well-meaning men stand in doubt as to the exact course to be pursued in the crisis which is upon us? Did he, the blessed Saviour, utter these words that the doubting and struggling ones might receive light and take courage from his words? Let us accept them as such, and follow his example.

JUSTICE TO INDIANS.

Kirk Munroe reminds our nation in the current Scribner's Magazine of an opportunity to do justice that may soon be out of our reach. It is to protect from rapacious white men the remnant of the Florida Indians that escaped the Seminole war forty-five years ago. He says:

White settlers are crowding the Seminoles away from their old-time haunts, their choicest lands are being seized upon by speculators. Their future offers no brighter prospect than that of many another tribe long since blotted from existence, and, unless some attention is given to their condition, another chapter of our Indian history will be sealed with injustice and murder. Some of the Indian fields, upon which they are most dependent for their food-supplies, have already been homesteaded by white land-grabbers, who, when asked to show proofs of occupation and improvement, point to the work of the Indians and claim it as their own. President Cleveland became much interested in these Seminoles, and declared that, as he could discover no substantial reason for their removal from the country they now occupy, they should not be molested during his term of office.

To remove them from their tropical home to the comparatively cold latitude of the Indian Territory would not only be an act of cruelty, but of unnecessary and costly cruelty. The lands they now hold belong to the Government, and can never be of great value to white settlers. It would cost the Government nothing to reserve them forever for the use of their present occupants, nor would it entail any hardship upon the whites, to whom they would thus be made a forbidden territory. On the other hand, if the crowding and persecution of the Florida Seminoles, already begun, is continued, they will ultimately be driven to desperation, and will choose to die fighting rather than be killed by slower but equally certain methods. Feeble remnant as they are, they could, in their swamps and watery fastnesses, maintain for an indefinite period a contest that would entail the loss of hundreds of precious lives and millions of dollars.

To-day these Florida Seminoles are peaceful, industrious, and self-supporting. Civilization has already gained a hold upon them, and each successive year finds them living more and more as white men live.

THE TOBACCO MANIA.

BY GEORGE W. CLARK.

[Concluded.]

In my long experience in the temperance cause I had sad proof how almost impossible it was to reform a drunkard while he clung to his tobacco. Many I have known relapse to drunkenness by tobacco, while many are first led to drink by this vice. Of 600 convicts in the State's prison near 500, it is said, were first led astray by tobacco, thence to liquor, thence to crime, thence to prison, and often to the gallows. The first words uttered by young Lattimer at Jackson, Mich., recently, after his conviction for the murder of his own mother, was, "Give me a cigar." And the last words spoken by the drunken Sovereign, who was hung at London, Canada, as he stepped out on the gallows (the jailor told me), where he was hung for the (whisky) murder of his wife and seven children, was, "Give me a chaw of ter-backer!" Thus are tobacco and liquor, these twin incarnations of Satan, one and inseparable in their unholy work of human degradation, crime and death.

As I said before, some truths were stated in said paper of the evils of tobacco, and then all "kicked over" by recommending its use in "moderation," advising "when" or "the best time to use it," and "how to avoid certain bad effects" by "using it after meals," etc., etc., as though there was any best time to do a foolish or bad thing.

This tampering or dabbling with a "bad thing," with evil in "moderation," is the devil's starting point to all intemperance and drunkenness. It is the initiation, the entering wedge, the beginning of the end in all downward roads to ruin and disgrace. "Abstain from all appearance of evil." "Touch not, taste not, handle not the accursed thing." This is the divine council. These are the words of wisdom. If tobacco has the poison nature and injurious effects proved by universal experience, by the united testimony of hundreds of the most able physicians, and admitted by thousands who use it; and being of no earthly use (except to kill bugs, fleas on dogs, and lice on the backs of cattle); and of no good to body, soul or spirit; and an expensive, filthy, "bad habit," as its victims confess, why in the name of common sense and common decency use the vile stuff at all? or tolerate its use anywhere? why not cry out against the evil everywhere, and help save our boys and young men from the defilement and ruin to which, in this country, it leads over 20,000 of them every year?

Again, it is said by some writers, "smoking won't hurt laboring men, as they have no nerves." This assertion is not only unphysiological and unjust, but a cruel slur upon the toiling masses. Laboring men are constructed like other men, "of one blood," with all the primal powers and sensitive organs and faculties of human beings, though sad to say, many of these are badly fouled and deadened with tobacco and beer, the great bane of the hard working poor, a terrible robber of the scanty earnings of the wage workers. They have, however, one very sensitive nerve, and they owe it to their families as well as themselves and the community that the sensitiveness of this nerve should be most carefully heeded,—that is the "pocket nerve." Fifteen cents a day (and some waste twice and thrice that amount, some more) would get for the comfort of their families in the course of the year: 2 tons coal, 2 cords wood, 2 barrels apples, 2 barrels potatoes, 2 barrels flour, a barrel Indian meal, 20lbs. oatmeal, 20lbs sugar, give you $5 to take your family on a recreation trip to the lake on the 4th of July, have ten or twelve dollars left for the church, for books, papers, street cars, or "frocks for wife and babies." I appeal to you, sober, thinking, laboring men, if this would not be vastly better, and make your homes purer and happier, than fouling and poisoning yourselves with tobacco and beer? It should be known and not forgotten that the smoke of tobacco, the nuisance that meets you everywhere, and so contaminates the air we have to breathe, contains two most violent poisons, and hence it is that this smoke is so very offensive, forbidden every decent place, and never intruded into any respectable company by gentlemen. The smoke of tobacco has been analyzed by the ablest physiologists and chemists now living—B. W. Richardson, F.R.S., of England, and Dr. Krause of Saxony—and they find it to contain two violent poisons, carbonic oxyd gas and carbonic acid gas; hence the sickening and deathly nausea and pallor of many wives and children in houses where the husbands smoke, and where they have to inhale not only the sickening smoke, but the poison emanations of the husband's and father's tobacco-poisoned bodies; and hence, also, the deathly pallor so often seen in persons of tender age, girls especially, who work in tobacco factories, and are compelled to breathe the poisoned air of such pernicious establishments. Dr. Kellogg says, "One strong cigar contains poison enough, if condensed, to kill two men." He placed one-seventh part of a drop of nicotine on the tongue of a cat. The poor thing gave a tremendous bound across the room, uttered a piercing shriek, and then fell dead in a few seconds. He injected one-fourteenth part of a drop into the leg of a frog. The sweet songster of the pond gave a leap and a croak, but it was its last leap and its death croak.

One of the most pernicious forms in which this vice is insinuating itself into wide and most hurtful use, and in spite of the laws against it, is the vicious cigarette; and this insidious corruption of our children is on the increase, over a hundred and sixty millions being sold in this country last year! Prof. Lafin says: "The cigarette is four poisons ahead of the cigar in the race of death!" Walter Fletcher, the brightest boy in his class at Louisville, Ky., died recently from cigarette smoking. John Fogarty of Bayshore, L. I., was recently taken to an insane asylum from cigarette poisoning. Every cigarette smoked causes physical reaction, destructive of the life tissues and the vital forces, and renders its dupes liable to any malignant disease that comes along, and in such cases fatal results are quite sure to follow. If our youth did but know of the pernicious ingredients, the worthless refuse used, the filthy process, the dirty places in New Orleans, Savannah, San Francisco, and other places where they are prepared, and the foul and often leprosed hands that make them, they never would put one of the vile things between their lips.

Notwithstanding all these evil effects, the mercenary tobacco mongers are seducing our youth all over the country by every artifice in their power, and no voice of reproof, warning, or instruction is heard from church, school, statesman or press. It is of vital importance to our children, to future generations, to our manhood and motherhood, the healthfulness and wholesomeness of the homes as the nurseries of our race, that these potent voices should be loud and long against this deadly, this insidiously undermining foe. A noted doctor declares, "Many a good woman supposed to be dying of consumption is simply poisoned by inhaling her sweet husband's tobacco-poisoned breath and the foul emanations of his tobacco-poisoned body." What "sweet husband" won't abate this murderous nuisance for the sake of his "better half" and their little innocent children? Many women complain they can not enter a postoffice, a lawyer's office, a railway office, an insurance office, and sometimes, sad to say, into a minister's study, without being stifled and half suffocated with foul tobacco smoke, and often disgusted and nauseated with the loathsome tobacco slobber, with which floors, cuspidors, cars and sidewalks are besmeared, and that they can scarcely get a breathing place on the corner, sidewalk or street cars, where poison tobacco smoke, poured out from foul mouths, is not whiffed into their faces. O shame, where is thy blush?

Again, the victims of tobacco are no less the bond slaves of their morbid appetites than are the victims of alcohol or opium. Many have I known, even ministers, who, convinced of its evil effects, and of the bad example they were setting, have struggled hard and long, but in vain, to get free and clean from the power and control of the noxious weed, and finally confessed themselves in miserable and hopeless bondage. An old tobacco victim said to me, and I repeat it to young men, "Don't learn to use tobacco. My head is often in such a whirl, my brain so foul, my strength so exhausted from the use of it, that I cannot leave off. I am compelled to forego much that is pleasant in life and live a tobacco-tortured existence, and be a driveling slave till I die." In Louisville, Ky., as I started out for church Sunday morning, a pale, puny little boy ran up to me, crying out, "Mister, give us a chaw of ter-baker." "Is it possible," said I, "a poor, little, feeble urchin like you is poisoning himself with tobacco? You won't live through your teens. Why don't you quit it, and now?" "O! sir," said the little fellow, pitifully, "I have tried; but I can't."

I offered a young man, who had become a cigar victim while in the army, a gold watch if he would quit smoking. As much as he desired the watch, the cigar was master; and to this day it controls him, against all remonstrance and pleading and the obvious ill effects upon his health. King Louis Phillipe chided his gardener for smoking before the King; but more especially for smoking in the presence of the Queen of France and the Princesses. "Sire," answered the gardener, "it is stronger than I am. If your majesty is not satisfied with my services, I shall have to present my account; for I shall probably die with vexation over the matter, but it will be with my pipe between my teeth." How significant the caution, "Let it alone before it meddeth."

A few words as I close, about the great and wicked waste. A young man in the city of Brooklyn found himself worse than throwing away three shillings a day for tobacco. He made up his mind it was a useless, wasteful and pernicious habit, and that he would quit it, and lay by the money every day and put it into the savings bank. The first year he had saved over $138. Every year thereafter he deposited the money in the bank, where it drew 5 per cent compound interest. A while ago his sixty-fourth birthday came around, and, Mr. Smoker, what do you think his savings amounted to? Besides the benefit to body and soul which he received, he had to his credit in the bank the nice sum of $31,275.31. He then purchased a home, for which he paid $20,000; and the interest on the balance just supported his family comfortably. Young men, fathers, try the savings bank instead of the wasting "terbacker!" Only twenty cents a day saved, and invested in the bank at only 5 per cent compound interest, would, in 10 to 15 years, buy good, comfortable homes for your dependent families. Is not this better than the total loss of your hard-earned money, and the injury, the foulness, and offensiveness it leaves all along its foul and useless way? France, Germany, Holland, Austria, Russia, England, Ireland, and the United States, waste more money on useless, poison tobacco, than on needful wholesome bread; more for the bane of life than for the staff of life, say nothing of the amount spent for devilish liquor; but put together the amount to a sacrilegious waste of over $2,000,000,000, say nothing of the consequential cost which runs up into the billions; and which falls most oppressively and degradingly upon the poorer classes. The money so wickedly wasted on these pernicious and dehumanizing poisons every year in this country would build two railroads around the globe; fill the world with missionaries of the cross, with Bibles, schools, teachers, tracts, electric lights, and supply the destitute and desolate homes with all the needed comforts of life. Oh! for such a change! Let us help this glorious consummation all we can. Every woman, every man—"the good time coming!" It is fitting that reform on this subject should begin and lead on in this country, as this deleterious weed is a native of our American soil. After the discovery of this country by Christopher Columbus, tobacco was transported into Spain and Portugal from here. It was afterwards introduced into England by Sir Walter Raleigh; and from England it was soon introduced into France, Russia, Germany and Italy. When its poisonous and deleterious effects became known in these countries, as would be most natural, strenuous efforts were made to suppress its use, and save the people from its contamination. King James, the First, imposed heavy duties upon it to keep it out of England. Russia prohibited its use under the penalty for the first offence of having the soles of the feet beaten and lacerated; for the second offence, having the nose cut off. What a sorry noseless spectacle most of our men and boys would present if such a law were to be executed in this country. But for the third offence, the poor Russian tobacco victim was to be put to death. In Switzerland those who would use tobacco were held and punished as criminals. If any person had the audacity or indecency to use tobacco in the meeting house in Italy, he was at once expelled from the church.

In Turkey the victim of tobacco was led through the streets with his nose transfixed with a pipe stem, as a warning to others. In Persia tobacco using was held and treated not only as an offence, but as a crime against society, and punished as severely as any other capital crime. Notwithstanding these earnest and persistent measures against this vicious mania, it has continued to increase and spread throughout the world, until it is now next to impossible to estimate, either the number of its victims, its evil effects upon the race, or the enormity and wickedness of its waste. How is it possible, may we not ask, for an advanced, or advancing state of Christian civilization, political purity, intellectual culture, physical health or stamina, or religious spirituality and zeal in Christian reform to be reached, secured and maintained, among peoples whose bodies and minds are thus stupefied and beclouded, and whose sensuous natures are thus besotted and be-deadened and poisoned with liquor and tobacco? Will the good people, the well wishers of our race, awake to a realizing sense of our true condition and great danger, and arouse and unite to stay the onward sweep and fearful sway of these debasing and deadly foes to the nation's still greater greatness, goodness, grandeur and happiness? Oh! parents, you must save the boys, if you would save the men!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26, 1890.

It is not widely known that there has been in active operation here for more than half a century a temperance organization known as the Congressional Temperance Society. It is the oldest organization of its kind in the United States, having been organized in 1833. That was three months before the first temperance convention ever held in this country. Other temperance societies had been organized prior to this, but had died out or been superseded, so that this is really the patriarch of such organizations. This society originated among members of Congress, is managed by them, and made up of Senators and Representatives. Since its organization it has enrolled the names of hundreds of our national legislators as members, and in it there have always been a faithful few who kept the fires of temperance burning. Its membership has been increasing of late and a deeper interest is being taken than ever before.

On last Sabbath evening these cold-water statesmen met to celebrate their society's fifty-sixth anniversary, and many prominent people of Washington interested in temperance and temperance legislation attended the meeting. There were several interesting speeches from members of Congress, the last speaker being Representative J. J. Taylor of Ohio. He made an announcement that was met with loud and prolonged applause. As chairman of the Committee on Alcoholic Traffic, he stated he could safely say that the bill to establish a commission on alcoholic traffic would be favorably reported. Laborious efforts have been made by this society to have Congress appoint a Commission to investigate the liquor traffic. Four times the bill has passed the Senate, but it has always failed in the House. Representative Taylor thought this proposed inquiry was at least a step in the right direction. It was not capital so much as appetite that he feared. The drink of the nation was more than the capital of the National bank, greater than the earnings of all railroads, and this explained the want and destitution existing.

Representative Pickler of South Dakota gave an account of the work of prohibition in his State, and said it was an example for other States to follow. Twenty years was the time he gave for prohibition to triumph, and he felt convinced that it would prevail within that time. He said this reform would never go backward, that we must have agitation, but the stone had been cast into American politics, and it will never cease to roll until its work was completed. He also said South Dakota was more indebted to the W. C. T. U. for prohibition than to all men.

Mrs. Ellen Foster of Iowa, the organizer of the Non-Partisan Temperance Society, who has spent the week here in the interests of her temperance work, has been telling her audiences about the success of prohibition in Iowa. She showed through Governor Larrabee's last message to the legislature of Iowa how crime had decreased, business improved, and the moral tone of the community been raised by the prohibitory law. The Governor, who had formerly opposed prohibition, was now strongly in favor of it, and as strongly opposed to high license. The jails are empty for several months of the year in many of the counties of the State, and there seems to be so little use for the new penitentiary building at Fort Madison that the Governor has suggested that it be sold to the Government for Federal prisoners.

While Congress was balloting on the World's Fair site, there was intense excitement on the floor of the House and in the galleries. When the contest was over, and the West had won, there was a brief demonstration of applause, but in a few minutes the hall and galleries were both empty.

Washington had rested her chances for the Exposition upon the fact of being the national capital, and that a great commemorative celebration in the name of the Government could not well be held at any other place. Depending upon considerations of this kind, and not upon the more potential influences of the lobby, the capital was counted out at an early stage of the proceedings.

With all the prestige that attaches to the seat of a great government, Washington really wields less political influence than any other city in the country. She neither has elections of her own nor a voice in elections elsewhere. It now depends upon the Senate to endorse or antagonize the action of the House, and to say whether there will be a Fair at Chicago or not. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

PASTORS AND LECTURERS OF BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb. 21, 1890.

There is no faltering on the part of those of our brethren here who took part in our late convention. They are all busy men, with hands and hearts full. Dr. Gordon says, "I will encourage and help on your good work wherever I can, but I can't spare the time to go to Chicago." Bro. Gifford assures me of his increasing interest; and as we looked over Masonic rituals to-day by Mackey and McCoy, and I explained to him the R. A. degree where Johnston was murdered, and the "raising" of the third degree, he expressed great surprise that any intelligent person should ever engage in such a miserable farce. Both Bro. Gifford and Bro. Lansing expressed a wish to witness the public working of the degrees if it were practicable. If the ministers of Boston, Worcester and cities convenient wish to meet, or any considerable number of them, to witness the work of the third degree, and will write me at 309 Tremont St., I will endeavor to arrange for an open lodge and the explanations of the several ceremonies by some one who is competent to do the work.

Joseph Cook was greeted by the largest audience of the season at his last Monday lecture, and their highest anticipations were fully realized. Not only the great ability, but the candor and fairness with which Mr. Cook discussed election manipulations and frauds, received repeated and hearty responses from his audience, and will be read with approval by tens of thousands not present. In a personal interview he expressed great satisfaction at the interest shown by the distinguished and numerous signers to the call for an anti-secrecy convention in Chicago, promised a notice in Our Day, and said, "I am going West to California about that time, and, if practicable, will drop in at the convention." He finds it difficult to obtain official statistics of a late date on the lodge, and its interference in legislation, church discipline and the civil courts. Any person in possession of facts that can be authenticated along this line would confer a favor and render valuable service by sending them to me here.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, the evangelist, is holding a successful series of meetings at Somerville. From him I learned something of his past relation with Lodge No. 500 of Indianapolis, of which Charles, a brother of B. F. Jacobs, was W. M.

He adheres to his position taken at Knoxville, Tenn., and at Worcester, and said: "I seldom close a series of meetings without reaffirming that testimony." The mystery in Bro. Munhall's case is that he should continue in nominal connection with an institution which he has not entered for fifteen years, and against which he hurls the thunderbolts of Jove. Masonry, however, is a mystery, and we seldom approach it from any side without meeting a surprise.

Bro. Grant has been doing solid work at Beverly on the bed-rock of anti-lodge reform by preaching freely from his pulpit on the subject. He told me that his congregations had increased to about 2,700, and that the subject was being discussed by the papers quite generally throughout his county; that his speech at the Boston convention, as reported in the Cynosure, was reprinted in the local papers, and that a friend has ordered two thousand of a revised edition for general distribution. He has received and accepted a call to Harvard Street Baptist church and expects to enter upon his new field about the first of April.

This is the coldest day of the season that I have experienced. There are a few sleighs out in Boston, but at Brookline and other suburbs the thoroughfares are thronged with the "merry-makers." Mrs. Jones is kindly making some needed repairs for our comfort and the accommodation of the work. We have ordered appropriate signs for the building, which we hope to have out this week. Friends calling have had trouble with the bell, but in future these little incidental inconveniences will be removed and the N. E. headquarters will be readily distinguished and easy of access by ringing the bell at 309 Tremont St.

JOSEPH COOK ON MORMONISM.

FEB. 24, 1890:—Going to Tremont Temple to-day, the spacious auditorium was well filled and the speaker on the platform when we entered.

The "Pan-American Congress" was the theme of the prelude, in which Mr. Cook highly commended the effort of American nations to secure better commercial relations, and the settlement of difficulties by a court of arbitration, and expressed the hope that the World's Fair in 1892 might make the continental reforms contemplated by the Pan-American Congress cosmopolitan.

The lecture proper that followed on the Mormon Problem will take rank among the ablest in the series of 214 delivered by Mr. Cook in the Boston Monday Lecture course. No part was more highly appreciated than the scathing denunciation of the unlawful and treasonable oaths and the horrid penalties under which the "avenging angels" performed their bloody work. His arraignment was based on the findings of the courts in the recent trials, strongly corroborated by the statements of highly respectable citizens who were in a position to know the facts. He gave the estimated number of murders under these oaths at 600 within ten years. Few probably, who were not Masons, in that large audience, knew that the disemboweling, throat-cutting, and the tearing out of the heart and tongue of the bloody code of Mormonism were the same as the penalties of the first three degrees of Masonry, as practiced in Boston and elsewhere; but such is the fact, and every intelligent Mason who listened to Mr. Cook's lecture could not fail to note, not the similarity simply, but the identity; and he must have felt that his own order was being discussed under another name. A single sentence at this point, putting all associations or societies with similar oaths and penalties on a par, would in my judgment have been timely and have driven the nail in a sure place.

The remedy for this monster evil proposed was: 1. Compulsory education. 2. Liberal financial aid to all unsectarian schools. 3. Disfranchise for the crime of polygamy as for other crimes. 4. Prohibit the immigration of criminal classes, especially polygamists. 5. Deprive all polygamists of benefit of homestead laws, etc. 6. Prohibit polygamy by constitutional amendment in all the States of the Union. 7. Keep Utah out of the Union until she has thoroughly proved her loyalty.

I spoke Sabbath afternoon at the Bethany Mission, Haymarket Square, and in the evening at the Sailor's Bethel on Hanover street, at both of which places I found friends to our work. Learning from a friend I met at the Bethel of a holiness meeting in Wesley Chapel on Monday at 3

P. M., I made my way to the hall to find it packed with a fine-appearing people, about two-thirds of whom were women. Their testimonies were very definite on "Divine Healing," "the second work," "freedom from all inclination to sin," etc. They seemed a spiritual, and were certainly a very earnest, people. I conversed with some of those who were most prominent and found every one opposed to secret lodges. Tracts were received thankfully by both men and women, and if in the city on Monday next, I hope to attend and introduce our work.

FEB. 25TH.—I called on Joseph Cook to-day, who said, "Give me official documentary evidence on the lodge question, and I will speak as freely as I did on the Mormon oath." It is no lack of courage or interest, but a want of facts judiciously established that is delaying his utterances, which are sure to come in sledge-hammer blows in due time. Friends, please make a note of this and send me facts in cases you may know, giving names of parties, dates and particulars so far as you can.

DR. MUNHALL ON SEPARATION.

This was the topic of a Bible reading by Dr. Munhall at Somerville to-day. The audience room of the Congregational church was well filled, a large per cent being women. Quoting Exodus 33: 16, Dr. Munhall said, God dwelling with his people, and believers walking with God, means separation from the world. He then gave 2 Cor. 6: 14 to 17, in proof of the Gospel rule. Light and darkness, God and the devil, were no more antagonistic than the Christian and the world. The yoking of believers in marriage or business with unbelievers is unscriptural and extremely perilous. His condemnation of games of chance, Sunday newspapers, the theater and the dance were unqualified. He introduced the question of by saying, "I belong to two and have bumped against nearly all of them, and know what I am talking about. Their sociability and benevolence may be all well enough, but they belong to the world. In one to which I belonged it was voted to hold a banquet with champagne and a dance. I protested, but was overruled by the majority, and therefore came out from among them. Another got up a theatrical performance, and I left it. A man came to get me to go back. I told him why I left, and that I belonged to the church and would not have fellowship with such ungodly performances. He said, 'Don't you know bad people who do wicked things in the church?' I said 'Yes, but when the church votes to approve their wickedness, I will get out of the church as quickly as I left the lodge.'

"When a man belongs to two or three lodges and attends their weekly meetings, he hasn't got any time to go to the prayer meeting, and generally very little money to give to the cause of Christ. I have known men who would give from $25 to $250 a year to their lodges, who would sign $12 a year to the church, and the collector would have to wear out his shoes to get even that paltry sum after it was pledged. Such men are hopeless cases and I would not pray for them.

"I once went to a town that had 152 saloons and 33 secret lodges, that spent on an average $3,000 a year each for their lodges. If any man can raise money for Christian work, I can, but I couldn't get $600 in that town for a Y. M. C. A. I have about made up my mind that the whole thing is of the world, and the enemy of God and his church. Brethren, why don't you say amen. You know I am telling the truth; and I pray that you may have grace to receive it in love, as I have spoken it. As Christ's disciples we can make no compromise with the world. The friendship of the world is enmity against God."

The whole discourse was received with the most marked attention, and at its close I thought the condition most opportune for handing out tract No. 10, "A Pastor's Confession." A number, and among them the pastor's wife, stopped to speak words of approval. A Mr. Blaikie, of the firm of Blaikie and Son, contractors and builders, gave me his card with expressions of hearty sympathy.

FEB. 26TH.—A representative of the City Directory called to-day for information, which I was glad to furnish respecting our work in the city and elsewhere. If the work here promises to be permanent, he wants to insert it among the Christian associations of the city. He has been a careful observer of movements in this city for a quarter of a century, and though not connected with Freemasonry, its workings have not escaped his notice. I may be able to use to advantage some of the facts he gave me. Mrs. Stoddard is the guest of Mrs. Gleason to-day, for the double purpose of sociability and planning work for a N. E. campaign. I expect to join her this evening at a meeting of Christian workers in Roslindale. A good letter from Bro. Graves, by hand of amanuensis, tells of his severe sickness since the 9th of November last. He sends a number of names friendly and says, "I want to show up Masonry with a magic lantern if I get well enough to attend to it." Let us join in prayer for the speedy recovery of this efficient and dear brother.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.

ALLEGHENY, Pa., Feb. 28, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I herewith mail to Bro. Phillips the following account of my work for the past twenty-eight days: Number of addresses given, 11; number of Cynosure subscriptions secured, 78; number of calls made, 234; amount of Cynosure subscriptions taken, $105.25; collections and contributions, $14.13; amount of books sold, $10.95. Many tracts have been distributed. There is much encouragement to the agent of reform, battling for an unpopular truth, in the thought that the little seed sown through the months, with God's blessing will grow through the years and the harvest of rejoicing will come by and by. The masses in their eagerness for a little of earth's glittering gold will "fall into divers temptations." Secret insurance associations promising to pay in seven years one thousand dollars for two hundred and fifty, will rob thousands. Others will parade until almost worn out with a white bib and painted pole that they may be admired as the "great," "grand," "noble," etc., etc. But their folly departs with them. Truth alone abides the test. When the chaff is blown off, the wheat will appear.

Dr. McAllister of Pittsburg, well known to Cynosure readers, is giving a series of Sabbath afternoon lectures on Catholicism, in hopes to awaken an interest which will prompt to united action against the encroachment of the popish beast. The great need of speedy and earnest effort in this direction is certainly apparent.

On Monday evening I addressed an audience of some two hundred in a Lutheran church of which Rev. Lose is pastor. Four pastors of this denomination were present. Rev. L. has faithfully enforced the rule excluding lodge men from membership in his church, though amid great adversity. My lecture in the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary was not largely attended. Many who wished to have been present were detained. Remarks were made by several. I think all felt that we spent a profitable hour.

On Sabbath evening I hope to address those who may gather in a Lutheran church, South Pittsburg, Rev. Spannuth, pastor. Rev. E. M. Milligan, pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian church, Parnassus, Pa., has kindly arranged to give me a hearing on Monday evening. I go thence to Elizabeth, Pa., where Dr. Pollock of the United Presbyterian church will have arrangements made for my lecture. I shall reach home, D. V., by the 6th or 7th.

W. B. STODDARD.

A WEEK IN NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After I had finished my work at Adaline I called on several of the United Brethren and secured some donations to send the Cynosure to Illinois ministers for one month, when the conference of Christians is held in Chicago. I then went to Lightsville, where I had an appointment to lecture. The congregation was larger than we expected. The secret society men, Masons and others, came from Leaf River. A German Baptist, who was present, said to the Leaf River secretists, as they were returning home, "That was all true that the lecturer told us."

From Lightsville I came to Kishwaukee, where I spoke three times, preaching the faith of Christ and showing the antagonism of the secret society system to Christianity. I have not lectured at some points, where I thought to do so, because I found the pastors and churches engaged in revival work; but I have conversed privately and distributed literature where the way did not open for more public work.

The coming conference of Christians, to consider the secret lodge question, is regarded with favor by all with whom I have conversed. Let prayer be offered without ceasing for the divine blessing upon that gathering of God's people.

C. F. HAWLEY.

PROFESSIONAL HOLINESS IN KENTUCKY.

CAMP NELSON, Ky., Feb. 24, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been here more than a week laboring for this people. I have preached eight times, besides once at White Oak, a colored church four miles away. On Sabbath, the 16th, we celebrated the Lord's Supper. The occasion was one of great solemnity. I preached from 1 Cor. 5: 7, 8, on "purging out the old leaven." The Sabbath-school averages over 100 and is well conducted. The people are interested in African missions, and yesterday at 3 P. M. we had a missionary meeting at which the children brought in their collections amounting to $7.50. Considering the poverty of the people this was doing well—far better than the mountain white people.

But a great and pressing need of this people is employment that is not demoralizing. The great distilleries here employ a good many and give them fair wages (paid mostly in goods), but the influence on the people is pernicious. No man

THE CHURCH RESPONSIBLE.

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 17, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—One of the subjects not discussed in the Cincinnati Christian Convention was, "The Church's Responsibility for Sabbath Desecration." The brother who was to discuss this theme was sick in bed. Its omission was all the more to be regretted because it is the most important topic in the whole list. It is known that church members buy and read the Sunday newspaper and no account is made of it. Church members start on their business journeys and return from them on Sabbath to save time; they go to the grocery and buy their eatables Sabbath morning; they patronize the ice wagon and milk cart, and use the street cars without let or hindrance on Sabbath. Only a few of the churches will allow the conductors and engineers who work on Sabbath to retain their membership. But any church will gladly welcome the owner of the road, for whom these conductors and engineers work, as a valuable member. The gold ring and goodly apparel and bank account are as potent to-day as in James's day. Church members go to the postoffice on Sabbath and get their mail which has been brought to the city and distributed and handed out by church members. The fact is the church has so far conformed to the world that only the image of the Sabbath remains from which the life has departed.

No permanent Sabbath reformation can be hoped for in society until there is a revival of Sabbath keeping within the church. These Diabolionians must be hunted out of the city of Mansoul. "Judgment must begin at the house of God." The ministry must use great plainness of speech. Sometimes these sins are condemned in such an apologetic manner as to condone them. A minister once said, "If you commit these sins persistently you will be punished, as it were; you will be lost, so to speak; you will go to hell, in a sense." There is too much of this smooth, velvety, lavender preaching which makes sin a matter of no consequence. It is very different from Guthrie's method.

He preached a flaming sermon against the profligacy of the established clergy. His friends said to him, "Why did you say those awful things?" "Why? Are they not true? Are the clergy not guilty of adultery and drunkenness and robbery?"

"Yes, what you said is true. But it injures the church to say so. Why did you not preach it in Latin, and the clergy could have read it and the people would not have understood it."

"Well," he said, "when they sin in Latin I will condemn them in Latin; but when they sin in English I will condemn them in English."

That is the heroic treatment needed by the church to-day. Of course there is danger in it! Some ministers will lose their places. But shall a soldier fear to be shot? Have the soldiers of the cross grown so faint hearted that they will not face the enemy? "Cry aloud and spare not; tell my people Israel their transgressions and the house of Jacob their sins." J. M. FOSTER.

HOW A "CALL" MAY WORK FOR GOOD.

HUMBOLDT, Neb., Feb. 15, 1890.

My hope and earnest prayer to God is that the Conference of Christians in Chicago, in April next, may have unbounded success; that its influence may be far-reaching in all directions, and particularly so westward. For this end the call should be made as loud as possible. I have a particular desire that Nebraska should have a voice, if but a small voice, in making so important a call. "Every little helps." With this feeling I resolved to bring the matter to the attention of the ministry in Humboldt and leave the results with God. I called first on the pastor of the Presbyterian church, not knowing what he might think of it, though he had previously signed the petition to Congress. Having read the call, his first words were, "You are doing a good work." These stimulating words brought cheer to my heart, and I thanked the Lord for it. The German Methodist pastor expressed great pleasure at having the opportunity to endorse the call. This was not unexpected. But, approaching the new M. E. pastor was a different thing. I had a strong suspicion he was a Mason in "good and regular standing." A joyful surprise followed, such as I have not felt for a long time. "That," said he, after reading both the petition and call, "is a good thing to do," and he quickly suited the action to the word. Yet he told me he had been a Mason and knew all about the lodge, on which account, I think, his signature may be regarded all the more valuable. The enclosed paper contains the names of all ministers of the Gospel in Humboldt and immediate vicinity—an omen of good to come to the anti-secret cause here, surely it must be. Let us watch and pray for it. WM. C. BISSELL.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' REUNION.

YORK, Pa., Feb. 19, 1890.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—On the 24th of September, 1889, I bought a reunion badge, and attended a great reunion of all the soldiers and sailors of York county, Pa. The 87th, 130th and 200th regiments, with a score of sailors, and soldiers of various cavalry, infantry and artillery companies, made up the host. Major Gen. John F. Hart-rauft, Colonels John W. Schall, James A. Stable and Levi Maish, with a score or more of other officers, were the leaders. And I think a report of this interesting reunion can be made to encourage anti-secret reformers.

A grand, free supper was given in the Park Opera House to all who wore badges, but your reporter forgot part of the program and laid in one day's rations at home. I was well acquainted with many of these veterans, and had given and sold anti-secret tracts, papers, and pamphlets to at least one hundred of them. And I had frequently talked to many of them of the evils and dangers of secret societies. But they did not put me in the guard-house, and appeared to regard me as a genuine soldier and sailor, for I had served both on land and sea against Jeff's Confederacy.

One soldier came to me, pointed up with the index finger and drew his hand across his throat, asking me if I understood him. I said that as I had been studying that for twenty years, it would be queer if I did not. He smiled and marched off.

I noticed that while all the veterans, with very few exceptions, wore the reunion badge of their organization, very few had a Grand Army badge or button. Gen. Hart-rauft was dressed as a plain citizen, and only had a G. A. R. button. He addressed us for ten minutes, and was loudly applauded. He returned home to die soon after his visit here, after a brief illness. And it is well known that three commanderies of Knights Templars attended his funeral without getting a chance to show off their burial ceremonies over the grave of a genuine soldier and hero.

Col. Maish, who is also the Congressman of this district, made a very good speech, expressing his belief that our Republic will endure and prosper; and that Europe will become republican in due time. And this speech was vigorously applauded.

Captain Benjamin F. Frick conducted the musical part. We had all the songs usually heard at reunions, including "John Brown's Body" and a few comic.

In conclusion I desire to say that the soldiers and sailors of the Union, and their sons and grandsons should receive more attention from anti-secret reformers, as they are good material to work upon. And we might also issue tracts and pamphlets that will give "more light" to all intelligent Confederates and their sons and grandsons.

I call upon all readers of the Cynosure who served against the Rebellion to aid in this work immediately.

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

PITH AND POINT.

GOOD WORDS FOR THE CONFERENCE.

I am heartily in favor of the proposed Conference, and should it meet would attend if possible.—S. C. OLDS.

I cordially approve of the proposed Conference, and did health and strength permit I should be very glad to take part in it.—F. BASCOM.

I suppose our brethren of the honored names on the circular know they arouse a mighty beast when they stir up secretism.—M. M. LONGLEY.

As to the call you send, I do most heartily favor such a Conference. If our former pastor, Rev. J. T. Davis, was here, we, as a people, would most gladly send him to your Conference.—J. H. HURLEY.

I have not been able to attend any of the National Conventions against secret societies for a long time, but if this one goes on I will try to be present if possible. I hope you will have a strong program.—W. P. McNARY.

I sign the call with pleasure. I rejoice that such a movement has been started. May the Convention prove a grand success, and a means of throwing a flood of light on the heathenish workings of the secret lodge system.—JOHN P. ROBB.

Most heartily do I sign the call. There is no one evil that hinders the spiritual growth of the church equal to secret societies. I am not pastor now, but put me down as one of the oldest settlers, having come to Chicago June 19, 1834.—JOSHUA E. AMBROSE.

I thank the Lord that he has put it into the hearts of his children to take the "secret society" question into consideration. May the Lord add his blessing to the coming Conference, and may the world be filled with the spirit of Him who said, "And in secret have I said nothing."—J. KREHBIEL.

Have never belonged to a secret order—never shall. Believe they are antagonistic to Christianity and best civil government, and especially that all Christian people should stand aloof from them. There may be honest difference of opinion as to best methods of opposing them; but that connection with secret orders is incompatible with the highest Christian character, I have no doubt.—M. HARRY.

Yours concerning a notice of the Chicago Conference at hand. Certainly I endorse and will do all I can. Nothing would please me better than to be there myself. May possibly attend, but hardly expect to. I like such meetings, and will do all I can to make them a success. We must pull together all we can. If it is not too late, Rev. A. Pattison, a retired U. P. minister of this place, asked me to present his name to add to the "call."—W. L. ENLOW.

FROM NORWEGIAN THEOLOGICAL LUTHER-SEMINARY.

We do not only consider secret societies as dangerous institutions, but we also regard members of such dis-qualified for membership in our congregations. We wish that you may succeed in your labors against secret societies.

J. YLVIKAKER.
J. B. FRICH.
B. HARSTAD.

The brotherhood of Christianity is based on regeneration and love: that of the lodge on oaths, imprecations and terror. Christianity, too, abolished the Jewish distinctions against women. The lodge retains and intensifies them. It swears its members never to initiate women. Then, also, Christ's Gospel is pre-eminently for the poor. But the lodge excludes the poor. It receives its members for money and drops them when they cease to pay.

Thus the lodge is anti-Christ in its spirit, constitution, laws, principle and forms. But the crowning proof of its fearful antagonism to Christ is, that while Christ commanded Christianity to be preached "in all the world," "to every creature," the lodge swears its members to "conceal" Masonry in all the world, from every creature but themselves, on pain of death by mangling and mutilation!

LITERATURE.

The March number of the Arena will contain the first paper by the Rev. Geo. B. Cheever, D.D., the veteran Orthodox minister, on God's Voucher for the Verbal Infallibility of His Word and Man's Destiny through Eternity. Bishop Spaulding of the Catholic church and Canon W. H. Freemantle of Oxford, England, representing Protestantism, are announced to review Col. Ingersoll's paper on God in the Constitution at an early date.

In the Statesman for February W. E. Snell, of London, England, leads off with a well-written article on the latent talents of the masses. David D. Thompson, of the Western Christian Advocate, contributes an article entitled "The Eight-hour Movement," to be concluded in the March number. Alfred H. Peters gives us a glimpse of Spartan and Sybarite in the nineteenth century. The Why and Wherefore of the American Cotton Seed Oil Trust is written by Mason U. Johnson, of Indiana University. Not the least worthy article is on the organization of federal government and powers granted to Congress, by Oscar J. Craig, of Purdue University. C. Richmond makes a contribution to the literature on the Negro. He writes like a "Southerner," but withal is candid, and from his view logical. Stoughton Cooley answers Johnson Brigham and Edward Jewett Wheeler on Personal Liberty and Intemperance, and Gen. W. F. Singleton has something more to say about women.

In the Missionary Review for March Dr. Pierson gives the second paper of the series on Missions in Old Scotland, which is full of interest. He also has an article on "Enthusiasm in Missions," which will stir the blood of the reader. Rev. Lewis Grout, an old missionary of the American Board, gives a graphic sketch of the mission work among the "Boers," or Dutch farmers, in South Africa—a marvelous history. Dr. Gracey contributes a valuable paper on "The Jew in the Nineteenth Century." Dr. J. L. Leonard's article on "Moravian Missions in America" is a highly valuable contribution to the literature of this church's missionary life. The Roman Catholic Lay Congress of 1889, from the pen of Secretary Ellinwood, is worthy of careful consideration as a candid and impartial statement. The brief article on "Nicaragua as a Missionary Field" is eminently timely and suggestive. The intelligence, correspondence, reports, international papers, monthly concert matter, reports of societies, editorial notes and monthly bulletin items, cannot fail to interest, inform and inspire the friends of the missionary cause. 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year.

Scribner's Magazine has, as its leading feature for March, a purely literary paper on Charles Lamb, who always commands the sympathetic interest of people who read. It also contains a brief description of the Australian Boomerang, and a striking summary of the recent wonderful French experiments in hypnotism, by Prof. William James, of Harvard. Kirk Monroe, who spends half of every year in southern Florida, has written of "A Forgotten Remnant"—the four hundred Seminoles descended from those left in the almost inaccessible Everglades by General Harney, when in 1842 he declared the war against them ended. This remnant has absolutely no legal existence, and no help from the government, yet it has cultivated fields, raised groves of fruit-trees, accumulated live-stock, and developed its small commercial resources. The author, who knows them thoroughly, believes these to be as fine specimens of the American Indian as can be found. He makes a strong plea for the interference of the government to preserve this interesting people from the heartless rapacity of white speculators: a plea in which all good men should unite. The concluding article on Ericsson is devoted to his great inventions, which cover the entire period within which civil engineering has been recognized as a distinct profession. The "Novelty," which competed with Stephenson's "Rocket" in the great locomotive contest in 1830; the calorific engine of 1833, which puzzled scientific men; the steam fire-engine, the propeller, the "Monitor," the "Destroyer," and the solar engine, are among Ericsson's famous inventions, about which much new information is given in this article. Among the illustrations are two fac-similes of the original pencil sketches of the first idea of the "Monitor," made in 1854.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, the author, and her husband, the Rev. Mr. Ward, intended to spend the winter in Washington. On Jan. 1 they came here and took formal possession of a cottage in Georgetown, which they leased for four months and paid the rent in advance, but they have suddenly shaken the dust of the district from their feet and returned to the classic atmosphere of Boston. The agent through whom the picturesque cottage was leased received a brief note from Mr. and Mrs. Ward saying that having changed their plans and decided to return to New England they desired to sub-let the house. When the owner moved back into his house he found a note pinned to the parlor door which contained an explanation of the sudden disappearance of these famous tenants. Mrs. Ward said that the surroundings were not conducive to continuity of thought. The view from the front windows, she said, was such that the free flow of ideas was impossible, and noise of passing wagons and carriages disturbed the meditations of herself and husband, all of which has created a good deal of amusement.

IN BRIEF.

—Entertaining good thoughts will keep bad ones out.

—Out of 1,440 Kansas school-teachers assembled in convention at Topeka, 439, on a rising vote, declared prohibition in that State not a failure.

—Never make love in a cornfield. Remember that corn has ears and is easily shocked. You should make an oat of this.—Lippencott's Magazine.

—Man is by nature sympathetic, and hence does not, cannot live for himself alone. Is your life helpful or hurtful to those with whom you sympathize?

—After forming a lake covering forty acres, the great artesian well at Woonsocket, S. D., has been brought under subjection. Experts say it is the most powerful artesian well in the world.

—Dr. Atticus G. Haygood, Georgia's great educator, is going to Sheffield, Ala., to take the presidency of a college for girls. He will win friends wherever he goes—a man of large views and broad sympathies.

—A Chautauqua literary and scientific circle has been organized among the convicts in the Nebraska penitentiary. The class numbers twenty-five members. An effort should be made to start something similar in every prison.

—Berlin expects to use 80,000 tons of copper in the wire which will completely provide the town with electric lights, and the profits on all this great electric plant go to the city and reduce the poor man's taxes instead of enriching private corporations.

—There was a man over in New Jersey who took out an accident insurance policy for $5,000. One day while paring his corn he cut deeper than he intended to. Blood-poisoning set in and he died. Now his widow is suing the company for the amount of the policy on the ground that his death resulted from an accident.

—Mrs. Fawcett writes to the London Times that there are 44,000 children attending the schools of London insufficiently fed. She urges that it is no charity that is needed, but a summary dealing with the parents, since such suffering is often due to the fact of the father spending the larger portion of his wages on his own amusement.

—The youngest son of a Plainfield (Pa.) gardener was left alone for about half an hour, during which period he found his way into the cupboard and gorged himself with prunes and raisins. When discovered he was suffering greatly and became unconscious. He gradually swelled to an unusual size and died soon after taking medicine.

—The town of McConnellsville, O., recently passed a queer ordinance. It provides for building a high fence around a saloon in the town known as the "Blue Goose." The fence will be placed there so as to prohibit the entrance from any other than the front door, which faces the public square, the most prominent portion of the village.

—According to the official return of the damage caused by the recent earthquake at Kumamoto, in Southern Japan, the loss in that prefecture alone—an area roughly equal to that of a medium-sized English county—was as follows: 234 houses completely ruined; 239 partially destroyed; 19 persons killed, and 53 injured; at 893 places there were fissures in the ground; roads were destroyed in 137 places; forests injured at 17; building lots and cultivated land at 3,336 places, and embankments at 45 places; 24 bridges were entirely destroyed and 41 damaged, and the water in 138 wells became muddy and unfit for consumption.

—The statistics of France for 1888 contain some sad facts respecting family life. Compared with 1887 the decrease in marriages was 212, while there were 6,360 less than in 1886. There were 1,702 more divorces than 1887, and 1,758 more than in 1886; the total number was 4,708. The decrease in the number of births since 1887 was 16,794. Since 1884 there has been an annual decrease in births. In 1884 there were 937,758 births; in 1888, the number was 882,637. In illegitimate births there is, however, an increase. In 1881 they were 7.5 per cent; in 1888, 8.5. In the Seine department 25 per cent of the births were illegitimate. The official report states that if it were not for the illegitimate births there would actually be a decrease in the population of France.

—Now that the Christian world is depressed, if not discouraged, by the entire collapse of England's policy in the Sudan for the suppression of the slave trade, by extension of the Khedive's jurisdiction from Khartoum to the Central lakes, it is with peculiar interest and some fresh hope that we learn that the Sultan of Zanzibar has published a decree that after Nov. 1, 1889, all slaves entering his dominions shall be declared free; and that after Jan. 1, 1890, all children born of slaves in his dominion shall also be free. A single generation will thus see the end of slavery in this greatest of slave centers. The Arabs in Zanzibar do not seem to have waked up to the effect of these two edicts on the slave trade.

—The University of Toronto, a beautiful Norman pile, situated in Queen's Park, Toronto, was completely destroyed by fire February 21. The fire originated by the upsetting of an oil lamp by the engineer, but the destruction of the building was assured by the absence of fire apparatus. Firemen were soon in attendance, but they were unable to send a stream to the second story. In an hour after the fire started the $100,000 library, the museum with its costly collection, the electrical science department and the entire front of the building, including the tower, were beyond redemption. A company of the Queen's Own Rifles formed themselves into a salvage corps and saved a great deal of property out of the scientific department and the museum. The loss is estimated at $500,000, insurance $175,000. The construction of a new building is to be begun almost immediately.

Avoid Appearances.—A worthy gentleman, having an unusually red nose, was long suspected of being a tippler on the sly, by those not well acquainted with his strictly temperate habits. His unfortunate disfigurement was readily cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago April 22 and 23, 1890.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Now that it has been determined that the quadri-centennial of the discovery of America is to be held in Chicago, it is well that we make haste to improve the great occasion for a moral as well as a material development of our nation and of the world. There might, and ought to be, in connection with this great assemblage, a Congress of all Nations for the discussion and practical settlement of many questions which concern universal humanity. Among these are:

1. An International Tribunal for the adjustment of all controversies; or, if this were not practicable, a plan for arbitration by treaty stipulation. No nation is better prepared than ours for the inauguration of such a plan for universal pacification. Joseph Cook ably urged this suggestion in his Monday lecture of last week. The Columbus centennial, he says, should be an occasion for a conference of the friends of all great moral enterprises, temperance, peace, social reform, etc. A peace congress should be held to promote an international commission, such commission to be only advisory, but to have such moral power as to practically coerce combative nations. "The United States," says Mr. Cook, "is in the best position to call such a convention; if Germany should call it France would not come; if England should call it she might be regarded as fearing a stab in the back from Ireland; but we are not afraid of our enemies in America, and we above all other nations are prepared to propose such an arbitration commission."

2. There ought to be international action on illegitimate commerce, including the liquor and opium traffic. The immense quantities of intoxicating liquors which the Christian nations are sending to Africa, as well as the opium traffic which Great Britain forced upon China, are among the dreadful crimes against humanity which call for world-wide repentance. An ample discussion of this topic by the representatives of Christian nations could scarcely fail to arrest the attention of mankind and to diminish, if it did not destroy, so infamous a business. Akin to this is the question of slavery and the slave-trade, now happily confined to barbarous nations, but still a source of most terrible wickedness. This could doubtless be considered to manifest advantage.

3. The labor question. This has become world-wide, and is one of vast difficulty, but of great and pressing importance. The only plan of adjustment of the interests of capital and labor that has ever approximated success, has been that of an equitable division of profits and losses between employers and employees. This, if duly considered and urged, would doubtless secure a much larger adoption.

The N. C. A. ought especially to improve the occasion by bringing before the visitors from all nations the evil nature and pernicious tendency of the secret lodge system. Especially we ought to appeal to those men and women who, above all things, desire to honor their Divine Saviour. We are quite well equipped with anti-secrecy literature, and have facilities for ample enlargement. The conference in Tremont Temple, Boston, happily suggested the line of great effort which should be made for our cause in its resolution, which says:

"We recommend to the Association that every effort be made at the proposed World's Fair of 1892 to reach the multitudes which will be gathered from every land under the sun. And if this Universal Exhibition shall be held in Chicago, the headquarters of our reform, as we hope it may be, we recommend that an International Conference be held during its progress that shall adequately represent the reform against the secret lodges, and which shall enlighten the world by the vigor and power of its discussions."

This proposition should be thoroughly considered and immediate action taken. We suggest that time be given in the Conference meeting in this city April 22 to consider ways and means for an international convention, so that the National Board may have the early benefit of the best advice to be given.

Such a convention is needed to present adequately the progress of the kingdom of Christ during the four hundred years past. In 1492 Christendom, if it might be so called, was in the darkness that precedes the dawn. It was just in the end of the Dark Ages. For a thousand years priestcraft had ruled in church and state. It has been popular with some liberalizers to say that the church ruled. It is a mistake that in some writers is stupid, in others infamous, in none pardonable. The real church was burned in John Huss and Jerome and Savonarola, and massacred in the pious dwellers of the Waldensian valleys; and there were pious men in all these ages like Bernard of Clairvaux, but Priestcraft ruled. Now it will be a notable feature of our 1892 Fair to show the progress in the arts and in science; to give ocular demonstration how experiment has become fact, and conjecture certitude. In like manner we must show the condition of the religious world four hundred years ago, as drawn for us by such historians as Hallam, Mosheim, Guizot, the eloquent D'Aubigne. The reasons for this moral condition must be made forcibly apparent to all men, so that they may see that in all this struggle who shall be worshiped has been the question of all history: whether the devil who receives the homage in all false rites, or Christ in all true. We cannot depend on ordinary means to present this important matter. The Jesuit is ubiquitous. Some representative of papal hierarchy is found on the program of every popular movement, and his brother of the secret lodge is by his side. It should be the great work of such an international conference to place this stupendous question adequately before the churches of America and of the world.

CHRIST THE REFORM CENTER.

"The daily press is always against us" is the common remark which every apostle of reform hears from its friends in every section of the country. Sam Jones is extensively reported in the New Orleans daily papers until he attacks the nation's robber, alias, the Louisiana Lottery. That is the signal for silence. When a State gives a majority only a trifle under the necessary two-thirds for Constitutional prohibition, it is in spite of the fact that nine-tenths of the daily papers are on the rum side, fighting its battles as paid attorneys. If prohibition had had a fair hearing in such cases, even in one-third of the papers, it would not have lacked its necessary two-thirds.

The dailies that favor one reform, often fight others equally vital. The leading editorial ends with the chorus, "Pulverize the Saloon," while the chief advertising column cries, "Patronize the Lottery," and the news column overflows with laudatory reports of some lodge parade or dance.

Even the religious weeklies, with noble exceptions, do not keep step, much less lead, the march of reforms, partly because they depend on a prejudiced daily press for their information, but more because they "fear the Jews." New York and Washington are alive with reforms, but a bank robbery in the former and a Congressional free fight in the latter crowd out all the good news. The "Associated Press" has vulture eyes for evil tidings, and nearly all other press syndicates care more for tinsel gossip than for the gold of truth.

The news and the truths of reform ought not to travel in slow coaches, while scandal and gossip fly by fast mail, was the thought which led to the founding of the new "Associated Press of Reforms" at 74 E. 90th street, New York. It consists of twenty-three specialists, who send to a limited list of periodicals fortnightly, on a large sheet, not public opinion, but expert opinion on current reforms. What Our Day is among the monthlies, this "Associated Press of Reforms" is among the syndicates of press contributions. Its value and possibilities were shown in its very first month, in two notable instances. To help the New York Assembly to pass a ballot reform bill, a special on this subject was sent to papers all over the State. As soon as the recent news came that North Dakota had fallen among thieves, an article by Anthony Comstock, exposing the Louisiana Lottery, was at once mailed to every editor in that State. This lottery reform just now is hardly less important than temperance, hardly less promising than ballot reform; but unlike the latter it has few friends among the daily papers, and unlike the former it has no special organs. A lottery that has twenty-eight millions of annual profit at stake will not be crushed by newspapers and legislatures, unless the facts and arguments against it can be scattered by some agency independent of both. Leaders of reform everywhere would reinforce themselves by getting their local periodicals to use the contributions furnished at small cost by the syndicate, even paying for it and for space to publish, if necessary, or in default of that, buying the plates and using the matter themselves.

The following are the members of this "Reform Syndicate": Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Sabbath Reform; Anthony Comstock, Suppression of Vice and Fraud; W. M. F. Round, Prison Reform; Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Indian Rights; Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., and Rev. Frank Russell, D.D., The Church United in Reforms; Hon. Wm. M. Ivins, Ballot Reform; Prof. H. H. Boyesen, Immigration Reform; Mrs. Helen Campbell, Woman's Wages; Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell, Charity Reform; Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., Labor Reform; E. J. Wheeler, Temperance; L. Edwin Dudley, Law Enforcement; Rev. B. F. DeCosta, D.D., White Cross Movement; Rev. S. W. Dike, Marriage and Divorce; Edward Everett Hale, Lend a Hand Clubs; Aaron M. Powell, Prevention of the State Regulation of Vice; Col. F. W. Parker, Educational Reform; C. F. Wingate, Sanitary Reform; Rev. R. B. Howard, Peace and International Reform; Joseph Cook, Preludes on Reform; Miss Frances E. Willard, W. C. T. U., Sisterhood of Reforms. The latest facts bearing on each of these topics, stated accurately and concisely, will be furnished by these specialists regularly to those periodicals which subscribe. We note with regret that the reform fundamental to all the rest, the one which declares for the purity of religious worship, which is assailed by the devil through the machinery of the secret lodge, is omitted from this list. We are in correspondence with the managers of this great movement to secure a place for the cause represented by the Cynosure and the National Christian Association.

There is a fraternity of vices to fight, and there should be a fraternity among the reformers who fight them from different standpoints. The branches of evil that hang over the wall seem to be separate, but followed up it is found that they run into the same trunk and are fed from the same roots. Prof. Ely starts out to study the labor problem, and is led to writing about intemperance. Miss Willard starts out with temperance, and is led into deep sympathy with the labor movement: and each of them find their path crossed by the lodge before proceeding very far; only they fear to publicly own the fact.

Each member of the Reform Syndicate is responsible only for what he signs, and there are differences of opinion among the members on lesser matters, but they are all agreed upon the principle so admirably stated by Hon. Carroll D.

Wright, of the National Bureau of Labor, in the following passage, which should be the watchword of all social reforms: "I believe that in the adoption of the philosophy of the religion of Jesus Christ as a practical creed for the conduct of business lies the surest and speediest solution of those industrial difficulties which are exciting the minds of men to-day, and leading many to think that the crisis of government is at hand." With this should be associated the recent utterance of Gladstone: "Talk about questions of the day, there is but one such question, and that is the Gospel. It can and will correct everything that needs correction. All men at the head of great movements are Christian men. During the many years I was in the Cabinet I was brought into association with sixty master minds, and all but five of them were Christians. My only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with divine revelation."

These sayings recall the fact that when men came to Jesus with hard questions about divorce and government and law, he uncovered the fundamental question, whose answer is the solution of all others, "What think ye of Christ?"

TACTICS CHANGING.

A trial pending in New Haven, Connecticut, is giving the lodge some annoyance. Elisha M. Trowbridge, who has certificates of his standing as a Freemason, has prepared an exposition of the ritual as far as the Royal Arch degree. He put it in the hand of a printer, who now brings suit to collect $166, which, it is alleged, was to be paid in advance so soon as the proof sheets were ready. The daily press has the sheets, and copies freely from the oaths, etc. It is the same wearisome formula which we are familiar with in the expositions for sale at this office. The New Haven papers say there can be little doubt of the truthfulness of the work; but a few Masons deny, as might be expected, and as they have sworn to do.

But a reporter of the News of this city took the case to Norman T. Gassette, a Chicago Mason of large exploits, for his explanation. The simple-hearted news-gatherer asked with bland innocence if Mr. Gassette would verify the oath to be correct. The reply was a hollow laugh and the remark that this was one of the periodical outbursts of sensationalists, or of men who thought they were striking a heavy blow at Masonry. "Masonry," he continued, "is a body with secrets, but there are no secrets which the public might not just as well know as not know." The Masons were the best men in the community. They pay no attention to these exposures; and this new attempt would make no difference with them.

This evasion of the reporter's question has some significance. It shows, so far as this man can speak as a representative of the lodge, that the "mystic tie" of the lodge has no more any mystery. Masons can no longer boast of their profound secrets which are beyond revelation. But the lodge must go on. Its Grand Master must have his worship, and, secrets or no secrets, the spell of lodge incantation cannot easily be shaken off. Most Masons have something to made by the lodge; when they no longer have this inducement, many leave it; and the country to-day is full of practically seceded Masons. The terrorizing and policy of threats is changing. Simple selfishness and the subtle influence of a false worship is not so easily destroyed, and they will remain to the end the pillars of the lodge.

—Bro. Hinman has made engagements for several future addresses on the lodge, in the midst of his preaching among the Kentucky churches.

—Mark the list of donations on the 13th page week by week. In this number is the beginning of a fund for the Chicago Conference which we hope to see doubled by next week. The N. C. A. has seldom presented a special object which should be more popular.

—The Christian Conservator has reached a circulation of over 5,000, and is a pillar of strength to United Brethren in Christ who walk in the old paths of separation from "the world, the flesh and the devil," and especially the lodge. The courts are turning back some of the arrogance and violent dealing of past years upon the pates of the very authors of it.

—Rev. S. H. Adams, D.D., acting pastor of the Collegè Church, Wheaton, was prostrated with the influenza epidemic several weeks ago and has gone with Mrs. Adams to the sanitarium at Clifton Springs, N. Y., to recuperate. He hopes to resume his agreeable labors in Wheaton very soon.

—At the last moment we decided to postpone the re-publication of the West Virginia Royal Arch homicide until next week. It would require more space than could be spared from the present issue. It is in hand for next week. All who wish that number for a document against the lodge must add their orders soon to the list already waiting.

—After five weeks' stay in this city at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. A. Cook, Pres. J. Blanchard returned to Wheaton last Thursday. For a part of this time he has been confined to his room, but his health, though precarious, has been steadily improving. He hopes for his usual strength by April 22, when the Chicago Conference meets.

—Prof. Burt G. Wilder of Cornell University lectured in this city Friday evening on evolution. Prof. Wilder's great letter on secret societies, drawn out by the murder of young Mortimer M. Leggett by the college secret societies of Cornell, and published in the New York Tribune of Oct. 22, 1873, will long be remembered as one of the most powerful indictments of the lodge.

—The Christian Instructor publishes the call for the Chicago Conference and kindly endorses the effort thus: "We simply take this occasion to express the earnest hope that our United Presbyterian brethren will embrace this opportunity to manifest a renewed interest in our principle of opposition to secret associations. Our church needs to have stirred up a spirit of zeal upon the question that will correspond to the aggressiveness of the lodge of to-day on the one hand, and the solemnity of our obligation to be faithful on the other. The increase of opposition by the world to an important principle in the profession of the church, instead of producing a spirit of indifference on her part, should arouse to greater energy in contending for the faith of her profession." It is a pleasure to note that the United Presbyterians of the interior are taking a warm interest in this meeting.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Prohibition notes—A weak-kneed Y. M. C. A.—The demoralizing influence of the lodge in the W. C. T. U.—A tragedy for an African Shakespeare—Our country towns.

Our New Hampshire Governor Goodell's proclamation has borne fruit in a raid on the Manchester saloons, the raid being made at the instance of the Citizens' League, and the formal command of the county authorities. Forty-five saloons were visited in one day by the sheriff, but the proprietors—so the newspapers state—had evidently received timely warning as very little liquor was found. But who gave that warning? Anyone versed in the peculiarities of the Masonic covenant will not have much difficulty in answering. Just so long as the Prohibition party allows itself to be bound by secret links to saloonists they will find their plans betrayed to the enemy.

Senator Dawes has presented over 240 petitions from Massachusetts praying Congress to stop the exportation of intoxicating liquors to Africa. The memorial states that it is demoralizing the African people, and is detrimental to all legitimate commerce with that newly-opened continent—truths which our national legislature ought to know without being told. Now it remains to be seen what Congress will do with these 240 or more petitions, but the likelihood is that they will be referred to a "committee," with the tacit understanding that this shall be the last of them so far as any legislative action is concerned. But it is encouraging to know that so many of the Christian people of Massachusetts have been roused to protest against this shameful traffic.

The Connecticut Home "wants the Christian church, Protestant and Catholic, to be a unit in aggressive temperance work," and adds firmly that "the drink habit is by far the greatest hindrance known to evangelical labor." But how a church which makes neither rum-drinking nor rum-selling a bar to her communion, and whose priests are in a large majority of cases themselves winebibbers, can "make a unit" with Protestant Christians who believe in nothing short of absolute prohibition is certainly a problem. To think such a thing possible is on the same line with that other fatal error which leads Prohibitionists to court the lodge.

The Y. M. C. A. of Lewiston, Me., have put themselves in a very unenviable light as regards this Romish question. After a meeting in that city conducted by the venerable Father Chiniquy, twelve Roman Catholic boys applied for instruction, and the use of the Y. M. C. A. spare room was requested for this purpose. The request was granted by the Secretary, but, incredible as it may seem, refused by the committee! "Most Y. M. C. As.," adds the correspondent, who furnishes this item to the American, "are utterly ignorant or lamentable weak-kneed on the Romish question." I fear that on other points of moral reform they are liable to the same criticism. Frank Jones, the great New Hampshire brewer, who of course is a Mason and belongs to an unknown number of other secret orders, has probably done more to defeat prohibition in New England than any other man in the United States. But what can be thought when the delegates at a Y. M. C. A. convention go to his house to be entertained and accept his money to help carry on their philanthropic and religious work? No wonder they are weak-kneed!

But has the prevalence of the lodge miasma anything to do with this pitiable lack of backbone? One of the leading W. C. T. U. women of Massachusetts tells me that she was informed by an eyewitness, herself a white ribboner, that when the Knight Templars had their recent banquet in Washington, there were present W. C. T. U. women well-known in white ribbon circles who turned up their winecups and drank with others. The W. C. T. U. were once a noble band of thoroughly consecrated women, and to a large extent they are so still; but facts like the above make one thoughtful. Why is the fine gold dimmed? The atmosphere of secrecy is demoralizing always and everywhere. This is an unpleasant subject, and I will dismiss it with only one more comment. When any society or organization, whether its object be reformatory or religious, gets to be very large, influential and popular, it needs a vast amount of praying for; but unfortunately it is generally in their day of small things, when they don't need it half so much, that such bodies get most earnestly prayed for.

It is said that while Vermont is trying to attract new-comers to her deserted farms, Kansas can no longer rely on the fame of her attractions, but is obliged to send out circulars to New England setting forth her agricultural advantages, in order to prevent a decided reduction in the flow of emigration to her borders. Yankee "faculty," economy and thrift are all that are needed to make these waste places of New England blossom as the rose. The measure now before the Massachusetts Legislature, to start by legislative aid a public library in every town that does not already possess one, will, if carried, do much to give character to our country towns, and check their intellectual and moral decadence. Next to a church and a school house as a conserving and stimulating force stands the public library; and it is at our peril that we allow all intellectual interests to die down in the country districts, leaving the inhabitants to lives of mere animal drudgery, for if we make such a mistake we need not expect to raise any great men.

Perhaps I cannot end this letter more appropriately than with a quotation from "Recollections of a New England Girlhood," by Miss Loomis, herself one of the finest examples of New England country-bred genius, even in that splendid galaxy of literary talent which has become the heritage of the whole English-speaking world: "Our life—which is the very best thing we have—is ours only that we may share it with our Father's family, at their need. If we have within us worth giving away, to withhold it is ungenerous; and we cannot look honestly into ourselves without acknowledging our debt to those around us for whatever of power or beauty has been poured into ours." If each of us could take the lesson home, and wherever our lot may be placed, strive perpetually for the spiritual and mental uplifting of the community around us, only Heaven could measure the result. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

PEACE IN CHRIST.

[The following beautiful and affecting lines were found among Dr. Bonar's papers, after his death. It is believed they were the last he ever wrote:]

Long days and nights upon this restless bed,
Of daily, nightly weariness and pain!
Yet thou art here, my ever gracious Lord,
Thy well-known voice speaks not to me in vain:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

The darkness seemeth long, and even the light
No respite brings with it; no soothing rest
For this worn frame; yet in the midst of all Thy love revives. Father, thy will is best:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Sleep cometh not, when most I seem to need
Its kindly balm. O Father, be to me
Better than sleep; and let these sleepless hours
Be hours of blessed fellowship with Thee:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Not always seem the wisdom and the love:
And sometimes hard to be believed, when pain
Wrestles with faith, and almost overcomes.
Yet even in conflict thy sure words sustain:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the flesh is weak; fain would I rise Above its weakness into things unseen.
Lift thou me up; give me the open ear
To hear the voice that speaketh from within:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

Father, the hour is come; the hour when I Shall with these fading eyes behold Thy face;
And drink in all the fullness of Thy love;
Till then, oh speak to me Thy words of grace:
"In Me ye shall have peace!"

AUNT MOLL'S MAGNIFICAT.

She sat alone in her room—an old, wrinkled, white-haired woman. It was a little room, plain but comfortable in its furnishings, and neat and orderly to the last degree; for that single room in the great tenement-house was all she could call home, and to keep it in careful order was the only work left her to do.

As she sat there with folded hands in the early twilight, and thought of her life, it seemed like a pyramid, broad at its base but ever growing narrower until now it had contracted to the scantiest dimensions. She remembered the time when she was a happy wife with two boys and two girls to call her mother. That was half a century ago; and her home then was a quaint, red cottage in a quiet New England village. But a terrible epidemic had overclouded the community, and when it was lifted she was a widow, with only little Nellie left of the flock. Life never was the same again. But Nellie thrived, and work was abundant; and she felt that she was not living in vain. Then Nellie became a young lady and married and went to the city to live. For a while she kept the country home; but Nellie urged, and the claims of a little grandchild were added to the plea, so she sold her house and took up her abode with her daughter.

That was twenty years ago, yet it seemed but yesterday; and the vision of the village and the old red house was wonderfully distinct to-night. She never had gone back again, much as she would have liked to go; for the convenient time did not come until it was too late. At first life went very pleasantly in the new home, and her usefulness seemed to be doubled. But the little grandchild, who was never very strong, sickened and died; and then Nellie herself sank away, and she was left alone with her son-in-law. By and by even he left her. A change in business compelled him to be out of the city most of the time; so the home was broken up, and he hired for her the room in which she now lived. She had nothing to complain of; he always came to see her when in the city, and he provided for all her wants. But her life was lonely beyond expression. All whom she had loved and for whom she had labored were gone, and she was too old to form new friendships.

What had it all amounted to? That was the thought which was running in her mind to-night, and made her feel dispirited. She had done what she could; but was it not all a failure? She had tried to aid others in her feeble way. The children especially had ever been fond of her. When Nellie was little they used to come swarming to her house; and it was they who gave her the name of "Aunt,"—"Aunt Moll,"—a name which everybody had adopted, and which was dear to her now because it reminded her of the past. But that was long ago. Those children were men, and had forgotten all about her. They could not know her, nor she them, if they should meet. No; the work of her life had disappeared and left no trace. It might be laid up in heaven, though it seemed too scanty to support such a hope; but on earth it had passed away.

The sound of the church bell roused her from this sad meditation. Here it was Wednesday night, and she had almost forgotten the prayer-meeting! What would the pastor say if she were not there! He told her once—and the recollection of this made her face light up—that he always relied on her presence, whoever else might stay away. She must not fail him now; she could fill a corner if nothing more.

There was a stranger sitting on the platform, a middle-aged man with bronzed face and flowing beard. The pastor introduced him as his former classmate in college and seminary, and now a famous missionary in India.

"I wish you to listen to him with special attention for my sake," said he. "But for him I should not now be your pastor, for it was his influence in college which won me to Christ, and his example and counsel which made me enter the ministry."

Aunt Moll turned her dim eyes eagerly to the stranger; for she loved her pastor, and felt drawn toward any one who had thus aided him.

The missionary rose to address them, and said: "The kind words of your pastor are far more than I deserve. The glory of whatever the Lord did for him through me belongs all to my Master, for from him was all the grace. As he was speaking of his conversion, I thought of my own. I owe it under God to a saintly woman whom I knew when I was a boy. She lived in a little cottage close by my father's house, she and her daughter alone. She was poor, and had to practice the closest economy. She was neither very beautiful nor very learned, but she was wise in heavenly wisdom, for she had been a pupil in the great school of sorrow, and she was so full of heavenly grace that I thought her face the sweetest I ever saw. We children all loved her, and she was 'Aunt Moll' to the whole neighborhood. We went to her for sympathy and counsel and love, and we never failed to receive it. And her words and life made religion so simple and pleasant to us that we learned to love her Saviour through her. The lessons which she poured into my heart were never forgotten, and they shaped my whole life. I suppose she never knew it, for she moved away from our town before I confessed Christ, and I never saw her again. But if she is in heaven to-night, she knows it all. And I speak of her because my thoughts have been peculiarly drawn to her, and because I wish you to realize that your own lives may be as full of unconscious good as hers. Doubtless, one of the things which will be a sad revelation to us, when we look back from the other world, is the evil which we have carelessly or ignorantly done here; but, on the other hand, one of the joys of heaven may be the good which we have done almost unconsciously. The bitterness of the cry, 'Lord, when saw we thee . . . and did not minister unto thee?' is offset by the joy of the opposite cry, 'When saw we thee . . . and came unto thee?'"

Then he passed on to speak of other things, of his work in India and its urgent needs. But Aunt Moll was hardly conscious of what he said. Her heart beat so rapidly that she could not hear him. Was this really one of her boys? And had he been speaking thus of her? It seemed impossible, and yet it could not but be true. But if true, how wonderful! how glorious! And her eyes overflowed with tears of mingled joy and shame—joy that her life had borne such rich fruits, shame that she had so recently been despising it.

Need I tell you of the scene which followed after the meeting—the words of recognition and astonishment and greeting, and how the missionary walked home with her, and stayed to talk over all the old times and old friends, and how, before he said good-by, they had a prayer of thanksgiving together? No, you can imagine it all without my telling.

But when he was gone, Aunt Moll, too happy to rest as yet, was left to think it all over once more, and she opened the old Bible and turned to the Magnificat of Mary, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. For he hath regarded the low estate of his hand-maiden; for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For he that is mighty hath done to me great things, and holy is his name." And as she read, each word seemed the utterance of her own heart.—Golden Rule.

"Supposing him to have been in the company, they went a day's journey" without him. Luke 2: 44. How many companies have done and are doing the same thing! How easy it is to take it for granted that Jesus is with us in our journey, and never miss him until the day is spent! And then we find that the day has been lost. Nay, more! It was not until "three days" of diligent search that he was found again. And all because of a supposition instead of a care that we realize his presence, and watch his movements and his guiding eye, move when he moves, turn when he turns, and stop when he stops. If our hearts are really occupied with him, and his will, and his work, instead of our own plans, we shall readily discern his real presence, and be saved from such loss of time and toil.—Friends' Expositor.

THE COUNTRY GIRL.

The most blessed being in the world, if she will but grasp her opportunities. She is the heiress of all pleasantness in nature, all beauty in the world about her, all enjoyment to be gained by doing good to surrounding friends and every-day associates. She is untrammelled by the stern, useless rules and customs of society, and free to act as her womanly instincts may lead her. Oh, it is grand to be a country girl! It is noble to accept her privileges, and use them for her own and others' advancement; and nobler yet to be content with her life, and feel determined to make the most of it, let what reverses will come, whatever disappointments will break into a happy existence.

There is something radically wrong about the farmer's home when the daughter says she will not marry a farmer. Has her natural taste for beautifying everything about her been crushed? Have you let her cultivate that bed of flowers she wanted? Have you aided her in making knick-knacks to hang here and there in the house? Have you allowed the pleasures of the picnic or ride with those of her own age? Have you allowed her means to cultivate her natural taste for music? Have you gratified her inborn taste for good reading by a supply of first-class books and papers? If you have not, I do not wonder she is despondent, and sees only the dark side of farm life—the side of drudgery, interminable toil and unremitted hardship. If you have gratified all her little fancies, all her æsthetic tastes, her voice will make perpetual music and her face spread unlimited sunshine in your home.

Country girls get an idea that city life must be pleasant. They see the brilliant costumes glistening under the glare of the lights; they see the pleasant faces, the bright eyes, the engaging smiles; and it is not wonderful that they long for the same privileges. They see the faces of handsome men glow with admiration as they whisper some compliment to a beauty. Is it wonderful that she wants just such compliments? Ah, could she but look into the houses on the next day, see the dull eyes in aching heads, the pale features, the languid manner, the cross, snarling voice, she would not exchange her light, buoyant step in the summer morning for all the glitter and show of a city belle.

Again, our country girls are the ones who are to be the mothers of the men who are to mold the destinies of the world in the future. Their sons, their daughters are going out into the world endowed with dispositions to dare and do, with pluck and ability to undertake and conquer. Can one wish a more glorious destiny? Can one hope for more fame, more influence in this world and the next?

Oh, country maiden, if you are sighing for the fascinations of the city, look about you, and see if the country has not a few attractions! You can find them if you will.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

There are 4,000 saloons in the city of Chicago; $70,000,000 are annually spent for strong drink. Her liquor bill for one year would pay her water bill forty-five years and then leave $1,500,000 to build the temperance temple.—Herrick Johnson.

GIRLS WHO ARE IN DEMAND.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.
The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folks,
Ready and anxious to please.
The girls that are wanted are wise girls,
That know what to do or say,
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare what is silly to leave.
The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives,
Wanted to cradle in loving arms
The strongest and frailest lives.
The clever, the witty, the brilliant girls,
There are few who can understand;
But O! for the wise, loving, home girl,
There's a constant, steady demand.

HOW GIRLS MAY BE CHARMING.

Every young girl can not be beautiful, for to every one God has not given a comely face nor a graceful figure. But every one can be attractive. Indeed, health and cleanliness go far to giving those bright eyes, blooming cheeks and fair skins which conduce to good looks, though some have plain and irregular features, and can easily see, by the testimony of the truth-telling mirror, that they are not remarkable for external graces. Let them comfort themselves by the thought that they may make very beautiful old ladies if they cultivate sweetness of disposition and contentedness of mind, and trust in God's goodness and love. How can the plain be charming? Well, true self-forgetfulness and kind thoughtfulness for others are always winning. The vain, selfish beauty can not compete with the homely maiden who is popular because she is so very lovable. Her father confides in her; her mother leans upon her; her friends go to her for help and advice. The little girls bring their broken toys, and the boys come for aid when the lessons are hard. By and by a marvelous thing happens. She is spoken of everywhere as "the interesting Miss Parker," or "the agreeable Miss Dornell," or "the captivating Miss Mark." She has grown interesting, agreeable and captivating; and each quality is far more valuable to a woman than the possession of mere beauty without other winning personal characteristics.—Christian Journal.

AN OLD-FASHIONED GIRL.

"I've been watching an 'old-fashioned girl' for quite a long while," says a writer in the Fitchburg Sentinel, "and I want to tell you something about her.

"Her dresses, etc., were made in modern style; but bless you, she is so old-fashioned that she arose in the morning when her mother did, and helped set the table neatly, and cooked one or two dishes daintily her ownself.

"She had 'graduated,' yet she did not think because of that fact that the kitchen was not good enough for her. Oh, no. She was so much behind the times that she actually washed the dishes, made her bed, dusted and then began preparation for the pudding for dinner. Now, wasn't she absurd, when she (following the accustomed rule) should have been lying on the sofa, with the latest novel in her hand, and her pug dog beside her? When her little brother come in crying because his kite was broken, instead of calling him a 'horrid boy,' as it is the 'fashion' to do in some houses, she helped with her own hands to mend it. How could she be in such a small business?

"After dinner had been cleared away, she produced a small work-basket, and proceeded to mend the family stockings. Shocking! After her task was completed, she accompanied her mother on a shopping expedition; and, although she met many fine looking gentlemen, she did not flirt with any of them, for, don't you know, she was so antiquated she would have been shocked at the idea. As if it was not elevating to the intellect to be on the watch for some masculine person to fascinate!

"The girl of whom I am telling you was pretty looking, with a bright, fresh color in her face, brought on by plenty of exercise in the open air and in the kitchen. But I cannot begin to tell you half this queer girl did; for, you know, she was so old-fashioned that she did whatever good deed came into her heart to do, and her heart was such an antique affair, that only pure, noble thoughts entered it. Her home was made bright and sunny by her presence, and yet she was not so perfect that she 'died young.' Oh, no. She lives to-day, a girl who has 'no secrets' from her mother."

"Start the day thinking like this: There will be nothing to-day but He will help me. There will be nowhere to-day but He will be with me. No temptation but He can deliver me. No burden but I cast it on Him. He looks out over the day for us. There is a worry waiting—He sees it and here is the patience. There is a temptation—yes, He knows that—and here is wisdom and strength. There is a bit of trial, and here He is waiting to give thee a bit of courage and faith. And don't let that be all. Ah, He will make thee glad with His favor, and send thee forth all cheerful to thy work"—Daniel Quorm.

TEMPERANCE.

HOW THE FLORIDA INDIANS DRINK.

The article by Kirk Munroe in Scribner's Magazine for March, on the remnant of the Seminoles of Florida, has the following account of their drinking habits. These poor, half-civilized beings teach their proud white brethren a significant lesson. The savage idea of the white man's celebration of the birth of his Redeemer is yet more significant, not only of the white man's depravity, but also of one serious occasion of it—the practicing of falsehood in religion. The article says: They will drink whisky (and what Indian will not?); but even in this they observe a method and a degree of decency that white toppers would do well to imitate. When a band or family decide to get drunk, they send to the nearest market for one or more gallons of liquor. In spite of the law forbidding the sale of intoxicants to Indians, they have no difficulty in finding white agents willing to procure the stuff for them.

It is indeed stuff, and that of the vilest character, though for it the Indians are made to pay at least double the price of the best quality; but what frontier trader regards it as anything but meritorious to cheat a redskin?

With the liquor in their possession the Indians retire to some remote spot where their orgies will not be witnessed by any save themselves, and deliberately prepare for their spree. They first set aside a share of the "fire water" for the squaws, who will not touch a drop of it until their lords have finished their debauch. All guns, knives, and other weapons are then placed in charge of the squaws, or, if there are no women in the party, they are delivered to one of the men, for whom a certain amount of the liquor is reserved. While the rest are drunk this guardian of the peace must remain sober, and keenly watchful of the actions of his companions. Should he prove unfaithful to his trust he will be exiled from the tribe, and no Indian will hold communication with him for the term of months or years during which his exile is enforced. While the debauch of his companions lasts he is absolute master of the situation, and is at liberty to use any amount of force, even to the taking of life, to repel an attempt to regain possession of the weapons. If these are left with the squaws, the same rule holds good for them.

The preparations being thus completed, the Indians, using one small tin cup, which is impartially handed from one to another, proceed to get solemnly, funnily, furiously, and stupidly drunk. The next day it is the turn of the squaws, or of the man who has stood guard, and they, too, taste the joys and sorrows of complete intoxication.

Fortunately for them, as well as for their neighbors, such orgies are of rare occurrence among the Indians. They generally take place at the time of the Green Corn Dance, their great annual festival, which is held late in June or early in July. At this time the Seminoles indulge in games, dances, feasting, purification by means of vapor baths, and, above all, in drunkenness. An Indian once described the festival to me as: "Plenty dance, plenty eat, plenty whisky, plenty drunk, all same white man's Kismas."

THE RUM TRADE IN AFRICA.

The Saturday Review is not usually given to viewing moral reforms in a very genial spirit; all the more welcome, then, are its occasional utterances in condemnation of crying iniquities. Speaking of the Brussels Anti-Slavery Conference, it asks: Will it be instructed to put down a European traffic as murderous as the slave-trade itself? Or is it that, while the conscience of all Europe has been shocked at last by slave-trade cruelties committed by gangs of heartless Arabs, it is not yet touched by the devastation deliberately perpetrated by Christian dealers in counterfeit strong waters? On this suggestion a Scottish contemporary remarks: The liquor trade in many parts of Africa is the chief trade. It is dishonest to the root. It pretends to be a trade in cordials; but nine-tenths of it is, to the knowledge of those who flourish on it, the sale and distribution of poisons. On the Cape coast "superior gin" is sold at five cents per pint bottle, while "splendid rum" is invoiced at eighteen cents a gallon! Two hundred miles of the West coast of Africa consume 20,000 tons of spirits a year, say, twenty ships of a thousand tons each; and the whole of this traffic is conducted in the main by not over half a dozen firms, the members of which profess themselves Christians! On the Kree coast, says Mr. Joseph Thompson, may be seen a Hades, peopled by brutalized human beings, whose punishment seems to be a never-ending thirst for drink. From the moment the traveler leaves Liverpool, according to the same authority, he finds himself in an atmosphere of poisonous spirits. "It pervades every corner of the vessel in which he takes passage. He sees the gin and rum disgorged from its capacious holds at port after port, and he will almost look in vain for a bale of Manchester cotton." A certain Glasgow firm used to employ a large number of looms weaving cloth for the African market; now it has not one. A trader on the Calabar river wrote recently to his principals to send no more cloth—drink was the only article in demand. In the Niger regions the natives traffic almost for drink alone, and in one Portuguese opium factory on the Zambesi the work-people are paid in spirits. Even from the merely commercial point of view it is imperative that this murderous drink traffic should be extinguished. It is draining Africa of all industrial energy and poisoning entire populations.

PROHIBITION IN ALASKA.

A recent Washington telegram says that hereafter no permits will be issued by the War Department for the introduction of liquors into Alaska for use for medical, mechanical, or scientific purposes. It is added that "sacramental wine is accepted." We venture to suggest to the War Department that there is no need of making an exception in favor of alcoholic sacramental wine; Alaska will be better off without it, and Christ more truly honored by the use of the pure, unfermented juice of the grape. We agree with the Advocate that intoxicating wine is a dangerous article to be used in the celebration of the Lord's Supper. The repeated instances of those who had reformed and abstained from alcoholic drinks, and who relapsed after tasting wine at the Lord's table, are too well known to need repetition. Protestant churches are in great and increasing numbers adopting the same views of the truth, and using only unfermented wine. It is now furnished by dealers and can be readily obtained. But not of those who make and sell alcoholic drinks.—The Christian Woman.

The widow of Chief of Police Watkins of Parsons, Pa., killed, while intoxicated, by a passing engine, was recently awarded $2,500 damages, which the saloon-keeper, who sold him the liquor, must pay.

can help make whisky without excusing, if not defending it. The business, too, is unfavorable to health, and adds nothing to the permanent wealth of the people. It is understood here that church members must not drink. Some of them vote the Prohibition ticket, but their business and voting are not in harmony.

Here is an admirable place for fruit-raising, especially peaches. Could not some colored man who has a little capital come here and lease the grounds of the institution for a term of years and raise peaches and berries for the Cincinnati market? This would give employment to both parents and children. The soil is fertile, the location is high, more than 400 feet above the river which nearly surrounds it. This secures exemption from late spring frosts. There is a good school; no dram-shop or lodge.

On Thursday the 20th I visited Wilmore, on the C. S. R. R. near High Bridge. A holiness convention of five days' continuance has been in progress. The attendance was large and the spirit of the meeting was excellent. I have nowhere in the State seen a congregation of more apparent intelligence. There was evidently great sincerity and earnestness, and this and similar meetings cannot but be helpful to the general cause of Christianity. There was little to criticize. Yet I could but think that these excellent men and women are habitually doing some things that are shocking to the moral sense of the great majority of the Christian world, and leaving undone some things of most pressing necessity. Though in the midst of a large colored population, most of whom are Methodists, none were present. They evidently felt that they would not be welcome. I question, too, whether these sanctified people would be willing to break caste by eating with a Christian brother, however intelligent and pure, who was a Negro.

Then, too, their brethren in the ministry, if not they themselves, are "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and revel in the abominations of the lodge, giving their personal endorsement to a religious worship which purposely ignores the Lord that bought them. And this system of iniquity receives no rebuke, either in their sermons or any of their publications, at least none that I have seen in this State.

I believe, too, that these good brethren are the victims of a false theory of sanctification, which is out of harmony with sound moral philosophy and the Word of God. To teach, as some do, that a man can and must repent of his acts of sin, while his state of sin cannot be repented of, but must, in answer to prayer, be taken out of him, is sheer nonsense. The Bible teaches that our sinfulness consists essentially in our state—in "an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." This state must be repented of, and not until then can our sins be forgiven. No sorrow for or giving up of particular sins can bring us to God. We must have a new heart in which there is no sin. Haply some of these brethren are vastly better than their teachings, and yet I could but think that they had forgotten to read the first and third of 1st Corinthians, since they profess to be saved from a carnal mind, while they approve and practice that form of evil (the sin of schism) which Paul gives as the evidence that the Corinthians were carnal. We have some ten or twelve kinds of Methodists, all zealous for their own sect, all teaching entire sanctification, and practicing "carnality" by needless and un-Christian divisions in the "body of Christ." Surely there is great need that the church preach and practice holiness, but a sanctification that does save men from sectarianism, lodgerism and caste, has no prominence over the average type of Christianity.

I go from here to Berea, in the vicinity of which place I have two appointments to lecture on the lodge question. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

—A missionary of the Rhenish Society in Southwest Africa, remarking that under the influence of Christianity the natives and half-breeds are becoming weaned from their nomadic ways, and are settling into more steady labor on their stations (aided of late by providential affluence of rains), adds: "That Christianity brings also earthly blessing is plain to be seen in the case of our church, especially with those who have learned not only 'Thou shalt hallow the Sabbath day,' but also, 'Six days shalt thou labor.' He who learns this with us may assuredly hope for earthly blessing also."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Christ preaching to the people. Vs. 1-3. When people are eager to hear and the preacher eager to teach, any kind of a pulpit will suffice. Wesley, on one occasion when shut out from the parish church of his native village, preached from his father's tombstone. There are many answers to the question why the masses do not go to church, but discuss the matter as we may, this fact remains: that from the day Christianity was first preached through all these eighteen centuries the Gospel has had to be brought to the masses, and by fresh and unconventional methods made to bear on their common everyday life, as something good for weekdays as well as Sundays; good for shop and farm and market as well as the church; good for this life as well as the life to come. Peter was never sorry that he let the Lord take possession of his boat. Do we desire that Jesus should possess and use all we have? Even a mechanic's bench Jesus will make as it were a pulpit, if the one who sits at it and works day by day at his humble trade is willing he should.

2. Letting down the net. Vs. 4-6. We do not know how long Christ's sermons were, but the probability is that they were short. When he was through he wanted to give Peter some recompense for the use of his boat. We shall always find that our business thrives best when we are willing to let Christ in for a partner. There are many lessons to be gained from this command to Peter. We shall have no success in our Christian efforts so long as we keep close to the shore, stranded in the shallows of expediency and policy and worldly compromise. We are to launch out into the deep—into the life of faith, and whole-hearted consecration and entire trust in God. It is only when we get into those deep sea soundings that we can expect to be fishers of men. We are not to despair because we "have toiled all the night and taken nothing." The noblest triumphs ever achieved in science or art have often come after years of weary and seemingly fruitless labor, and it may often prove so in spiritual things. We must be always ready at the word of the Master to let down the net. The Lord does not select his chosen instruments at haphazard. He did not choose Peter to be one of the chief of his apostles without some testing of him first. It is the promptness and unquestioning faith with which we obey which shows whether we are fit to be leaders in God's spiritual kingdom.

3. The miraculous draught of fishes. Vs. 7-11. There is nothing like a life of faith to make us humble. The humblest men and women in the world to-day are the ones who are trusting most and receiving most. When the Lord sends us some great and unexpected blessing that we know could not have come to us in the ordinary human way, the effect is always to empty the soul of any lurking self-righteousness and bring us down on our knees. This does not seem to human view so great a miracle as casting out devils and healing lepers, which Peter must have heard of even if he had never witnessed any of them; yet it was the draught of fishes that so strengthened his faith in Christ that he was ready to forsake all and follow him. We cannot live on other people's faith, or on other people's experiences. We may read of wonderful blessings to soul and body coming down in answer to prayer and believe it all; and yet a blessing not a tenth part so wonderful coming directly to us and in the line of our own daily wants will do far more for our advancement in spiritual life. We note (1) Satan, too, is fishing for souls, and we must be beforehand with him. He would not catch so many in the lodge net if we were more zealous and earnest in showing them a better way. (2) Our nets may break. Times of great ingathering may work havoc with established theories and methods, and burst through what is conventional and machine-like in our Christian work.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOURET.

DIVINE USES FOR ORDINARY THINGS.—A common fishing-boat, soiled with daily use, was made an instrument for proclaiming the everlasting Gospel and the saving of immortal souls. Such use can be made of our homes, our business, our social opportunities, every one of them becoming instrumentalities for helping men and hastening on the kingdom of God. This transfigures our daily life. This makes "every common bush afire with God." This makes "every land a Palestine."

HIGHER WORK comes to the disciples while they are faithfully performing their common daily tasks. So the song of the angels was heard by the shepherds while engaged in their ordinary work with wakeful zeal. It is to those who are faithful in the least that the call comes to higher duties.

FORSAKING ALL FOR CHRIST.—We are to give up everything to Christ—our property, our time—to use as he would have us. We are to give away as much as he directs; to leave all, and be missionaries, if he demands; to suffer the loss of all, if that is needful, in order that we may do right; to spend upon our families, our business, our pleasure, just as Christ would have us, and in all things seek to build up the kingdom of our Lord, and save men from sin.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—While conducting meetings at Phoenixville, Pa., Dr. L. W. Munhall, finding that the more than two thousand three hundred employes of the great Iron and Bridge Co. located there could not well attend services, and that they had a full hour off duty at noon, and that most of them took their dinner with them, secured permission from the managers of the corporation to conduct services in the mill at the noon hour for thirty minutes. Fully two hundred and fifty men were present at the first service. The attendance increased until not fewer than four hundred and fifty men were present. Many of them took an open stand for Christ. More than two hundred persons have been received into the churches of Phoenixville on profession of faith, as a result of the union meetings, and there are more to follow. Dr. Munhall is now in Somerville district, Boston, and expects to spend the month of March in Brooklyn, N. Y., where seven churches will unite in the meetings.

—The Boston Globe of the 24th ult. says that Dr. Munhall "will close his labors at the First Methodist church to-morrow evening. During his stay in Somerville about 400 men and women have signified their desire to lead a 'new life.'"

—Rev. Parker Shields, who is holding revival meetings at Metcalf, near Danville, Ill., has been insulted, it is reported, by some of the citizens, and threatened with personal violence by White Caps. Armed friends daily attend his meetings as a guard.

—A fine communion set of ten pieces was presented last Sabbath to the College Church at Wheaton. The gift was a memorial to Mrs. Mary Avery Blanchard, so long a beloved member of the church, from her children.

—In the statistics of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States there is an increase in the number of Sabbath-school scholars for the year 1888-9, amounting nearly to 33,000, nearly a quarter of the increase being in the diocese of Pennsylvania.

—In 1818 a Moravian missionary and his English wife undertook the charge of a leper hospital for the south African Hottentots. In 1867 a similar work was commenced at Jerusalem, and four Moravian missionaries are now devoted to this service. Both of these leper hospitals are still in operation.

—From Wie-Hien, China, comes the intelligence that an American missionary lady, Mrs. Mateer, who had been engaged in famine relief work, had the high honor lately shown her of being taken through the city by an escort of literary men of high degree. They presented her with a beautiful banner and other tokens of esteem, and their escort was a very brilliant one. Such honor shown to a woman, and a foreign woman too, by China's proudest men! This was a marvelous spectacle, and it evidences how men who are hardest of all to reach and influence in any other way, may be moved to admiration and esteem by deeds of charity and mercy, and loving personal service to the unfortunate and suffering. Mrs. Mateer said that while she was being thus honored, she tried to preserve a fitting humility, as she remembered times when she had suffered quite different treatment at the hands of the prejudiced and unfriendly literati and gentry of China.—Spirit of Missions.

—Missionary Bieger, writing in the Mededeelingen of the Dutch Missionary Society, gives, in a single sentence, a powerful impression of the deadness of soul engendered by Mohammedanism, which knows absolutely nothing of inward spiritual experience, takes absolutely no account of it. Herr Bieger has labored in Java, where the people are almost all Mohammedan, but has lately gone to the little island of Savoe, where they are or have been heathen. He remarks: "What I have not seen in Java in fourteen years, I have seen here in four months—a tear; the genuine witness of the fertilization of the sinner's heart by the seed of the Gospel."

—Dr. Pierson is meeting with great success in London and Scotland. Enthusiastic crowds, filling the largest churches and halls in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee, and wherever he goes, flock to hear his addresses. He has averaged two or more addresses a day, we believe, since he landed at Liverpool. In his last letter he says: "Every day is filled with engagements to the 1st of May, and even June if I will consent to remain." The interest is intense. All ranks and classes and denominations are engaged in the work, and important results must flow from it.

LODGE NOTES.

A sisterhood of the Knights of Pythias order, numbering fifty members, was instituted in Decatur, Ill., lately.

The order of Knights of Honor was established in June, 1873. The total number of members April 1, 1889, was 126,751.

It is the curses heard in the ante-rooms that sicken many a man who thought that Masonry was free from such muck. —Victorian Freemason.

An exchange says that Odd-fellowship carries on its work under the flags of thirteen different nations. Every day 150 men join its ranks, and about the same number die or secede.

W. A. Haygood, of Atlanta, Ga., at a recent banquet said: "The order of Knights of Pythias was founded at Washington City, by Justus Rathbone, in the year 1864. Since that time the growth of the order has been marvelous, and there are at present 260,000 members."

"Who Rules and Governs the World?" Under this heading a fanatically-inspired Catholic paper bought some time ago a poem, the quintessence of which is about this: "Who rules and governs the world now-a-days? Neither the kings and emperors, nor their ministers, nor their assemblies? It's the lodge and the Jew who govern the world! The lodge by depriving the people of creed, and the Jew by grasping at the people's money." — Quoted from the Orient of Budapest. — Freemason.

By the kindness of the Grand Secretary I collect from the report from June 30, '79, to June 30, '89, that we have initiated into the order in this jurisdiction 1,102; suspended for non-payment of dues, 1,046, leaving an increase over and above the number we had at that time of 63 members in ten years. Brothers, this is a bad showing! An increase of a fraction over six members a year is not a very flattering increase. I see that this question is agitating the whole order throughout the whole country; and I think it is one of the greatest questions of the day that the order has to deal with. — P. G. Sire J. B. Nicholson, for District of Columbia (Odd-fellows).

From Topeka, Kan., comes word of a concerted movement to capture the State and local government of Oklahoma. Developments have been made here, says a dispatch of the 24th, which it is alleged will explain the persistent support given the candidacy of E. P. McCabe (colored) for Governor of Oklahoma. About one year ago an organization was effected in Graham county, Kansas, which has spread over the State and into other sections. It is a secret political organization known as the First Grand Independent Brotherhood. None but those having Negro blood in their veins are admitted, and secrecy is sworn by every member. The members declare political war on the whites, demand equality in everything, and will accept of nothing less. The plan is, it is reported, to fill Oklahoma with Negroes, and to capture the State and local governments. It is understood that the agitation among Negroes in the Carolinas to remove to Arkansas and Mississippi is upon the advice of the leaders of this movement, so that a large colored population may be near Oklahoma, and ready to move into that Territory when it becomes a State. They declare allegiance to no political party, but demand a place at the white man's table, and equal privileges in the public schools for colored children.

The correct way to buy any manufactured article is direct from the manufacturer when possible, and save the middleman's profit. The Elkhart Carriage and Harness Mfg. Co., of Elkhart, Ind., have dealt with consumers direct for the past sixteen years at wholesale prices. They have no agents. Any one can buy of them, and as their work is fully warranted, and all goods are shipped subject to approval (they paying all charges if not satisfactory) the buyer runs no risk. Their 64-page illustrated catalogue will be mailed free to any address. Send for it.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has won for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by O. L. HOME AND HEALTH.

ONIONS VERSUS QUININE.

Says a writer in American Garden: "One day I was taken with chills and headache—signs that my old enemy, malaria, was on hand. My quinine box was empty, and I looking forward to a restless, sleepless night. In desperation I peeled a raw onion and slowly ate it, then went to bed with warm feet and an extra comforter, when presto! I was asleep in five minutes, and awakened in the morning free from malaria and ready for a day's duties. Our homely, but strong friend will be appreciated in time as medicine, and if agriculturists would turn their attention to raising a model onion, with the strong scent taken out that taints the breath so unpleasantly, families will be putting their 'pills' in the cellar by the barrel, and the doctors would take to onion farming. The onion acts as a cathartic and diuretic, and may help to break up a cold or lessen the bad symptoms. Said a doctor: 'I always store a barrel of onions in my cellar during the fall. We have them cooked twice a week, and whoever of the family is threatened with a cold eats some onion raw. If this vegetable was generally eaten there would be no diphtheria, rheumatism, gout, kidney or stomach trouble. But bless you! the young men and women are afraid to eat them. One young man went so far as to say to me, 'If my wife ate onions I would get a bill of divorce.'"

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

The oftener flour is sifted for sponge-cake the lighter the cake will be.

A small piece of sulphur placed in the cupboard or drawer will drive away ants. The flesh of fish should be firm, the gills should be light red, and the scales silvery.

In making a mustard plaster for a patient with a delicate skin use white of egg instead of water.

Hard soap lasts much longer if dried for several weeks before using it. It is also less hurtful to the skin.

Wash mirrors in warm suds, then dust with whiting from a muslin bag and polish with chamois skin.

When eggs are scarce cornstarch is a good substitute. One tablespoon of the starch is equal to one egg.

Brooms dipped for a few minutes in boiling suds once a week will last much longer than they otherwise would.

Rub your lamp-chimneys after washing with dry salt, and you will be surprised at the new brilliancy of your lights.

To prevent the smell of cabbage permeating the house while boiling, place on the stove a dish containing vinegar.

If a cucumber is cut into strips, and the pieces put in places where ants are found, it will surely drive them away.

In boiling meat for soup use cold water to extract the juices, but if the meat is wanted for itself alone put into boiling water.

When symptoms of croup exist administer at brief intervals a teaspoonful of the mixture of equal parts of sweet oil, paregoric and syrup of ipecac.

To remove paint from silk goods saturate the goods with equal parts of turpentine and ammonia, then wash in soap-suds and let it dry between blotting-paper under a heavy weight.

Alum water will restore almost all faded colors. Brush the faded article thoroughly to free it from dust, cover it with a lather of castile soap, rinse with clear water and then alum water, and the color will usually be much brighter than before.

Take a pair of shoes that has become stiff and uncomfortable by constant wear in the rain and apply a coat of vaseline, rubbing it in well with a cloth, and in a short time the leather becomes as soft and pliable as when it is taken from the shelves of the shoe dealer.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

THE HEAVY END OF A MATCH.

"Mary," said Farmer Flint, at the breakfast-table, as he asked for a second cup of coffee, "I've made a discovery."

"Well, Cyrus, you're about the last one I'd suspect of such a thing; but what is it?"

"I've found that the heavy end of a match is its light end," responded Cyrus, with a grin that would have adorned a skull.

Mary looked disgusted, but with an air of triumph quickly retorted, "I've got a discovery, too, Cyrus. It was made by Dr. R. V. Pierce, and is called 'Golden Medical Discovery.' It drives away blotches and pimples, purifies the blood, tones up the system, and makes one feel brand-new. Why, it cured Cousin Ben, who had consumption, and was almost reduced to a skeleton. Before his wife began to use it, she was a pale, sickly thing, but look at her: she's rosy-cheeked and healthy, and weighs one hundred and sixty-five pounds. That, Cyrus, is a discovery that's worth mentioning."

The farmer's wife was right, for the "Golden Medical Discovery" is in fact the only medicine for purifying the blood and curing all manner of pimples, blotches, eruptions, and other Skin and Scalp diseases, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, and kindred ailments, possessed of such positive curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it, as they are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will either benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. It also cures Bronchial, Throat and Lung diseases. Even Consumption (which is Lung-scorfula) yields to its marvelous curative properties, if taken in time and given a fair trial.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Don't be fooled into taking something else, said to be "just as good," that the dealer may make a larger profit. There's nothing at all like the "Discovery." It contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion; as peculiar in its curative effects as in its composition. It's a concentrated vegetable extract. Dose small and pleasant to the taste. Equally good for adults or children. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Their seed fresh and true. Would they not be most likely to obtain such by buying directly from the grower? I can buy seed at half what it costs me to raise it, but could not sleep sound should I warrant seed of this class. For the same reason I make special effort to procure seed stock directly from their originators. You will find in my new seed catalogue for 1890 (sent free) the usual extensive collection (with the prices of some kinds lower than last season) and the really new vegetables of good promise. You should be able to get from me, their introducer, good seed of Cory Corn, Miller Melon, Hubbard Squash, All Seasons and Deep Head Cabbages and many other valuable vegetables, which I have introduced. Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

UNCLE SAM'S WHITEWASH.

Excursionists who travel along the sea-coast in summer are often attracted by the remarkable whiteness of the light-houses, beacons and keepers' dwellings, and they wonder how these guides to the mariner are kept in such a shining condition during the winter as well as the summer. The material used is simply whitewash, and here is the United States Government formula for mixing a whitewash, that when properly made and applied gives a white that does not easily wash or rub off:

"To ten quarts of freshly slacked lime add one part of the best hydraulic cement. Mix well with salt water and apply quite thin."

Sylvester's process for excluding moisture from external walls consists in using two washes or solutions for covering the surface of brick walls, one composed of soap and water and one of alum and water. The proportions are three-quarters of a pound of soap to one gallon of water, and a half a pound of alum to four gallons of water. Both substances must be perfectly dissolved in water before using. The walls should be perfectly clean and dry, and the temperature of the air should not be below fifty degrees Fahrenheit when the compositions are applied. The first, or soap wash, should be laid on when at boiling heat with a flat brush, taking care not to form a froth on the brick work. This wash should remain twenty-four hours, so as to become dry and hard before the second, or alum wash, is applied, which should be done in the same manner as the first. The temperature of this wash when applied may be sixty or seventy degrees, and it should also remain twenty-four hours before a second coat of the soap wash is put on, and these coats are to be repeated alternately until the walls are made impervious to water. The alum and soap thus combined form an insoluble compound, filling the pores of the masonry, and entirely preventing the water from penetrating the walls. Four coatings will render brick impenetrable.

PLANTING SEEDS.

Amateurs may need to be reminded that the present month should see in their seed boxes nearly all of those varieties of plants which are to be brought forward "or planting out in the spring. Just when to sow seeds depends on the locality and the rapidity of growth of the different kinds. Nothing is more beneficial to strong-growing plants, like the cabbage and tomato, for instance, than frequent transplanting, the effect of which is to greatly increase the quantity of roots and to make a short stocky stem. By this means, too, plants can be held in check to a great extent.

Slow-growing plants, or those which develop slowly at first, should earliest receive attention. The verbena may be mentioned as one which cannot too soon receive attention to secure strong plants in time for the spring removal to the open ground. Pansy seed should be sown as early as possible to get a good start before the hot weather comes. A great variety of seeds should now be sowed when one requires many kinds of plants. Some bedding plants used in large quantities can be raised more easily and cheaply from seed than in any other way; among these may be mentioned the white foliaged, centaurea and cineraria maritima. The varieties of Lobelia used in bedding, basket and vase work are propagated in large quantities by seed, and this is the proper time to make sowings. The same may be said of all plants used for the same purpose and raised from seed.—Vick's Magazine.

A. M. Purdy, of Palmyra, N. Y., sends his Fruit Recorder and Evaporator one year for only 25 cents, and his catalogue of plants and trees free to all applicants.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

An Unequaled Triumph. An agency business where talking is unnecessary. Here are portraits of Miss Anna Page of Austin, Texas, and Mr. Jno Bonn of Toledo, Ohio. The lady writes: "I do business at almost every house I visit. Every one wants your grand photograph album, and were I dead and dumb I could secure orders rapidly." The man writes: "Your magnificent album is the greatest of all bargains; the people generally are wondering how you can make from $5 to $25 and upwards every day of your life. Talk no more. You can make big money even though you don't say a word. Our new style album is the greatest success ever known, and the greatest bargain in the world. Double size—the largest made. Bound in richest, most elegant and artistic manner, in finest silk velvet plush. Bindings splendidly ornamented. Insides charmingly decorated with most beautiful flowers. It is a regular $10 album, but it is sold to the people for only $2. How can we do it? It is the greatest hit of the times; we are manufacturing 500,000, and are satisfied with a profit of a few cents on each. Agents wanted! Any one can become a successful agent. Extra liberal terms to agents. We publish a great variety of Bibles and testaments; also subscription books and periodicals. Agents wanted for all. Our agents are always successful. We do the largest business with agents in America, and can give larger value for the money and better terms than any other firm. Particulars and terms for all of above mailed free. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

In the corridor of the House of Representatives at Washington, Friday afternoon, ex-Congressman Taulbee, of Kentucky, was shot in the face and dangerously wounded by Charles Kincaid, correspondent of the Louisville (Ky.) Times. The deed was caused by Mr. Taulbee pulling the correspondent's nose for giving publicity about two years ago to a scandal connecting Taulbee with a woman in the employ of the government at Washington.

The delegates to the International American Conference are beginning to talk about final adjournment, which will probably take place about April 1. Nearly all of the committees have made their reports, and several of them have been adopted. The committee on monetary convention will make two reports, one of which will recommend the coinage of a common silver dollar, to be the legal tender in commercial transactions between the citizens of the several nations.

CHICAGO.

President Blackstone, of the Alton Road, in his annual report recommends that all the railroads be sold to the government and managed by it.

The World's Fair Tower and Observatory Company, the World's Fair Guide and Comfort Company, and the World's Fair Official Catalogue Company, all of Chicago, were on Friday granted corporation licenses by the Secretary of State.

COUNTRY.

A combination of all the granite concerns in New England was formed at Boston on Friday, and the decision was arrived at that, after the 1st of May, all labor shall be paid for by the hour or by the piece.

Richard Hawes, who, by murdering his wife and two children, provoked a riot at Birmingham, Ala., in 1888, in which the militia killed a half dozen persons, was hanged Friday, first confessing that he was guilty of the crime.

Dr. J. T. Blackburn and Dr. W. E. Grant, of Louisville, Ky., was arrested while on the way, as alleged, to rob two graves at a New Albany (Ind.) cemetery. A third doctor, it is said, fled on the approach of the officers. A Negro, hired to drive the wagon, was shot dead in his flight.

The pay-roll of officers and sailors in the United States Navy this year will amount to nearly eight millions of dollars. The feeding and clothing of the men will cost another million and a half. This estimate does not include the officers and men of the revenue cutter service.

It is reported that T. Henry Villard has bought of Thomas Lowry a controlling interest in the horse, cable and electric railway systems of St. Paul and Minneapolis, paying therefor, it is said, $5,000,000.

A courier reported at Phoenix, A. T., that the bursting of the upper dam at Walnut Grove, on the Hassayampa, let loose a flood that caused thirty-one white men and three Chinese to lose their lives at the lower dam. There was no loss of life at the town of Wickenburg.

Many buildings were unroofed and several were destroyed in a cyclone at Brownsville, Tenn. A heavy rainstorm which followed did much damage to goods in the wrecked buildings.

The South Dakota Legislature has passed a law providing for the relief by the commissioners of the several counties of farmers destitute of seed grain, by furnishing not to exceed seventy-five bushels to each person who applies for assistance.

The Ohio State Senate passed the House bill prohibiting the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine as butter or cheese.

All the through mail for San Francisco, Cal., on the mail storage car of the west bound fast mail train was destroyed by fire at Blue Creek, Utah.

FOREIGN.

A committee has been formed in London, with branches at New Castle and other places, for the purpose of endeavoring to secure a mitigation of the severe treatment accorded to political prisoners in Siberia.

It is proposed to make Mr. Stanley a life member of the Savage Club in London, a distinction that he will share with only the Prince of Wales and a few others.

A bill has been introduced to enable English peers to abandon their places in the House of Lords if they wish, and be elected to the House of Commons if they can.

By the will of the late M. Chanteloupe, an extensive Canadian brass founder, almost his entire fortune, estimated at $500,000, was left to his employees. His three foremen are left the business and capital with which to carry it on.

The Times's Vienna correspondent reports that Prince Bismarck had actually resigned and surrendered the seals of office, but that he withdrew his resignation at the earnest request of the emperor; and that Luitpold, of Bavaria, and the grand duke of Baden, have notified the emperor that they do not approve his policy toward socialism.

The Socialist party of Germany numbers now nearly one million adherents, not quite one-fiftieth of the empire's population.

The police of Berlin have ordered that all factories using steam power must have ambulances and dressing for wounds always ready, with attendants capable of handling the same.

Japanese advices received Feb. 21 say that the storms which swept along Boshu coast on Jan. 24 was very disastrous. About one thousand fishing boats, with between 2,500 and 3,000 fishermen, drifted out to sea. Nine hundred of these boats, with all the men on board, were lost. Most of the bodies drifted upon the beach and were taken care of by their sorrowing relatives. On the same day eleven boats were wrecked in the sea off Tobishima, during a storm, and fifty fishermen were drowned. On Jan. 25 twenty-three fishermen were drowned on the coast at Maschawa Mishima Gun. News was also received of a disastrous storm which swept over the coast of the Toukomo and Chosie Kadsusa districts on the night of Jan. 26. Over three hundred fishing boats that were out never returned. Funeral services for about six hundred fishermen supposed to have been drowned have been observed, and whole villages are in mourning.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago April 22 and 23, 1890.

RAILROAD RATES.

The sub-committee appointed by the N. C. A. Board to secure rates from the railway companies has secured from the Western States Passenger Association a promise of a round trip rate of one fare and one third to all who secure certificates from the ticket agent when they purchase tickets, showing that they have paid full fare to Chicago. The roads making this engagement are the Chicago & Alton, Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago, Burlington & Northern, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn. & Omaha, Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City, Chicago, Santa Fe & California, Illinois Central, Iowa Central, and the Wabash. Delegates must remember, when purchasing their tickets on any of these roads to Chicago, to ask for the certificate that will entitle them to a return fare at one-third rates.

THE EXPENSES OF THE CONFERENCE.—The first request that the fund for these expenses be made up early is having a general response, as the report on page 13 will show. We must keep the subject in mind, however, and request the friends to remember what a thief is Procrastination. Let us have the nimble sixpences now, and along about April 15 to 20, will be the time for slow shillings. All will be good, but that will come quickest, as a rule, which is given with the best zeal. The committees have now secured promises from a full number of able speakers. Five colleges are represented on the list, and from Chicago we have such names as Drs. Goodwin, Henson and Wallace, and Col. George R. Clark. Success, under God, is sure. To have a part in it is the privilege of hundreds—it is only to HELP BEAR THE EXPENSES.

Cardinal Gibbons has made an appeal in the behalf the Negro and Indian missions of the Catholic church. The best solution of the race problem, in the cardinal's mind, is Christianizing the Negro. The same as Mexico and a greater part of South America have been Christianized, does he mean?

Recent reports of outrages in the Siberian mines at Kara, if true, confirm George Kennan's writing on the Russian Exile system. One woman is reported to have been flogged to death, and three others have been driven to commit suicide. Members of the Russian legation in Washington are not inclined to talk upon the subject, and say they know no such person as George Kennan. Mr. Hansen, secretary of the legation, says: "Our instructions are to ignore him in every way; to us he does not live." Notwithstanding their studied silence, it is rumored that the Russian authorities, who have been furnished, through a press clipping bureau, with copies of all cable dispatches and foreign letters relating to Russian affairs, as well as with Kennan's articles on Siberia and the press reports of his lectures, are preparing an exhaustive reply to the charges of brutality, which will be presented to Secretary Blaine for transmission to the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The late rowdy convention of colored men in Washington was under the lead of a Negro saloon-keeper and bummer politician. Last Thursday evening a State branch of the "American Citizens' Equal Rights Association" was formed in New Orleans, auxiliary to the Washington affair. A preacher is put before as president, but next stands the well-known "Col." James Lewis, the counterpart of Washington's Perry H. Mason. Lewis will be remembered as the lodge bully and saloon-keeper who intruded his presence, with insults, upon the N. C. A. convention at New Orleans two years ago. If the colored people are to be organized under the lead of such men, they simply make their destruction sure. God and good men must appear for them if they are ever delivered from their social and political burdens.

Apropos of the color line, Harvard has a colored student, the son of a Central African chief, whose story some native Shakespeare might weave into quite a grim tragedy. His father was killed in battle three years ago by an uncle, a kind of Richard III., who usurped the throne after putting to death his mother and two brothers. He means, after his course is over at Harvard, to return and make an effort to secure his rank; but whether he succeeds in this or not, he will go back to his people as a missionary to teach them the way of life. If he gets back his usurped throne this Christian graduate of Harvard may be able to do a grand work which will extend to many other tribes besides his own in the Dark Continent.

The temperance cause in the District of Columbia is both healthy and hopeful if it can be judged by its activity and the enthusiasm displayed by its workers. Eight public temperance meetings were conducted on Sabbath evening, the 2nd inst., and were so distributed that the work reached every section of the district. Miss Greenwood, the evangelistic superintendent of the W. C. T. U., has been giving Bible expositions at the different city churches to large and increasing audiences. When her course was finished, she was requested to continue her lectures, so widespread was the interest and edification accruing from her work; consequently she is now fulfilling a second engagement. The Washington temperance people also heard during last week the able Kentucky orator, Geo. W. Bain, who denounces the Bourbon whisky of his native State with convincing and thrilling eloquence.

Senatorial secrets seem to be as hard to keep as those of Masonry and Odd-fellowship. It is impossible to stop the leaks either in the Senate chamber or the lodge. The people read in the papers what is done in executive session, and how a man is made a Mason in a R. A. Chapter. Surely "there is nothing covered but what shall be revealed, neither hid but what shall be made known." Why not? The doings of the United States Senate concern all the people, and they have a right to know them. And this is true of the great secret orders. An institution like Masonry, that has more than half a million of members and a lodge in almost every town, dishonors itself when it hides behind a veil of secrecy, and especially when it pretends that its obligations and ritual can never be learned outside of the lodge. If its objects are benevolence, there is not the slightest occasion for sworn concealment. If they are selfish and wicked, they ought to be published for the public good. We are heartily glad that this secrecy question has forced itself on the attention of the Senate. There is but one way in which it can be settled.

WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?

BY REV. F. O. CUNNINGHAM, SOMERVILLE, MASS.

One of the essential principles of the religion of Jesus Christ is separation from things unclean and unholy. In the multitude of vexed questions confronting the Christian at the present time, he finds himself constantly obliged to take sides, unless he belongs to that class who have no opinions of any value, or who never dare to express themselves plainly concerning any controverted subject. In the moral world there are two sides, and only two,—the Lord's side and the side of the great enemy and destroyer of mankind. Under the leadership of the great Captain of the Lord's host, or the god of this world, all mankind are consciously or unconsciously marshalled. Despite the attempt in so many quarters to obliterate the dividing line, it still exists, clearly defined by the unerring Word. As when Moses uttered the question, so to-day, it is one of great importance. Let us first answer it negatively.

1. Numbers do not determine where the Lord's side is, for it is still true that "many are called, but few chosen." The way of life is narrow and few there be that find it. Though the tendency of human nature is to follow the crowd, the command of the Word is, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." Elijah, confronting the eight hundred and fifty prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel, in the face of a backslidden and idolatrous Israel, was not on the side of numbers, but the result proved that he was on the side of the omnipotent Jehovah. Noah, Daniel, Caleb, Luther, Knox and others are shining examples of men who have dared to stand alone with God.

2. Fashion is not a safe criterion. The great and noble may scorn the Gospel, and, like Dives, fare sumptuously every day, and float on in the swirl of fashion, while the poor, like Lazarus, may be afflicted and suffer privation. But the lifted veil reveals to us that the "Lord's side" was not dependent on the wealth or luxury of the world. The common people heard Christ gladly, and the pure Gospel has kept largely upon the same level as at first. The Gospel determines the character of its adherents, but is not affected by their rank or financial standing. Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Romanism, etc., are systems of error, though kings, princes and nobles adhere to them. Christ's Gospel is true though only beggars embrace it.

3. Popularity is by no means a safe indication of the "Lord's side." In the history of the world the "vox populi" has very rarely proved to be the "vox Dei." "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you" is the warning of the Bible. Public opinion is variable. The same multitude that cried "Hosanna" before Christ when entering Jerusalem, joined the shout, "Away with him" when the tide seemed to have turned. Success determines the allegiance of many. Few have courage to stand by the ship when breakers and a lee shore threaten. In the streets of the ancient city of Ephesus a vast multitude thronged and surged, crying with great enthusiasm and persistence, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Did that make her a goddess? No! There stood a single apostle, of insignificant appearance, and with no numerical following, proclaiming that Christ was the Son of God; and so he was, and is, and evermore shall be. Popularity cannot alter facts.

4. This is not a question of profit. We must not ask, "Where can I find the most friends, money, or influence?" Many embrace the church for what they can get out of it, but the question of personal profit is alien to the Spirit of Christ. We must deny self if we are to count ourselves among his followers.

5. Zeal is no criterion. The Pharisees had zeal, for they compassed sea and land to make a proselyte, only to make him two-fold more the child of hell than themselves. Saul was full of zeal when persecuting the early church, but it was terribly misdirected. Romanists and Mormons are zealous, but not according to knowledge or obedience of the truth.

6. Elegant and costly churches do not prove their owners to be true and sincere worshipers of the lowly Nazarene. In the eleventh and twelfth centuries Europe abounded in costly edifices, but piety and even morality were at a low ebb. The church-building does not make a people. Christ's sheepfolds are where we find his sheep. Of course we must not go to the other extreme. God's house should be comfortable, commodious, accessible and in good repair.

To be on the Lord's side demands separation from the world. "Be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind." This separation is the essential prerequisite to adoption into the divine family. 2 Cor. 6: 14-18. Inter-marriages with heathen nations were forbidden Israel. Abraham commanded his servant to take a wife for Isaac from among his kindred. Thus God has indicated by precept and example his desire that his people should be distinct from the world in character, purposes and methods, and should thus form a marked contrast with those who try to serve God and Mammon, and usually end by becoming bond-servants to the latter.

Separation to God is also necessary. This means to accept his provision for salvation, obey the commands of his Word, and be a loyal soldier of the cross. The Lord knows who are his. Man may be deceived in regard to himself as well as others, but God knows who are his true children. The standard of the Lord is still unfurled in opposition to golden calves (or goats), the standards of devil worship. Who is on the Lord's side? No reversible suits will pass muster. "True blue" is the watchword. Let us be willing to be counted on the side of right, truth, and God at all times.

The present Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, is not the first convert from Rome that has been a member of the Cabinet. The late Mr. Daniel Manning, Secretary of the Treasury in Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet, was also a convert from the Roman Catholic church. He became a member of the Protestant Episcopal church, while

Mr. Blaine is a Congregationalist, though he worships in a Presbyterian church in Washington. Though Mr. Blaine is very friendly to the Roman Catholics and courts the Roman Catholic vote in politics, the rough element in that church looks upon him as an apostate from the "true church." When his eldest daughter, the wife of Colonel Coppinger, of the United States Army, died last January, she was buried from St. Matthew's Roman Catholic church, Washington, as she had become a Roman Catholic at the time of her marriage. When the funeral procession entered the church the husband, as a devout Roman Catholic, made a genuflection towards the altar on which reposed the host, but Mr. Blaine as a Protestant did not bow to the wafer. This aroused the wrath of the Roman Catholics in the gallery, and they loudly hissed the Secretary. Cardinal Gibbons, who was present to pronounce the benediction over the remains of Mrs. Coppinger, did not rebuke his unmannerly followers. Doubtless he thought Mr. Blaine deserved the hissing on general principles for abandoning the faith of Rome, and in particular for not acknowledging the power of the priests to transubstantiate the wafer into the "body and blood, soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ," as the Roman Catholic catechism says.—The Converted Catholic.

THE CHURCH UNITED IN REFORMS.

BY REV. JOSIAH STRONG, D.D.

The recent Christian Conference held in Boston and called by the Evangelical Alliance is proving in its results to have been as significant as the one held two years before in Washington. Nearly a score of denominations and as many States were represented and well represented. The application of Christianity to meet our social and political evils was the dominant thought throughout the brilliant program. It was held that the evils were to be cured only as those hurt by them and also those hurting were cured. The salvation of men was the root of the tree which every ax aimed at. This was the burning focus held over every question. When conditions become startling it is the man that is to be sought out and the remedy for the condition is to be applied to him. The fountain is to be cleansed before the rills are expected to sparkle with health. The correspondent for the Christian at Work says: "Gathered from the length and breadth of this great land, the most successful men in the philanthropic works of the day came together and gave each to the other the results of practical, effective work, and proposed plans where co-operative work might surely succeed in combating the powers of evil so persistently at work against the good of society."

It is hardly surprising that the press should give the discussions of this great meeting so abundant, so serious and so widespread attention. The papers, both religious and secular, had already been busy with the consideration of these vital questions. Religious life and teaching cannot now be separated from the affairs of the life of the people. Christianity must permeate or be called another name. It cannot be confined to the Sabbath and the meeting house. It will no longer wear any particular kind of dress, or be known by any peculiar tones or accents. It will go forth among men and seek their acquaintance and offer to do them good. It will call upon them as well as call unto them; it will not only speak to them, but it will also listen to what the people may have to say. It will examine with care the charge widely formulated and more widely felt, that we have given only a stone when we have heard the cry for a fish or for bread. That all papers of weight at a time when political matters were claiming public attention should not only give so favorable notice of this Christian movement, but should emphasize the lines of thought by such ready and so worthy discussions is certainly a grateful testimony.

The outlook for the work of the Alliance is greatly broadened and rendered more inspiring. Doubtless the success is due in large degree to the fact that instead of seeking to build another organization its work is to quicken the organizations now existing, viz., the Christian churches, and aid them in calling out their forces and directing them systematically and continuously in the community field.

Evangelical Alliance, New York.

THE BIBLE FOR THE SCHOOL.

A MEMORIAL BY CYNTHIA DERBYSHIRE.

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned memorialists, respectfully present the following considerations on the vitally important subject of the Bible:

First, we ask your candid attention to the first principles, and time-honored practice, which have hitherto prevailed in regard to the privilege and right of reading the Bible. The Bible is addressed by its Divine Author to every individual human soul. Its teachings are not addressed to bishops or priests exclusively. And as it is addressed to all, the right to read it and understand it are equally universal.

When the Pilgrim fathers first settled in this land they brought the Bible with them, and made it perfectly free for all to read, and open for every person to use according to their individual judgment. And this is equally true of all the other colonies under Roger Williams, William Penn, Lord Baltimore, and all the rest then settled in this land. Whatever differences or controversy occurred on other subjects among the various colonists, they were a unit on this point: that the Holy Scriptures should be freely read without let or hindrance, in every place, and by every inhabitant of this land. It is not known to us that there was a nook or corner of our common country, during the period of its colonial existence, where the Bible was closed to young or old by legal enactment.

In like manner the pioneers of the more newly settled States have carried the Bible with them, and established the privilege of reading it as an inherent right in every place where they, through the stern toils of frontier life, saw a wilderness become a fruitful field.

Is it right that the hard work done by pioneers of our country, to build up a free nation, should be destroyed by foreigners who come only to enjoy the fruits of their labors?

When the colonial period of our national existence came to its end this universal respect and love for the Bible, a mighty, though unseen influence, was the one common bond of union which drew the various interests into the fraternal relation of one common government. And when the late unhappy war had disrupted the States from each other, it was the influence of the Bible, the free, open Bible, that again healed the wounds of discord, and brought the disorderly elements to peace and a good degree of harmony.

The vain efforts of those who obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, to scatter and break in pieces, cannot impair the fact that the free, open Bible, as the one bond of union between all true Christians, is the foundation of our national government. Christianity has its origin in the Bible, and draws its continued existence from the Bible. It knows no other starting point, or present and future support. All those people, nations or races, who draw their religious principles from the Bible are Christians; and all people who restrict, forbid or reject the Bible are not Christians, however they may profess Christianity. The Holy Scriptures owned, read, openly received, acknowledged and revered, are the tests of true Christianity, the one dividing line between Christians and heathens.

We respectfully ask your honorable body on which side of this line is our nation? We ask your particular attention to the language of the Declaration of Independence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are born free and equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Now, we hold that a free, open Bible is included in every one of these specified rights; as life is shorn of its highest value if the Bible be withdrawn from it, liberty is an empty shell, and happiness a garish shadow without the light of divine revelation.

The right to read the Bible whenever and wherever it is desirable to do so, is the inherent right of every child born on our soil, or obtaining a nationality with us, under the broadly-spreading flag of the United States Government. And so generally has this right been acknowledged for a period now verging towards three centuries, that the sacred writings have not been withheld even from criminals in any of our prisons. All persons who would set up an authority over this right, whether parent or priest, are acting a tyrannical part, and should be restrained from such tyranny. Thus, we believe that a free, open Bible for old and young and all in every place, and not only the Bible, but an ability to read it intelligently, is the chief corner-stone of American liberty.

We desire to call your attention to the fact that the Bible is the true Magna Charta of a republican form of government, and contains the promises of all our future greatness. We believe that the typical stone, spoken of in the prophet Daniel (Dan. 2: 34), not held in hands, that is not wielded by governmental authority, and which became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth, represents the Bible, and this was the best representation that could then be made to the mind of the heathen king of the means by which the kingdom of God was to be established in the earth.

In the seventh chapter of Daniel it is said, verse 27: "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High; whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." And now, after so long and full and free and unquestioned possession of this right, and great and glorious privilege, by all classes in every place under the broad seal of American liberty, the dangerous, and, as we think, fatal innovation is commenced of restricting and subverting this highest exercise of freedom. And the class who are to be forbidden their liberty in this respect, is the class who, of all others, have the strongest claim on the protection of the government, namely, the children in the public schools. But the children everywhere have the same rights as older citizens in this respect, and in common with all others should be protected in the exercise of it.

And whence comes this innovation and plot against American liberty? From the emissaries of a foreign potentate, whose presumptuous claim to divine prerogatives, power and infallibility, is real blasphemy against God; and whose usurpation of an irresponsible and world-wide despotism is real treason against the inherent and inalienable rights and liberties of mankind.

We believe that this general respect and reverence for the Bible in our country has been the one redeeming characteristic of our people which has brought down from our God innumerable mercies and blessings on our land. If those counsels prevail which despise his Word, shall we not reap blasting misfortune and destruction?

We cannot believe that any true-hearted American citizen, however entangled in the meshes of unbelief, could be willing that the sacred boon which has descended to us from the consecrated hands of the forefathers of our country, should ever be wrested from us. We therefore petition your honorable body to secure this right by such further constitutional guarantees as may forever silence all question or cavil on the subject.

THE INCREASE OF OUR NAVY.

The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to the committees of Congress a scheme for the creation of a great navy, by the construction of about a hundred vessels of various classes. Some fourteen years will be required to build them, and the cost will be three hundred millions of dollars, more or less. No doubt legislation in this direction will be undertaken, and carried through with little opposition, for it is supposed to be in line with public sentiment, and each party will seek to gain favor by it. So much has been said of the weakness of our navy, and of our defenceless condition, that we are supposed to be at the mercy of any nation that may choose to make war upon us. One would think that our commerce had been driven from the high seas, that our coasts are unprotected, and our maritime cities liable to be laid waste by the guns of any vessel that might steam into the harbor. Our pride is touched. What are half a dozen or so of armored vessels to this great nation? What could our few unarmored vessels do in case of an invasion? Also the people like to hear of "the flag on every sea," and to think of our arms as a terror to all nations. The politicians find good material in this sentiment, and the trades interested are solicitous for the lavish expenditure of the public money. At the risk of seeming unpatriotic, we enter our dissent from this view, and our protest against the present scheme.

A large navy is not in harmony with our traditional policy, and has a dangerous tendency. Our policy is that of peace with all nations, and non-interference with foreign affairs. We have relied upon a peaceful policy, the justness of our claims, and the wisdom of our measures. A sufficient naval force for police purposes is necessary, and should be maintained, but a large navy, like a standing army for war purposes, is contrary to our spirit and settled policy. It springs from the old war spirit, which should be repressed rather than fostered.

Our merchant marine belongs to the industrial development of the country, and should be encouraged and helped by such legislation as may be found to be practicable and wise. At the present time, and for many years, it has been very small, except in the coast trade, for the double reason that vessels can be built at less cost in foreign yards, and foreign investors are satisfied with less profit on their investments. Measures by which larger profit can be brought to the trade, will again whiten the seas, and cheer the ports of the world with our flag.

As to war vessels the case is quite different. Except in their construction, they do not develop our resources or maintain our industries, but are a constant and heavy drain upon our income, and foster a spirit that is not in accord with our institutions. With a nation as with an individual, the fact of being armed strengthens the aggressive spirit and tends to violence. Our spirit is peaceful; we seek the good will of all men; we refuse to make war for the enlargement of our territory, and therefore, beyond a few cruisers, we have no need or use for a large navy. As for defence, our harbors must in any case be protected by fortifications, torpedoes, and torpedo boats. Is the experience of Great Britain such as to encourage us to follow her example? Some of her greatest vessels are found to be practically worthless by the advances made in arms, and with all that has been expended in building up her navy, it is asserted that there is no certainty that London and Liverpool cannot be laid in ashes by the guns of an enemy.

What we wish to emphasize is that our strength does not lie in the army or navy. We stand before the world as a nation that loves and seeks peace, and that stands on the basis of right in all its dealings with others. We stand in the strength of a nation doing right. It is thus we have gained our greatness before the world. Now that other nations are groaning under the burdens of armies and navies, the inheritance from the days of violence and war, should we take upon ourselves the same crushing weight? Our appeal has been to the sense of right and justice; has it been in vain? Did we fail in the Alabama case? Did we adjust the Samoan difficulty by our ships? Have we ever suffered for want of arms? This nation should keep its position as an unarmed citizen of the world, seeking and maintaining peace through righteousness. Let the millions be used in establishing schools, in institutions for the best training of our people, in the development of our industries, in the improvement of our public ways, in all that relates to the betterment of the people, and the next generation will see better results than can be gained from the largest navy that floats.—United Presbyterian.

In appearance the beer-drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind will commonly provoke acute diseases, ending fatally. Compared with other inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer-drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer-drinkers. Intellectually a stupor, amounting to almost paralysis, arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal.—Scientific American.

KILLED WITHOUT INQUEST.

THE MASONIC TRAGEDY IN WEST VIRGINIA.

(FROM THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER.)

[Republished by Request.]

Masonic circles are greatly agitated over the shocking accident at Huntington, W. Va., [Jan. 10, 1890] which resulted in the death of a candidate taking the Royal Arch degree.

It is the first instance on record where any accident of a serious nature has occurred in the ceremonies of that degree. In fact, the ritual which initiates the candidate into the Royal Arch mysteries is considered much less dangerous than that of any other degree. Prominent local Masonic lights state that as far as their records and memories go there have not been over half a dozen such accidents in this country.

In the face of the great and unexpected sorrow which has befallen the lodge, its members have torn aside as far as possible the veil shielding the mysteries of the ceremony, and explained fully the details attending the accident. The building was built specially for Masonic purposes. In the third floor is the lodge room proper. As is usual, three candidates had offered themselves for the Royal Arch degree. But owing to a recent accident one of them was absent. It was decided to put through the remaining two. Rev. Mr. Johnston, pastor of the Methodist church, and Rev. W. F. Marshall, pastor of the Episcopal church. One feature of the ritual occurs in what is known as the dark room. This is an apartment on the third floor. It is about eight feet wide and twenty long. At one end is a window, and at the other a door, opening into the lodge room proper, which is lighted with electricity. In the middle of the little room is a three-foot trap which opens into a vault, or an arrangement like an elevator shaft. This vault extends from the ceiling of the second story to the floor, is some eight feet square, and walled up with wooden partitions. It has a depth of some thirteen feet. In the ceiling of the dark room is a hook, to which is fastened a double block and tackle. The first block is close to the ceiling, while the second is near the floor and directly over the trap. A rope seven-eighths of an inch thick passes three times over the top block. It is attached to a ring above the second block, the end being wrapped around similar to a hangman's knot. Beneath the lower block hangs a short loop, through the end of which is passed a short stick or bar. This stick is straddled by the candidate, his legs hanging on either side, while he clutches the block with his hands and holds himself in position. He is then lowered into the vault by the members of the lodge, who have hold of the other end of the rope, which generally lies loosely piled upon the floor. The ceremony at this point is symbolic of the search in the ruins of King Solomon's temple. The vault represents the ruins, and the candidate one of a party making the search. He descends into the vault, and finds in one corner a small box, which is typical of the Ark of the Covenant. After this he is raised again to the "dark" room. Next follows the lecture, during which is explained the ceremony he has just passed through and the Biblical events it symbolizes. The block and tackle had been in constant use by the Huntington Lodge for over three years.

The initiation of the two preachers began last Friday evening. It was about 10 o'clock when the dark room was reached, and arrangements for the final ceremony commenced. One of the members, Mr. Crider, had descended into the vault and made the usual preparations. He had been taken out. Rev. Mr. Marshall then went through the ordeal, was lowered into the symbolic ruins and again returned to the room. There were six or seven members taking part in the ceremony besides the two candidates. The scene was a rather weird one. On the window-sill rested an oil lamp, whose flickering light threw fanciful shadows on the walls of the "dark" room. The door at the other end was open, and the rays from the electric lights entered. The vault looked like a black, yawning chasm. Neither of the candidates was blindfolded. Both could see everything that was going on, and perfectly understood the workings of the machinery by which they were to descend into the vault.

Mr. Johnston was a tall, well-built man, weighing some 180 pounds. He had seated himself astraddle the bar, and caught the block with his hands. Suddenly there was a whirring sound. The end of the rope was seen to jerk loose from the ring above the block. In some way, most probably from the long and constant use, the rope had been gradually becoming loosened and unwrapped, and Mr. Johnston's heavy weight detached it entirely. The end flew toward the ceiling, and there was a sudden relaxation of the entire machinery. Mr. Johnston disappeared, and an instant later was heard the dull sound with which he struck the hard floor of the vault, thirteen feet below. The members standing about the trap and holding the rope were almost paralyzed by the accident. Their cries brought the rest of the lodge to the apartment. One coil of the rope still remained over the upper block. With it Mr. Peyton, a slightly-built gentleman, was lowered into the vault. Lights were brought and the unfortunate preacher was found lying on his side at full length. He had struck on his left hip. Mr. Johnston was not unconscious, but his deep groaning showed he was suffering the most intense agony. A ladder was lowered into the vault, and, with

Rhode Island politics—The heathen Chinese of Boston vs. the lodge—A new Don Quixote needed—A Christian benefit order—Mrs. M. L. Shephard mobbed in Connecticut—The hand of the Jesuit in Boston—Rev. J. H. Brown going as a home missionary to Minnesota—Our new tract for women.

Rhode Island politics are, as usual, in a very mixed state. Little Rhody has not only "a mind of her own," speaking in a political sense, but unfortunately she has several minds, and the result is a decided muddle. There are four parties in the field, the fourth one calling itself "the union reform." It denounces the repeal of the Amendment, and seems to occupy the same ground practically as the Prohibitionists. It dates from last year when it made itself quite a power at the outset, as it neutralized the Democratic plurality, and threw the election into the Legislature, thus giving the Republicans the victory. As their

Mr. Peyton's assistance, he was enabled to slowly mount until ready hands could draw him out of the vault. He was carried to a stretcher, and Drs. R. D. Vickers and John D. Meyers summoned. While awaiting their coming Mr. Johnston described his experience. In the brief moment while he was falling his whole life, he said, seemed to be passing in review before him. He expressed mentally his satisfaction that there were not others dependent upon him, and that, if death came, he was ready to meet his God. The minister told this as the sixteen members of the lodge surrounded the stretcher, and urged upon them the importance of always being ready, for none knew when the summons would come. For nearly two hours Mr. Johnston lay in the lodge room. The attending physicians examined him, but could detect no outward sign of injury. This led them to pronounce his condition as not dangerous. Still he continued to complain of the most agonizing pain, especially about the lower part of the spine and chest. He was borne to the Methodist parsonage where he resided. All that night and the next morning he continued perfectly conscious.

About three o'clock Saturday afternoon he became semi-conscious from the powerful drugs administered to alleviate his intense sufferings. He lingered in this condition until 1 o'clock Sunday morning, when he peacefully passed away.

Naturally the reports of the accident created intense excitement in Huntington. The Masons made no effort to keep the details secret, and, on the contrary, took especial pains to explain fully the manner in which the accident happened. Particular stress was laid on the fact that the utmost dignity is preserved throughout the ceremony, and that nothing savoring in the slightest of levity or practical joking is permissible.

The physicians pronounced the immediate cause of Mr. Johnston's death failure of the heart, due to shock and internal injury. The Masons suggested the advisability of a post mortem to determine the exact extent and character of the injury, but the friends of the deceased expressed some opposition, and it was not made. Examination of the remains showed there was not the slightest external mark or bruise.

WHAT CINCINNATI MASONS SAY.

The fatal accident in the Huntington lodge caused a great deal of comment among Cincinnati Masons. It was all the more surprising as none of them had ever heard of a serious accident while the Royal Arch degree was being exemplified.

Col. Enoch T. Carson, who has taken the very highest degree in the Masonic order, was seen yesterday at his office on Third street and stated he had read the Enquirer's account of the affair with much interest.

"There is no reason why accidents should occur in any of the degrees," he said, "provided proper precautions are taken. As for myself, I generally inquire very particularly about the candidates, and when a fellow tells me he is feeling nervous I look out for him. Of course a candidate has got to keep his head about him. If he loses that, something may happen. The particular thing in the present case is that there is less danger about the Royal Arch degree than any of the others. It is the easiest of all—just as easy as to carry a hod—but, of course, in carrying a hod you've got to keep a cool head or you'll fall from the ladder. The drop in the Huntington lodge room was only about a dozen feet. In taking one of our degrees there's a drop of over sixty feet. Here in Cincinnati we've always been very careful. In fixing the machinery and making the other arrangements over there in the Masonic Temple, I consulted with a physician so as to avoid any possibility of an accident. There can be no accident if proper care is taken. I am afraid the Huntington brethren were a little negligent in not examining and testing the rope. Still it is a thing that could happen only through the purest accident. As far as my memory goes, there have been some half a dozen while being initiated in the various degrees. I have never heard of any in the Royal Arch degree except that at Huntington. They have mostly occurred in the Third or Master's degree, which you must term the most exciting of all. The danger, of course, is from nervous shock, and it is always best to find out if the candidate has ever been threatened with heart trouble. The last case I can recall occurred some six or seven years ago. A candidate in a Pennsylvania lodge was taking the Master's degree when he suddenly fell to the floor, and when picked up he was dead. A sudden nervous shock had affected his heart and caused death. Of course there had to be an examination, and the Coroner investigated the matter. I don't remember whether there was a formal inquest or not. The Masonic influence in that community was great, and my impression is that the matter was finally smoothed over and nothing came of it. Very little publicity was given to the affair. This is the only case of which I can at present recall any of the details."

God gives every bird its food, but does not throw it in the nest.

name indicates, their platform embraces many excellent reforms. Meanwhile each party opposes all the others, yet there really is but one issue that is worth taking into consideration,—rum or no rum; and his Satanic majesty must laugh in his sleeve to see how cleverly he can make partyism confuse all the dividing lines, and set good temperance men to playing at cross purposes with each other.

In the town of Grafton, Mass., a school house has been moved by the authorities during the past year in order that a hotel-keeper could get his desired license. It has had the effect to so stir up the better portion of the community as to bring the question of license or no license to the front. Grafton, like most other New England towns, is full of lodges, and prohibitionists will yet have to learn by sad experience that it does not matter how many individual members are temperance men, while all the great brewers and distillers in the country are Masons, and thus can hold in leading strings all the lodges in town or city, and make them politically a unit for rum.

One of the leading dailies asks in Monday's issue: "Is there in Boston a large secret society of Chinamen, organized for the perversion of justice?" and adds, "There is a suspicion to that effect among the officers of our courts, and there are facts within their knowledge that seem to warrant it." Now it is very possible that Harrison Avenue has its lodge room with tyled doors for meetings of "Highbinders," for there is no reason why the Chinese of Boston should be behind their brother Celestials in San Francisco. But is there not more than a suspicion that a very large secret society exists among native Bostonians, which, whether it was organized for that purpose or not, is perverting justice to an alarming extent, as more than one lawyer in our city courts can testify? Heathenism is always bad enough, even in "the heathen Chinese;" but when it crops out in men who were born in a Christian land and might naturally be supposed to know better than to bow at strange altars and swear to keep every secret of a brother, though he be a saloonist, a thief or an adulterer, it is surely worse.

By the way, the newspapers had better stop their gibes at the South for its numberless "Colonels," and take a look at home. Some Yankee Don Quixote ought to arise and hit with scathing satire our ever-increasing army of "Knights,"—Knights of Pythias, Knights Templar, Knights of Honor, Knights of Labor, and so on ad infinitum. The titles, captain or colonel, however opposed to truth and good taste when indiscriminately applied, have at least a good republican savor,—coming all the way from the days of our forefathers, when rough, old-fashioned virtues were more in demand than they are now. But knight-hood and orders of chivalry savor of popish times, and a kingly and aristocratic regime utterly opposed to all American traditions, and it is high time that the people rose in revolt against this sort of thing, this donning of the cast-off rags that have descended from the fools and roues of European courts. But I am deeply convinced that men can only be weaned from this reign of false worship as they were weaned from the reign of popery—by a religious reformation. As the churches have grown dead and formal, substi-

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

BOSTON, March 4, 1890.

From the Beverly Times, Feb. 26, I clip the closing part of "Great Prophet" Charles A. Russell's address to "Chickataubut Tribe of Red Men: 'Let us live up to the teachings of our order, and when the grim arch of death is reached, we will leave the trail below for that wigwam where the council fire burneth in richness and is never quenched.' Or, in the words of Scripture: 'Where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.' The reporter appropriately adds, 'a banquet and dance followed.'"

Washington Lodge of Alexandria, Va., presented Liberty Lodge of Beverly, on Washington's birthday, with a wooden mallet, accompanied with the message, "Alexandria Washington Lodge, No. 22, sends to Liberty Lodge this gavel, made of wood from the last tree planted by Washington at Mount Vernon, the handle of wood from Christ's church at Alexandria." Of course it was intended to glorify Masonry by making the "Father of his country" the patron saint of the order. It was stated that he was the first master of Alexandria Lodge, etc. Bro. Grant proposes to give the readers of the Times the facts of Washington's Masonic record as learned from authentic sources.

The Baptist ministers, at their meeting in Tremont Temple Monday, March 3, briefly discussed Masonry, as it came up in connection with the difficulties in the Perkins St. Baptist church, Somerville. This seems to be a very singular case, in which it was voted, after a lengthy investigation, that a former pastor's domestic life was not above suspicion, and that he was in the habit of using intoxicating liquor to excess, while in Kansas City, in Hamilton, Ohio, and in Somerville; and yet, after this finding, it was voted 157 to 132 to grant to the accused and his wife letters to any Baptist church. The thing has a strange look, and the inquiry has been made, "Has Masonry anything to do with these unusual proceedings?" It will be likely to get a pretty thorough sifting. It is due to the pastor of Perkins Street Baptist church, Rev. C. L. Rhoades, to say that he showed his fidelity to Christ and to his church by promptly resigning, as announced in to-day's papers.

THE OUTLOOK AT BEREA, KY.

BEREA, March 4, 1890.

Our "January thaw" here in central Kentucky began about the 1st of December, and continued, with slight interruptions, until the 1st of March, terminating somewhat abruptly in some old-fashioned winter weather. Meanwhile, peach trees had blossomed and began to form fruit. Pear trees had blossomed and were in full leaf, and apple leaves and blossoms were coming out. They looked sorry enough to-day. The fruit prospect is bad, but that of wheat was never better.

The constant assumption of the Southern politicians is that race prejudice is "instinctive, inherent in human nature," and, therefore, unreconcilable. Hence, they infer that all schemes, past, present, or future, for political equality between the races, must fail, and that the only choice is between white and Negro supremacy. By constant affirmation they have made themselves believe this, and by constant appeals to race animosities they secure a large majority of the white people of the South in support of their position. Matters in the South are rapidly approaching a crisis, in which this question, like that of slavery, will have to be met and settled; and happy will we be if this is effected without bloodshed. Race prejudice exists both North and South, but it is not "instinctive," "inherent," nor "unreconcilable." The same animosities have existed among other races, and among different families of the same race. The hatred of Jews and Samaritans; the bitterness between Christians and Jews, so great that in Europe, for centuries, they would never eat with each other; the feuds of the Scottish clans, and those of the mountain clans here in Kentucky, all prove that there is nothing inherent in human nature to make people of different races hate each other more than those of the same race. Caste in India does not depend on race, and no where is there any manifestation of the caste spirit, except as the result of education. In all the countries of Europe, Negroes are estimated according to character instead of color.

That the two races can live together in all the intimacy of college life, without friction and without scandal, is abundantly evident. For more than fifty years Oberlin has received colored students. They have never been a large percentage of the whole number, and yet many of our leading colored men are graduates of that institution. At first they were objected to by their fellow students, and admitted under protest. Now no one stops to inquire whether his classmate is of the Chinese, African, or Anglo-Saxon race. This is now true of nearly, or quite all of the colleges of the North.

Here at Berea the white and colored students have recited in the same classes and eaten at the same tables for twenty-five years, and with scarcely a ripple of discord. Not more could be said of any college in which but one race was present. For more than two months I have taken my meals in the Ladies' Hall of this institution, together with about 140 students, a majority of whom are colored; and yet I have never seen the slightest manifestation of race feeling; and this among students nearly all of whom are Southern people. In courteous behaviour and true self-respect, they will compare favorably with any similar number of students in the country. Nor has this harmony of the races degenerated into anything immoral or scandalous. No; it is the men who hate the Negro, and not those who respect his manhood, that are the corrupters of virtue and the progenitors of the mixed race in the South.

The church here—the only church in the place—has about an equal number of white and colored members. Of the four deacons, two are white and two are colored. At our communion season yesterday, one white and one colored man waited on those on each side of the house; and this is right in the midst of churches that are made up on the color line, and among a people who have been taught that intimacy with any of the Negro race was not immoral provided they were regarded as menials, but that to eat with them, even at the table of the Lord, is an unutterable disgrace.

There is perhaps no danger to this nation more threatening than this race animosity, and especially the support it gets from the color line among Christians. That there ought to be "no schism in the body" of Christ is a Bible truth assented to by all Christians. Division into denominations is excused on the ground that each thinks itself right, and that the responsibility for the schism rests on the others. But no such plea can be made when those of the same sect are divided, not because of any difference in faith or polity, but simply because of race. The unity of all believers in Christ was forever settled by the vision of Peter (Acts 11: 18), "What God has cleansed, that call not thou common." Manifestly the sin of schism (heresy), which Paul classes with the grossest of crimes (See Gal. 5: 20), is practiced by all these color-line churches.

Nor is there the slightest hope that the worldly and selfish people of our land will take a position in advance of those who profess to be the disciples of Christ. This question rises into transcendent importance to us as a nation. So long as the churches divide on the race line, and refuse to come together, we can never have national unity and peace. We must go back to the barbarism of India, or we must come up to the precepts of the Gospel of Christ. The responsibility for this sin of schism does not rest solely on the white man. The colored brother is perhaps no better Christian than his neighbor. But surely the Christian white people of the South ought to take the initiative and declare that in the house of the Lord there is no distinction except in the relation that men sustain to the Lord Jesus Christ. Every impulse of patriotism, as well as every principle of Christian morality, demand it.

SECRET AND PRIVATE—A DISTINCTION.

Mar. 6, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I write on the way to Washington. Our train has just left Johnstown. While numerous evidences of the dire calamity, which so recently visited this town, remain, it has been largely rebuilt, and life seems to have returned. The many lager-beer signs in sight tell that this destroyer of manhood and virtue did not depart with the flood.

I left Washington one month ago to-day, and as I review my plans and efforts, I feel grateful to God who has so led as to give much success. Over one hundred subscriptions to the "Pole Star" have been added to our list. There has been a general willingness to hear what of truth I might bring, and a good response in support of our temporal needs.

Since last writing I have addressed audiences in Pittsburgh, Parnassus and Elizabeth, Pa., in the Lutheran, Reformed Presbyterian, and United Presbyterian churches; at least two hundred were present at each lecture. Judging by demonstrations and conversations, lodge members were not the least agitated of those present. While in Parnassus and Elizabeth I was the guest of the pastors of the churches in which I spoke,—Rev. E. M. Milligan and Rev. D. H. Pollock. The success of the meetings was due much to their interest.

Some thoughts have been suggested by Rev. E. M. Milligan, which I wish to state in brief for the consideration of friends: That we may antagonize this secret foe in a successful manner, we must start on a sure, logical basis. I have based my lines of argument on the fact that lodges make the wrong use of secrecy, and have not taken the position that secrecy was in every instance wrong. That there is a vast difference in the use of the word "secret" as it appears in Scripture is evident. Christ said, "In secret have I said nothing," and yet commands his followers to pray "in secret." If the term "secret" in both these instances means the same, then the Gospel is contradictory. May we not lay down the following rules that we may know where secrecy with its full import is intended, and where only privacy is suggested.

1. In the Bible they can always be distinguished by the fact that in the one case the thing referred to is condemned. In the other commended.

2. Secrecy involves crime, shame, or deception. Privacy always concerns things lawful and honorable.

3. Secrecy relates to things performed by few, and by them hidden. Privacy to things generally known and recognized.

4. Secrecy relates to that which concerns the public welfare. Privacy to personal interest.

5. Secrecy requires a promise or oath. Privacy needs none.

6. Secrecy denies lawful investigation and ignores public good. Privacy is willingly made public when information is sought by properly constituted authorities, or the public good demands.

I have just read with much interest a sermon preached by Rev. J. M. Adair, in the church of which he was pastor at McAlevys Fort, Pa. It is printed in pamphlet form. Any one desiring a brief, clear answer to the so-called arguments favoring secretism, and a strong argument against it, will find what they desire in this pamphlet.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.

The National Reform Association and the National Christian Association are doing the most needed reform, or home missionary work in our land to-day. Because of the powerful opposition arrayed against them, their agents and lecturers need to be men of strong faith and constant prayer. It is so difficult to find friends ready to open doors for the proclamation of such unpopular truth, and there are so many prejudices, and so much apathy to encounter, that without divine aid how little can be accomplished.

I recently visited Weston, Mo., where Walruff moved his brewery from Lawrence, Kansas. It has several saloons and a distillery, besides the brewery, and about eight churches, but only one resident pastor, and I found that he was preaching away from home. The president of the W. C. T. U. said the women and children run the churches, and in most of them there was service only once a month. There were ten women in the churches for every man. She said the town was overrun with lodges of all kinds, and was surprised when I enquired if the women and children did not run the lodges.

"Why, no!" she replied, "that is where the men are, and there are lodge meetings every night in the week, Sunday night not excepted."

I not unfrequently hear these white ribboners complain of the lodges. They are getting their eyes open to see that what keeps their men folks, not only away from home, but away from lectures and church, is their lodge meetings.

The president of the Rochester, Mo., W. C. T. U. said to me with great earnestness, "Bro. G., I do not know whether you are a Mason or not, but I want to tell you that Freemasonry is one of the greatest evils of our times." Her husband was a Mason, but she had prevailed on him to quit attending the lodge. I was surprised to find country lyceums in Missouri, even where no ray from the Cynosure had ever penetrated, discussing the anti-secret issue. Surely there is "a sound of a going on the tops of the mulberry trees."

I preached last Sabbath to good congregations at Salem and Mt. Bethel, Mo., where very few of the older people were not rebels during the war. Yet they listened kindly to my strongest utterances about the war being a penalty for the sin of slavery. The younger people lean toward prohibition. In a few years when these youth of both sexes cast their ballots, the new South will be a reality.

Rev. G. M. Elliott, our missionary at Selma, Ala., wrote me a private letter recently, in which he says: "This nation must yet pay the debt of crime that it has committed, and is still committing, against the Negro. We who live in the South see the shadow of this coming crisis as it is not possible for you to see it. All the Negro desires is justice and protection for his life and possessions. He has never had either. Our nation is lingering under a curse. The hand of the Almighty is already lifted up. Woe to the land when this uplifted hand shall smite! I can see much in the mild winter throughout the South. We have had no winter at all. I look for the yellow fever to sweep the South the coming summer. This South land has sinned more than ever during the past nine months. Innocent blood has flowed freely. Those who are in favor of right and righteousness have been persecuted. For three transgressions, and for four, God will soon visit our land."

I recalled these startling words of Bro. Elliott, when I heard intelligent Southern men say recently that they were opposed to Senator Blair's Educational bill, because it contemplated the education of the Negro. They believed the only thing to do with the Negro was to keep him down, when they had him down.

I lectured in an Iowa town recently by invitation of the M. E. pastor, but a J. Ellen Foster Union set themselves in opposition, even going so far as to warn a friend who entertained me that I was one of those hateful Prohibitionists. The peculiarity of this Foster faction is that they are intensely partisan, for they can tolerate no one who is not for the Republican party. I regard J. Ellen Foster as the worst enemy of moral reform.

M. A. GAULT.

A DEBATE IN OHIO CENTRAL NORMAL COLLEGE.

PLEASANTVILLE, O., March 3, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have hailed with pleasure the prompt delivery of your paper each week at my table, and have perused its pages carefully. It has been of much value to me in open combat with secret fraternityism.

Our village is held in the oath-bound clasp of K. of P., Odd-fellowship, and Masonry, at which from time to time I have been hurling the darts of reform. But when churches sanction, and business men accept, and educators defend, how mightily the evil may grow!

In November last I held in Chapel Hall of the college, with a fellow teacher who is well up in degrees in a number of lodges, an open discussion which continued four days, upon the merits of secret societies. My opponent being an A. B. in learning, a professor of experience, a titled member of various lodges, and well informed in lodgery, due preparation was made to fight Goliath at his home, and anti-secrecy did not suffer. The brighter side of lodge working was held up in glowing terms. Its history was rehearsed, the interest and result brightly polished. The Bible was used as a reference and history, political and sacred, brought up as testimony.

But, alas! how vain are all the attempts of polished oratory when erroneous fancies are measured by the leveling rule of ideal society, consisting of sound morality, religion and political government. Reformatory cries should be heard everywhere and notes of warning sounded distinctly, before our young men have taken the first great oath which locks their mouths forever from an utterance of true conviction.

How adverse to the inculcating of true morality is that system wherein murder farces are played by gray-haired fathers with all the solemnity of reality! How strikingly contrasted is that religion wherein we are only permitted to be participants under a death penalty should we ever reveal its truths, with that of the Mediator, whose probity is to be proclaimed from the housetop! How strangely opposite is that government wherein men swear to conceal only the truth, to that wherein they swear to reveal the truth only!

Give us purity of morals, of opinion, of religion, and honesty in government, and our society is safe.

THE RIGHT COMBINE.

CHICAGO, March 1, 1890.

The barbers of Chicago are combining to secure a day of rest—a Sabbath. They reason that a day of rest is necessary to man and beast, for health, for social enjoyment, for religious purposes. I am glad the barbers are asking this boon. Men need rest, change, social and home influences, and they need to cultivate the religious element of their nature.

But this is not true of the barbers alone. It is just as true of the butchers, bakers, milkmen, grocers, and street-car employes. Let me ask, Bro. Editor, why the masses should be so anxious for recreation as to deprive a large number of their fellow men of a day of rest, by keeping them running street-cars all through the Sabbath day? Why should the Christian public (professedly Christian at least) be so strenuous to attend church at certain given places that they deprive a large number of men of the privilege of church attendance altogether in order that they may attend? Why cannot everybody purchase groceries on Saturday, and give the grocers and grocery clerks a Sabbath for rest, worship and enjoyment? Why should we be so particular to have our roasts fresh on Sunday that we rob the butcher of his Sabbath day and the privilege of partaking of "the meat that endureth unto eternal life?" Why should it be reserved to professedly Christian America to doom all the employe classes to ceaseless toil, while England and Canada are Sabbath-keeping countries? Why cannot we keep milk on ice, or meat on ice, as well as the milkman and butcher? Or if we do not take ice why can we not boil our milk on Saturday and thus ensure its sweetness? And why cannot we cook our fowl or roast on Saturday for the Sabbath dinner?

I believe, Bro. Editor, that these questions can be intelligently answered in the interest of a Sabbath day. And believing the Sabbath to be one of the bulwarks of our continued existence as a free people, I urge the intelligent consideration of these questions.

THE RIVER MISSION CHAPEL.

WHEELING, W. Va.

The boat-builders, after having a general description of what we want, have just shown us drawings and figures. The chapel is to be 30 by 110 feet, will seat 600 people, and cost $1,500 without seats. We can use temporary seats till we are able to buy chairs. We have $300 that has been contributed by friends of the enterprise, and can pay $500 ourselves. This leaves only $700 yet to be raised. If we can have this by the 1st of April, the boat can be launched by the 1st of May. Shall it be done? Our hearts have almost wept at times as we opened letters and found liberal contributions from persons who were not able to pay so much. Bro. and Sister Shepardson, with scanty support for themselves, sent us $5 from Louisiana. A widow sent us $1, which she obtained by selling the eggs her hens laid on Sunday. Some have done well by soliciting small sums from their neighbors.

We are anxious to get into the work with the chapel. Reader, what can you do to help this work along?

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM A PARISHIONER OF DR. COLVER.

Nathaniel Colver was my pastor for several years, and was my favorite preacher. I remember him as a seceding Mason during the agitation arising from the abduction and murder of Wm. Morgan. It confounds me as I compare the relation of the Baptist pulpit in respect to Freemasonry in 1827, with what it seemeth to be at the present time. Then Baptist ministers were called upon to renounce Masonry. They complied or they were found out of Baptist fellowship. In 1880 it is not so. We seldom hear the candidate for either ordination or membership in the Baptist family plied with questions like the following: Are you a member of a secret order? If so, do you purpose to leave that society in becoming a Baptist.—A. B. G.

THE LODGE SAYS JOIN OR STARVE.

I am expecting to follow my trade of a carpenter, and already there seems a cloud rising of a conflict with the "union." If I cannot have work, or continue to keep it, without uniting with an organization, then I will go without work. I believe in freedom of action of whatever character. I believe in loving my neighbor, and to do that I must act out the motto, "Live and let live." All "unions" are un-Christian in character. I pray the Lord to extend the influence of the Cynosure till all such organizations are done away.—W. H. BAUSER, Pueblo, Col.

READ, REFLECT AND REFRAIN.

Having seen a copy or two of the Christian Cynosure, and read its contents, I am surprised at the exposure it gives of the secret orders. I was not so aware of their evil tendencies. I have been asked to join some of them, but shall refrain from doing so.—THOMAS E. KERLINGER, Stewartstown, Pa.

DR. LORIMER AND HIS MISHAP.

Dr. Lorimer is well known as a prominent Freemason. He gives his personal endorsement and support to that institution. He does this to the great grief of his brethren in the ministry. Moreover, he has been known to make use of the sacred desk and the Lord's day to appeal, by Masonic signs, to his "brethren," many of whom are avowed infidels, and a majority make no profession of Christianity. Dr. Lorimer knows that, together with all other absurdities and abominations, Freemasonry enjoins a religious worship, from which the name of his Divine Master is carefully excluded. We regard such endorsement as worse, if it were possible, than being overtaken by a temptation to use intoxicating drinks, as the Catholics claim he did at Holyoke. It is quite probable that the doctor does not view it in this light, but yet it is not more difficult to prove that Masonry is an un-Christian and a false religion, than to prove that the papacy, which he so bitterly denounces, is out of harmony with the Gospel of Christ. Nor will his plea of sincerity be worth any more than the equally valid plea of the vast number of learned and good people who have been sincere papists.—H. H. HINMAN.

THE WASHINGTON SOUVENIR.

Many thanks for the picture of portraits. I will get it framed, so my children may read every day what great and noble men think of secret societies. Wishing you the blessing of God in your work of opening the eyes of the blind in the South and in all lands.—MRS. T. PEARCE, Iona, Ont.

LITERATURE.

Three very timely and important subjects are treated in the March Century by specialists. The first is the subject of Municipal Government, Dr. Albert Shaw describing the workings of the local government of Glasgow, one of the world's model cities in this respect. The subject of Irrigation is treated in the first of a series of three articles by Professor Powell, the Director of the United States Geological Survey. This paper is entitled "The Irrigable Lands of the Arid Region." The third great subject is discussed in a paper by Professor Fisher on "The Nature and Method of Revelation"—the concluding one in his very timely series. In this number begins the most authentic and original account yet published of the "Prehistoric Remains in the Ohio Valley." In the next number of the Century, Professor Putnam will describe the famous "Serpent Mound." The number contains also the second group of illustrated "Letters from Japan;" an article on "Gloucester Cathedral" by Mrs. van Rensselaer, with pictures by Joseph Pennell, and an article by Mr. Wilson, the photographer, depicting "Some Wayside Places in Palestine," which are referred to in current International Sunday-school Questions; also a striking paper on "The Sun-Dance of the Sioux," by Frederick Schwatka, with pictures by Frederick Remington, and a curious study by Professor Wood of Philadelphia, on the subject of "Memory."

In the March St. Nicholas Mrs. Preston tells of "George and Nellie Custis," the children of Mount Vernon, who seem to have been not so essentially different from our own boys and girls. The article gives us a pleasant home view of the great Washington himself, as loving grandfather, courteous host and careful landed proprietor. Some old portraits are reproduced as illustrations. There are three natural history articles: Mrs. Sandham describes "The Crows' Military Drill" preparatory to migration; Ernest E. Thompson protests against that slanderous name, "The Screech-Owl;" and E. M. Harding has a timely sketch called "Mother Nature's Babes in the Wood," wherein the preservation and provisioning of the germs of spring vegetation are described clearly, scientifically and in the interesting way which, to say the least, not all botanists attain. A doll, seventy years old, is described by Margaret W. Bisland; a true, but most marvelous, escape from a cyclone's fury is written and vouched for by M. Louise Ford; and some suggestions for making kites fly properly are offered by Harper Pennington.

Sabbath Reading, the excellent paper issued from the office of the Weekly Witness, of New York, deserves a cordial support from every Christian parent, and especially from those who are urging the importance of Sabbath reform. The variety and excellence of its contents ensures its popularity with people of good taste and candor, and its price, 75 cents a year, makes it an investment of but one cent and a half weekly, a trifle not worth mentioning when the real value of the paper is considered.

The Converted Catholic presents strong articles on "The Primacy of St. Peter," by Rev. Thos. Connellan, late a priest of Rome, and on "Was the Apostle Peter ever at Rome," by Rev. Mason Gallagher. Rev. George C. Needham writes in his usually entertaining manner of some of his experiences in Roman Catholic evangelization. "Romanism and the Republic," by the editor Rev. James O'Connor, is an able presentation of the Catholic usurpation in America.

In the Evangelical Repository, Dr. Wm. Wishart, of Monmouth, writes on "The Doctrine of Gratuitous Justification Conducive to Holiness." Dr. W. J. Reid, of the United Presbyterian, opens on "Dr. Thomas Guthrie as a Preacher." Dr. Carson of Xenia and Dr. Irons of Muskingum College are among the contributors to the S. S. lesson notes.

Vick's beautiful magazine always has its practical side. "Practical Horticulture" opens the March number, while articles on "Cross-fertilized Corn," "A Beginner in Fruit-growing," "Spraying Apparatus," "Pruning Roses," are interspersed with beautiful illustrations and timely talks on roses, hydrangeas and other floral attractions.

It is rumored that the first volume of Bismarck's unpublished correspondence, extending from 1862 to 1880, is about to be issued, and that the second volume will appear soon after the first.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 1890.

EGYPTIAN MASONRY.

Miss Amelia B. Edwards, "the most learned woman in the world," is lecturing through the country on Egypt. At her Oberlin lecture, among other evidences of her profound scholarship, she exhibited to her audience the latest Masonic discovery, and expressed the hope that the Masons present would be interested in it. It consisted of the working tools of a Mason, specimens of materials, and vessels for holding the "oil, corn and wine." All were exquisitely modeled, and of so small a size that they could be laid on a sheet of letter-paper. This, coming so soon after Prof. King's lecture, is doubtless the Masonic answer! How wonderfully convincing!

A few years back Lieutenant Gorringer, of the U. S. Navy, brought from Egypt the first Masonic find. Under one of the old obelisks there was discovered (it is said) a square, compass and representation of an apron. This proved beyond all controversy that speculative masonry was of ancient origin. But it occurred to some outsiders that there was nothing very wonderful in stone-cutters having the implements of their art, and that supposing the find to be real, it proved nothing in reference to modern Masonry. Now, it seems that a more elaborate "discovery" is demanded. "The most learned woman in the world" comes to the rescue. It is suggested that she send for and exhibit the newly-discovered tibia of Hiram, king of Tyre. She should also send and get the Masonic "stone of foundation," which, according to Masonry, was in the possession of Adam in Paradise, was used by Abel in the construction of the altar on which he offered the acceptable offering, and also by Seth and Enoch for a similar purpose. It is said that it descended to King Solomon, and is now in the archives of Masonry, having on it the "ineffable name." If this does not convince the world that Masonry is the genuine religion, the mission of Miss Edwards, who has been made a dupe or tool by the craft, will have proved a failure.

THE ROYAL ARCH TRAGEDY.

On another page we reproduce the story of the killing of Rev. J. W. Johnston, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church of Huntington, West Virginia, while undergoing initiation in the Royal Arch chapter of that place. It would have seemed that the wide publication of this story, in a form similar to that of the Democratic Cincinnati Enquirer, from which we reprint, would have given ample circulation to this affair, so lamentable in itself, but in its instruction and warning so providential. Repeated calls for the number of the Cynosure first containing the story, have warranted a republication, and since we have announced this intention such orders have come in that the present edition, though of extra size, is already engaged before the last forms go to press, and to meet the call our publisher will issue a tract of ten or twelve pages.

This fact is in itself interesting, as it shows the constant and extended use made of the affair to refute Masonic falsehoods. The first of these was the statement sent out by gentlemen calling themselves the "High Priest," "King," "Scribe" and "Secretary" of the Huntington chapter. They say, and the Associated Press dispatches repeated the very words: "No blame attaches to any one for this very unfortunate accident, and no persons can be more deeply grieved than are the members of the Masonic fraternity." There is no blame, possibly, in the sense that there was any malicious intent about the occurrence; but there is a blame which attaches, not only to the immediate actors, but to the whole Masonic order as well. If children play with fire and burn down buildings and destroy life, nobody is so morally stupid as not to blame them. Nobody was ever killed at a horse race, or in a theater, without blame attaching to the performers, and to all who aid and abet them. Why? Because the loss of life or property comes, not from a mischance in the management of some enterprise for the public good, or for public necessity, but from a performance where grown men are spending their time and wasting their substance in folly and dissipation. No man, whether he is a preacher or not, saint or sinner, has any moral right to put his life in jeopardy for any such stupendous folly as pretending to hunt and scratch about in a dark room for the Ark of the Covenant. It is especially for a preacher not only folly, but blasphemy; because the Ark was the most sacred portion of the whole furniture of the ancient Jewish church, and the very touch was punished with death.

The second falsehood put forth by these Masons of Huntington was that "this sad accident to Bro. Johnston occurred in the performance of rites in no way derogatory to the dignity of his profession." This is a lie point-blank, and no honest Mason can read it without confessing the fact in his soul. If the word is severe we cannot help it: the blame is upon the men who uphold such mockery and blasphemy as the pretended death and resurrection of Hiram Abiff; the play of the "Burning Bush;" the scene of the Royal Arch to learn humility and of the "Rough and Rugged Road;" the mock-solemn prayers, mouthed, perhaps, by a "chaplain" whose ordinary speech is vile with blasphemy; the indecent strippings, the oaths, and the whole performance said to be provided to teach men wisdom and morality. The "profession of a clergyman" would be absolutely stripped of its dignity, and degraded into a by-word and hissing, if a preacher should go through such ceremonies in the presence of his congregation. The minister who should dare go through the Masonic rites in public would be hooted out of every Christian pulpit.

It has also been stated by Masons that there was no such scene in the degrees as that in which this minister was killed. Perhaps in certain exigencies, where the construction of the building would not allow of a lower room, some expedient has been contrived to answer the purpose. We know that a Royal Arch chapter was years ago started in Wheaton, Ill. The rooms were over a store, and the descent into the cavern under Solomon's temple was not possible. That chapter was long since removed to another town, where a hold could be had—into which we hope it has gone for burial. This affair is, therefore, not only a providential warning, but also a refutation of falsehood and a confirmation to all the world of the truth of what we have said for years of the character of Masonic rites. It should be noticed that the account does not agree in detail with the picture. The latter represents the traditional method of performing this religious rite of Freemasonry. There are unnumbered variations from the letter of the law in this as in other parts of the lodge ceremonies, as can be proved in many instances from the secret society press.

If Masons do not kill men outside the lodge any more, they do within. Since this Huntington affair we have learned by correspondence of the death of Judge White of Cooperstown, New York. About the year 1863 he told his wife on leaving home that he was to be initiated in a Masonic lodge. Late the same night his dead body was brought home. The bearers told the horror-stricken wife that they found him lying senseless on the sidewalk a short distance from his own door. She did not credit the story, and recovered strength to tell them, "He left home to join your lodge and you have murdered him!" Friends demanded an inquest, and during the inquiry it was proved that during the initiation he was accidentally killed.

Our lecturer, Bro. Hawley, was lately told by relatives of the killing of a man in the third degree, when the blanket was carelessly held and the master's mallet knocked the wretched candidate so that he fell over it and broke his neck.

No member of the order, who has his right reason, will attempt to deny or confute the confession of so eminent a Mason as Enoch T. Carson of Cincinnati. Study carefully his words as reported by the Enquirer. The taking of Masonic degrees is dangerous to human life, as well as to moral character. Men are dropped sixty feet, he says, in some spectacular initiations. He himself remembers a number of fatalities. He always looks out for a man with heart disease, lest death should result from the initiation. Now with such well-known instances before them, and with the ever-present fact that these ceremonies are shameful folly, unholy mockery and blasphemy, of no use to any living thing, man or beast, it is a warrantable inference that when men are killed in Masonic initiations the order is guilty of the crime of murder. A Springfield, O., paper surmises that a minister might stumble, fall and break his neck going into the pulpit, and so exonerates the lodge. There is no reason or justice in the comparison. And, besides, if one minister after another should so break his neck the law would step in and have new steps put in, or lower the pulpit to the floor.

This leads us to the last point. This minister was killed without inquest. As we have said before, the worst feature of the affair is the indifference of the public press and officials. When men are killed in open day by trains, by explosions, or other accidents, the coroner suddenly becomes an important functionary. No one moves till he has made a legal investigation. But here is a lodge, meeting in the dark, with the public shut out, that, according to Enoch T. Carson, can kill men with impunity, and goes on year after year putting men through secret rites which endanger their lives. If the Baptist, or Disciple, or Dunker church should as frequently cause the death of people in immersion there would be an outcry that the law officers would hear, and especially if the ceremony was performed in secret and at night. But the lodge defies law and braves public scorn, and will continue to do so until God shall smite the iniquitous system again and again; until the church shall shut her gates upon it, and the law shall compel its false rites and false oaths to cease.

COLLEGE ROWDYISM.

Among the most important steps of a young man's life is the one that takes him from the home of his boyhood into a college, where new acquaintances will be made, new friendships formed, and new habits acquired. Here he will prepare for his life work, and failure here will run as failure in some form all through his life. In too many of our colleges recreation is made the business, and fun has degenerated into rowdyism, and in such cases nothing but failure can be the result. In many colleges, too, rowdyism is mistaken for class loyalty, and the annual struggle for supremacy on Washington's birthday, or other occasions, makes up a regular part in college life.

In the recent 22nd of February class-fight at Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind., six students were seriously injured and several others cut and bruised. At Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., the fiercest struggle for years was the one of last month. In the melee chair and seat legs were used for weapons, and more than one head was cracked and noses made to bleed. The row was continued all night and the following day, and the interference of the police armed with revolvers could not stop it.

The president of the freshman class at the Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., was abducted by the sophomore from the campus just when his presence was essential to the success of a freshman banquet. When his humiliation was complete he was returned, having previously taken any particulars of my disappearance to any person whatsoever except at the bidding of the person holding the duplicate of this oath." The duplicate is held by the ringleader of the sophomore who abducted him. The freshmen were much wrought up by the affair and made an attack upon the other class as they marched for a train to attend a banquet, and covered them with soot and asafetida.

Professors Ferry and Trowbridge of Kalamazoo College were kidnapped by about twenty students last week, who afterward gave an oyster supper in honor of their victims. The ringleaders were two seniors. After deliberating nearly a week, during which time the institution was in a demoralized state, the faculty expelled one and suspended the other twenty young men engaged in this disgraceful scrape. The other students threaten to leave if the sentence is carried out: and what is the most serious consideration the two teachers concerned are said to be on good terms with the culprits and regret the sentence. It is worthy of notice that these two, who seem to be in collusion with interests hostile to the institution, did not sign the call for the Chicago Conference on the lodge along with others of the faculty.

Every year a few run to an excess of folly and smirch with imbecility, brutality and sensationalism the good name of some of the best and oldest institutions of learning in the land. It is needless to say that all these things are planned in secret, and that oaths, so far as possible, cover up the perpetrators. College secret societies flourish in several, possibly all, the institutions noted above, and supply the appetite and ambition which can only be appeased by some disgraceful fracas; and as in the Cornell murder case in 1873, professors and students combine under shelter of these fraternities to shield guilt and perpetuate the power of secretism.

—Bro. Warrington, of the Psalm Singer, endorses Mrs. J. Ellen Foster and her National Crusader Non-Partisan Women's Christian Temperance League. He should have attended one or two of the last National W. C. T. U. meetings, and taken a personal observation of both sides. Bro. Gault, who writes in another column, can give him some information.

—A national conference on the principles of civil government will be held in Washington, D. C., April 1, 2, 3, under the auspices of the National Reform Association. This association is organized to maintain all existing Christian features in the American Government, to develop these features into consistency and completeness, and to place around them whatever legal and constitutional safeguards experience may prove to be necessary.

—The ladies of the First Congregational church of this city devote their prayer meeting on the last Tuesday in March to the Conference of April 22, praying for the blessing of God upon it. Why should not the godly women in hundreds of churches follow this excellent example. For the encouragement of others please send word to the Cynosure of such an appointment. The ladies of the college church, Wheaton, have such a meeting this week.

—Rev. Frank P. Woodbury, formerly of Rockford, Ill., and more recently from Minneapolis, has been appointed one of the secretaries of the American Missionary Association. We fear this appointment means a change in the position of this beloved society. Dr. Woodbury may have changed his views respecting the lodge, but ten years ago he had the Knight Templar Masons parading and strutting in his church at Rockford, while he preached a sermon for them.

—From an article in the Wheaton Illinoian we learn that the proposed addition to the buildings of Wheaton College will be 40 by 54 feet, and will be four stories high. The lower floor will be devoted to natural sciences, and will provide a class-room, cabinet and laboratory; the second to the library; the third for a commercial room, and enlargement of the chapel; the fourth will furnish two halls for the young men's literary societies. The expense of these improvements will be about $10,000. Mr. Marder of this city has, through the agency of Mr. Amos Dresser, Jr., donated a printing outfit to the college, with which students can learn the printing business.

—Rev. A. M. Richardson, chairman of the Kansas State Prohibition Central Committee, kindly corrects a note in our last issue on page 7, which says that of the 1,440 Kansas teachers, 439 declared in favor of prohibition. The fact is the vote of the teachers stood 1,200 to 1 for prohibition. Kansas school teachers know a good thing when they see it, and are willing to stand up for it. Bro. Richardson closes his letter with a cheering word for our cause. "Please add my name," he says, "to the call for the Chicago Conference. I am opposed to oath-bound secret societies, first, last and all the time; never joined one in my life. I believe them wrong in principle and dangerous in practice."

—The Daily Telegraph of St. Johns, New Brunswick, of the 3rd inst., reports a sermon by Rev. A. J. McFarland of the Reformed Presbyterian church of that city, on mongrel religions, from the text 2 Kings 17: 33: "They feared the Lord and served their own gods." As examples of such religion in our own day the speaker pointed out Freemasonry, Orangeism, the papacy, and in short any attempted mixture of truth and falsehood in acts of religious worship. On the same day and in the same city, an M. E. preacher was discoursing in fulsome terms to the Odd-fellows, and toning up his remarks with such falsehoods as that Noah and his family were a secret society, and that the Odd-fellow obligation was the strongest that could bind men together in helpfulness. He no doubt spoke truth, however, when he said the principles of this order were derived from the Freemasons.

—The Boston Globe of the 4th inst. reports the meeting of the Baptist pastors on the day before. Rev. R. D. Grant, who has just been called to the Harvard Street church, in speaking of the good work being done in his congregation at Beverly, said that the greatest opposition he had experienced was from the secret societies, especially Freemasonry. He did not know whether his brother clergymen would agree with him or not, but he firmly and steadfastly believed that Masonry is the greatest evil Christian workers have to contend against at the present time. A minister present, whose name the press report very carefully conceals, took exception; but Rev. Mr. Barrett, of Medford, agreed with Mr. Grant that secret societies were a great evil. Thus the great discussion goes on among the pastors of Boston.

—Bro. F. J. Davidson, of New Orleans, yet maintains his Christian testimony against secret societies. He says in the last number of his little paper: "I am well known all over this country as an anti-secret-society man, but it seems that because I have been called to, and accepted, the pastorate of a feeble church, that the intention of some is to whip me into union with the secret lodge element or break up my church. I want to say if Jesus, whose servant I am, is not able to save and prosper his church without desecrating his house by inviting out uniformed lodges and bands of music to build his church, it ought to fall. The public is therefore hereby notified that the Freemasons laying the corner-stone of the Old Baptist church has not dampened my opposition to lodgery, and my position respecting all oath-bound secret orders is unchanged."

MARRIED.

On March 6th inst. by Rev. W. T. Meloy, D. D., at the bride's residence, 821 Warren avenue, Chicago, Rev. J. P. Richards, of Wheaton, Illinois, and Mrs. Annette P. Dobbin, M. D., Chicago. The congratulations of the Cynosure. This is the first instance, we believe, of the marriage of any member of the N. C. A. Board during term of service.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE VALUE OF THE LOBBY.

Have you heard of the tricks which the Free Traders recently played on the Protectionists at the capital? The Protectionists have for several months advertised a convention. A few days before the date announced for it, the Free Traders sent two of their leaders, not known as such in this community, to take advantage of the advertising of the other side. They announced a meeting for an earlier day in the same week to discuss "Protection," naturally giving the impression that it was the long-expected convention. They invited the chief Protectionist in the city to preside at their meeting, giving him the idea that it was on his side. He consented. Then the Free Traders, thinking that there might be a scene when he discovered that he had been tricked, attempted to provide a refuge by saying, casually, "There may be some speaking on the other side," which aroused his suspicion and led him to decline. Nothing daunted, they continued to announce an "impartial discussion," even after every person who had any right to speak for the Protectionists had positively declined. Such Protectionists as were tricked into attending the meeting by the misleading notices, not thinking it wise to attempt any opposition without a leader, allowed the Free Trade resolutions to pass unanimously. The Washington papers did not discover, at least did not publish, the deception, and the campaign went on. The Free Traders next circulated a leaflet, headed, "Freedom Association," and with it a petition, headed, "The American Constitution Must be Preserved," with the numerous quotations from great statesmen about taxation, that gave no clue to the fact, gently hinted at in the middle of the long petition, where but few would read it, that the petition was really against Protection. This petition was subsequently presented to a committee of Congress as meaning, "The American Tariff Must be Destroyed." They also circulated a newspaper, headed, "The American Sentinel," devoted to the defence of American institutions, "hiding the fact that it was devoted to Free Trade. They also announced public "Readings," inducing people to attend on the supposition that it was a miscellaneous entertainment, and then devoted most of the time to reading literature against Protection. These readings were published and sold from house to house as "Readings for the Home Circle," the buyers discovering too late that it was a Free Trade argument in disguise. They also sold, from door to door, a large book called, "The Marvel of Nations," giving the impression that it was a general book of history, whereas it was simply a covert argument for their political views. "Which things are an allegory." For "Protectionists" read American Sabbath Union; for "Free Traders" read Seventh-Day Adventists; for "Freedom Association" read Religious Liberty Association. The "Readings" are "Bible Readings for the Home Circle." This is the worst specimen of low politics that Washington has ever seen. Any political party that would duplicate it would find such deceptive sheets its winding sheets. The Seventh-Day Adventist organ, recently quoting a statement of the Philadelphia Sabbath Association in regard to the great number of liquor's "Liberty Leagues" in that city, said in substance: "How impossible for a Sabbath Association to compete with such corrupt politics!" Were it not that the Seventh-Day Adventists are on the same side of the fight against Sunday laws and the Sunday closing of saloons, we should return the compliment by saying that the Seventh-Day Adventists could match them with their own weapons.

The year thus far in Washington, as elsewhere, has been unusually fertile in proposed reforms. There are two Sunday Rest bills, one in the Senate and the other in the House—the latter for the District of Columbia, the former for all who are under the jurisdiction of Congress in this matter, that are now pending. Petitions representing more than two millions of people have been presented to this Congress, asking for such laws as are proposed in both bills, in addition to ten millions of petitioners who appealed to the last Congress on this same subject. The most influential of the new endorsements of the petitions are: The Southern Presbyterian Assembly, the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly, the Southern Baptist Convention, the Lutheran General Synod, the National Congregational Council, the Episcopal Council of Virginia, the Montana and Minnesota Methodist Conferences. Other pending bills seek to shut out lottery advertisements from the mails, and undesirable immigrants from the country, and whisky from the savage races and the capital, and ignorance from all our States, and injustice from all our publishing houses.

Whether any or all these measures will pass the First and Second House, depends very largely upon the "Third House," to which all the people that are not in the other two houses should belong. This is a letter from Washington, but more important are letters to Washington. No doubt all these reform bills would pass, if all who believe in them would elect themselves to the "Third House," and send their approval in a snowstorm of letters. The Congressmen get letters enough, but not of the right kind. A letter about any project from a person not financially interested in the "spoils," is "as rare as a day in June"—that is, there are not more than thirty such in a Congressman's big mail in a year. The man who has money interest at stake lobbies, but the man that has only moral interest in a project is often too lazy even to write. Well-written letters have one kind of value, but still more influential are letters whose spelling and penmanship indicate that nothing but great interest in the subject induces the writer, one of the people, to send it. You cannot better invest a quarter of an hour in reforms than by writing two letters at once, expressing in your own way—no clippings—that you desire your Congressman and Senator to help on these reforms. While you are about it add another quarter hour to tell your Representative and Senator in your State legislature what you desire with reference to the reforms that are there pending.

THE HOME.

IS THAT ALL.

Sometimes I catch sweet glimpses of His face,
But that is all.
Sometimes He looks on me and seems to smile,
But that is all.
Sometimes He speaks a passing word of peace,
But that is all.
Sometimes I think I hear His loving voice
Upon me call.
And is this all He meant when He spoke,
"Come unto Me?"
Is there no deeper, more enduring rest
In Him for thee?
Is there no steadier light for thee in Him?
Oh, come and see!
Oh, come and see! Oh, look, and look again!
All shall be right;
Oh, taste His love, and see that it is good,
Thou child of night!
Oh, trust thou, trust thou in His grace and power!
Then all is bright.
Nay, do not wrong Him by thy heavy thoughts,
But love His love.
Do thou full justice to His tenderness,
His mercy prove;
Take Him for what He is, oh, take Him all,
And look above!
Then shall thy tossing soul find anchorage
And steadfast peace;
Thy love shall rest in His; thy weary doubts
Forever cease;
Thy heart shall find in Him and in His grace
Its rest and bliss.
Christ and His love shall be thy blessed all
Forevermore!
Christ and His light shall shine on all the ways
Forevermore!
Christ and His peace shall keep thy troubled soul
Forevermore! —Bonar.

THE PERFECT WORKMAN AND THE PERFECT WORK.

For years he had served as parish clerk in a church in Devonshire; a church which had its sisterhood, the most ornate of rituals, and whence more than one of its clergy had seceded to Rome; but the frequent services, the gorgeous vestments, the splendid music, had, even in health, alike failed to satisfy him, and at length he was laid upon what was destined to become his death-bed, and had time to think upon things which concerned his soul.

Now it had happened that as he had passed along the road one day, he had heard a laboring man from the same town preaching, and standing to listen to what the preacher had to say, he was so much impressed by what he heard that he determined that if ever he found himself on his death-bed he would send for him. And now the hour had arrived, for the presentiment of his fast approaching end pressed heavily upon him, and accordingly he sent a message to the man whom he had heard preach, asking him to come and see him, as he was very ill; and it was not long before the preacher, much wondering at what the summons might mean, was standing at the bedside of the sick man.

"Sit down," said the clerk. "I am glad that you have come, for I feel that I am dying, and I want to speak to you about my soul."

"About your soul?" said the preacher in much surprise; "but haven't you sent to your clergyman to speak to you about that?"

"No," said the clerk, "I haven't; and now I'll tell you why I sent for you. I once heard you preach, and I said to myself, 'That's the man I should like to have speak to me if I were on my dying bed.' And now here I am—not long, I fear, for this world, and I have sent to ask you what I must do to be saved."

For a moment there was silence in the room; but it was soon broken, for the preacher, who had been gazing about, suddenly remarked, "That's a nice cabinet you've got over yonder."

"Well," said the clerk, "it's a pretty good one, I believe, though I shouldn't be the one to say so, for none ever put a touch to it but myself."

"And good work, too," said the preacher; "but I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll just bring my tools round one of these nights, and put a few finishing touches to it."

"It is kind enough of you to say so, but, indeed, you mustn't," said the clerk; "and I'll tell you why. You see, when I'm gone, I want my family to have something to remember me by.

Now, I've done every stroke to the cabinet myself, and that'll just be its value in their eyes. With them it will be the workman that gave value to the work, and it wouldn't be the same thing to them at all if a stranger put a finger on it."

"I quite understand," said the preacher, and added, "just now you asked me what you were to do to be saved. Let me just say that there's nothing that you can do that could ever save your soul. But the Lord Jesus Christ has done a work, and it's a perfect work; for when he was expiring he said, 'It is finished,' so that there is nothing left for you to do. Now the One who did that work was a perfect workman, for he was none other than the Son of God, and it is his person that gives the value to the work. And just as when you are gone the value of the cabinet in your family's eyes will be the fact that you made it, so what gives value in God's eyes to the work which Christ has wrought out is that his Son has done it. You couldn't do the work, and I couldn't do the work, which would fit us for God's presence; for we are sinners, and so are imperfect workmen. Christ is a perfect workman, and has done a perfect work—so perfect that God has been satisfied and glorified by it, and by virtue of it he can offer a free pardon to you."

Like showers upon a thirsty soil fell this message on the ears of the poor dying clerk, and he whose life had been taken up with shadows grasped with eagerness the substance, and rested his soul's eternal salvation, not on aught that he could do, but upon what Christ had already done; and so, when the summons came, he passed down to the river which leads to the gates of the Celestial City undismayed.—John Fort.

AN INCIDENT IN THE LIFE OF W. H. MILBURN, THE BLIND CHAPLAIN.

The "blind man eloquent," who has been elected for the fifth time chaplain of the House of Representatives at Washington, has been a prominent figure for more than forty years. The following account of his first election was written long ago by T. B. Thorpe, Esq., for a New York journal:

"In the fall of 1845 he made his appearance in the Northern and Eastern States as an advocate for the cause of education in the West, and was everywhere received with enthusiasm, not only on account of his intellectual qualities, but also for his amiable disposition and eminent social virtues. On his journey North Mr. Milburn found himself on board of an Ohio river steamer, on which were three hundred passengers. From the number of days the passengers had been together, Mr. Milburn had become pretty well informed of their character, and he found most prominent among the gentlemen were a number of members of Congress on their way to Washington. These gentlemen had attracted Mr. Milburn's attention on account of their exceptional habits. On the arrival of Sabbath morning, it was rumored through the boat that a minister was on board, and Mr. Milburn, who had up to this time attracted no attention, was hunted up and called upon to 'give a discourse.' He promptly consented, and in due time commenced divine service. The members of Congress, to whom we have alluded, were among the congregation, and by common consent had possession of the chairs nearest to the preacher. Mr. Milburn gave an address suitable to the occasion, full of eloquence and pathos, and was listened to throughout with the most intense interest. At the conclusion he stopped short, and turning his face, now beaming with fervent zeal, towards the 'honorable gentlemen,' he said: 'Among the passengers on this steamer are a number of members of Congress; from their position they should be exemplars of good morals and dignified conduct, but from what I have heard of them, they are not so. The Union of these States, if dependent on such guardians, would be unsafe, and all the high hopes I have of the future of my country would be dashed to the ground. These gentlemen, for days past, have made the air heavy with profane conversation, have been constant patrons of the bar, and encouragers of intemperance; nay, more, the night, which should be devoted to rest, has been dedicated to the horrid vices of gambling, profanity, and drunkenness. And,' continued Mr. Milburn, with the solemnity of a man who spoke as if by inspiration, 'there is but one chance of salvation for these great sinners in high places, and that is, to humbly repent of their sins, call on the Saviour for forgiveness, and reform their lives.'

"As might be supposed, language so bold from a delicate stripling, scarcely 22 years of age, had a startling effect. The audience separated, and the preacher returned to his state-room to think upon what he had said. Conscious, after due reflection, that he had only done his duty, he determined at all hazards to maintain his position, even at the expense of being rudely assailed, if not lynched. While thus cogitating a rap was heard at his state-room door, a gentleman entered and stated that he came with a message from the members of Congress—that they had listened to his remarks, and in consideration of his boldness and his eloquence, they desired him to accept a purse of money which they had made up among themselves, and also their best wishes for his success and happiness through life.

"But this chivalrous feeling, so characteristic of Western men when they meet bold thought and action combined, carried these gentlemen to more positive acts of kindness. Becoming acquainted with Mr. Milburn, when they separated from him they offered the unexpected service of making him Chaplain to Congress—a promise which they not only fulfilled, but through long years that have passed away since that event, have cherished for the 'blind preacher' the warmest personal regard, and stand ever ready to support him by word and deed."

A BOY'S PARADISE.

The father mentioned in the following incident belongs to the class of people who believe that "boys can be poked away anywhere," and in planning his new house no provision was made for the room which his young sons were to occupy. Fortunately, the lads had a grandmother who knew that an attractive room, all his own, has a wonderful power to keep boys indoors in the evening, and the way in which she converted the father to her belief is thus described:

"David," she said to her son, "who is that large chamber for with the bay-window and two mantlepieces?"

"For company, mother," was the reply.

"What company? I didn't know you expected any," said the shrewd old lady.

"Oh, for anyone who happens along! By-and-by Emma will leave school, and have company, you know. James's wife and cousin Hepsy come down twice a year to shop, and always stop here a night or two."

"But your own boys come here to sleep three hundred and sixty five nights in the year, and have a thousand times the claim on you that any 'company' have."

"Yes?"

"What arrangements have you made for them?"

And the father repeated the remark he had made to his easy wife so often, that "boys didn't care, and that they could cuddle down and sleep anywhere."

"But these boys must not sleep anywhere after the new house is done. Unless you divide that long spare chamber into moderate-sized ones, and give it to one of them, I shall settle them in the room you have planned for me, and make my home with Catherine. She has plenty of room, and is always urging me to come to her. I will not crowd your sons out of a room."

David Lane loved his mother, so the result was that the long "spare chamber" was finished so as to meet the wants of the boys.

Two happier boys never lived than these two when the time came for furnishing and ornamenting that room! Grandma took the matter into her own hands, and said they should have everything to their mind, so long as they kept within bounds.

"Now, what do you want in your room?" she asked when the house was nearly done.

"In the first place, we don't want a carpet, because somebody would be always telling us not to kick holes in it. We don't want black walnut furniture, nor a big looking-glass, nor china vases, nor anything grand that scratches or tears, or breaks," Morton said.

"Well, say what you do want, then," said their grandmother.

"Well, grandma, we want an oiled floor, and two of your great braided mats; and an open fireplace, with your brass andirons from the garret; and a big hearth, where we can pop corn and roast nuts; and we want bright wall-paper, with pictures of the country; and two little iron bedsteads, with blue spreads; four chairs, painted blue; a glass case for our stuffed birds; shelves for our books, and lots of hooks to hang our things on. These, with the old sitting-room lounge, and the old easy chairs, will make us the most comfortable boys in the world."

Before the month closed, the "Boy's Paradise" was complete, and a score of wise fathers and mothers, with several scores of less wise boys and girls had been invited to see it. No one now complains of the Lane boys for hooting from the top of the stone walls, or howling about the streets by night; and their mother says their music and their company do not disturb her half as much as the anxiety as to where they were by night used to do.—Ex.

TO THE BOYS.

Aim high, my boy, and strive to climb
The heights where heroes stand;
Whose purposes were all sublime
And aspirations grand.

Each hero's life a lesson is,
And if you read it well,
It gives you help and strength, and this
Is what it has to tell:

Be true; be earnest for the right
In every time and place;
Toward high endeavor's beacon light
Set steadfastly your face.

Be brave of heart; if sore defeat
Overtake you in the way,
Then with fresh zeal and courage meet
The foe another day.

The great men of the world are those Who swerved not to left nor right
When base, ignoble men opposed,
But kept the goal in sight.

Though baffled, beaten for a time,
From each defeat we gain
A strength that makes the strife sublime,
And takes away its pain.

Be brave, be steadfast, and be true;
And ever, as you climb,
Keep God's clear beacon light in view,
And win in His good time.

BOY CHARACTER.

It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and live the truth that there shall be no discount on his word. And there are such noble, Christian boys, and wider and deeper than they are apt to think is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immense influence for good, and loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.—Child's Paper.

BOYS, GO HOME.

Ah, boys! you who have gone out from the homestead into the rush and bustle of life, do you ever think of the patient mothers who are stretching out to you arms that are powerless to draw you back to your old home nest?

No matter, though your hair is silver-streaked, and Dot in the cradle calls you grandpa, you are "the boys" so long as the mother lives. You are the children of the old home. Nothing can crowd you out of your mother's heart. You may have failed in the battle of life, and your manhood may have been crushed out against the wall of circumstances; you may have been prosperous, gained wealth and fame, but mother's love has followed you always. Many a "boy" has not been home for five or ten or twenty years. And all this time mother has been waiting. She may be even now saying, "I dreamed of my John last night. May be he will come to-day. He may drop in for dinner;" and the poor, trembling hands prepare some favorite dish for him. Dinner comes and goes, but John comes not with it. Thus day after day, month after month, year after year passes, till at last "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," aye, sick unto death; the arms are stretched out no longer.

The dim eyes are closed, the gray hairs smoothed over for the last time, and the tired hands are folded to everlasting rest, and the mother waits no more on earth for one who comes not. God grant that she may not in vain wait for his coming in the heavenly home. Once more I say unto you, boys, go home, if only for a day. Let mother know you have not forgotten her. Her days may be numbered. Next winter may cover her grave with snow.—Selected.

A GOOD THING FOR BOYS.

Manual training is one of the few good things that are good for everybody. It is good for the rich boy, to teach him respect for the dignity of beautiful work; it is good for the poor boy, to increase his facility for handling tools, if tools prove to be the thing he must handle for a living afterward; it is good for the bookish boy, to draw him away from books; but most of all it is good for the non-bookish boy, in showing him that there is something he can do well. The boy utterly unable, even if he were studious, to keep up in book-knowledge and percentage with the brighter boys becomes discouraged, dull, and moody. Let him go to the work-room for an hour, and find that he can make a box or plane a rough piece of board as well as the brightest scholar—nay, very likely, better than his brighter neighbor—and you have given him an impulse of self-respect that is of untold benefit to him when he goes back to his studies. He will be a brighter and better boy for finding out something that he can do well. Mind you, it is not planing the board does him good; it is planing the board in the presence of other boys, who can no longer look down upon him when they see how well he can plane. He might go home after school and plane a board in the bosom of his family, or go to an evening school to learn to plane, without a quarter part—nay, without any—of the invaluable effect upon his manhood that it will have to let him plane side by side with those who, in mental attainments, may be his superiors.—American Magazine.

TEMPERANCE.

HORRORS OF LONDON SLUMS.

On the other hand, in Great Britain it is impossible to go through any of her large cities any time, day or night, without seeing drunken men and women. This, of course, is in the slums, such as Whitechapel in London, where are collected the foulest, filthiest beings I ever saw. In one short street which we passed through we got glimpses through the doors of the dirty dens these wretches occupy. Heaps of humanity—men, women and children—were in one mass, the children half smothered by the drunken parents. All along the street, on door-steps, in alleys, men and women and boys and girls who never knew what a home or parent is, were crouched together trying to sleep. The policemen did not seem to mind them, and amid all this ruin were saloons—or public houses, as they are called there—crowded with men and women half crazed with drink. These people never work; they steal, and when they cannot steal they starve. These saloons do a great business, and are no doubt owned by some highly respected Londoner who neither knows nor cares how he gets his wealth, as long as he gets it. This class, next to the British Government, is partly to blame for this horrible condition of affairs. Luxury and wealth, misery and want, debauchery that hell might blush to own, stagnate in the heart's core of a nation that claims the Bible and Christianity as the secret of her power. Her majesty, the queen of Great Britain, was once asked by an Abyssinian prince the secret of her power. She is said to have pointed to the Bible. If she were asked to point out the cause of this horrible misery, to what would she point?

We have misery in America, we have crime in America, but nothing to be compared to what I saw in London. I am not exaggerating. No pen can do justice to the true state of affairs. I did not see anything like this in Germany, but we did not visit many places there, and so cannot say what the condition of things there really is. In Belgium, where we spent Sunday, every one seemed to enjoy himself. No law here prohibits the sale of liquor on Sunday, but I saw no drunken people. The business people are very honest. This cannot be said of Paris.

One of the great evils in Europe appears to be idleness. In Britain, for instance, steady work is hard to find, and the British workman who can pay his expenses, and have a dollar to spend on Saturday or Sunday, is looked upon as being in very good circumstances. The thought of owning his own house is not even dreamed of.—William Milligan, in Daily News.

ALCOHOL ON THE CONTINENT.

It is a general belief that there is little of drunkenness on the Continent, and casual visitors undoubtedly see but little to alter this belief. But facts are coming to light which show that drunkenness is far more common than is supposed. The Anti-Alcohol Congress at Paris has come to an end. One of many saddening facts it brought out is that there has been an increase of 5,000 dram shops in Paris since 1880, when the number was 24,000. The consumption of alcohol has been trebled in thirty years, and as much as 36,000,000 gallons has been manufactured out of potatoes for the French market. The average yearly consumption per adult man is over twelve quarts. We are glad to know that women and children have not yet learned to tinkle in these gin shops. Between 1875 and 1885 the consumption of alcohol has doubled. Strangely enough, the consumption is least in the wine-producing countries of the South. It is most deplorable to find that drunkenness among children is on the increase. In Austria this is particularly noticeable, many cases of nervous diseases being traceable to the use of alcohol. The Congress resolved that the governments of the world should be asked to impose a prohibitive duty on alcohol, and exempt from duty tea, coffee, and other ingredients for temperance drinks.—Christian Commonwealth.

A LIQUOR SALOON DEMOLISHED.

The temperance crusade in Missouri is spreading. Thursday, Feb. 20, a number of women at Pickardsville resolved to close up a club house, run by Dury Davis, in defiance of the liquor law. Friday evening, armed with stones, hatchets and axes, they proceeded to the saloon, accompanied by a complement of boys and curious men. With the stones the women smashed in all the windows and with the axes chopped down the door. They then carried the bottles and kegs of beer and barrels of whisky into the streets, and emptied their contents into the gutter. The saloon fixtures were also demolished. Hamilton Brady, owner of the building, says he will prosecute the women for destroying his property. Davis, who runs the saloon, has nothing to say.

The British brewery syndicate have now about $45,000,000 invested in American breweries.

Germany spends 430,000,000 marks for its army annually, but not much less for its alcoholic drinks, which costs 406,000,000 marks.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, the world-renowned physician, of London, England, in a recent address said, "People take a swallow of brandy to keep off infection when going to attend upon sick people; others whose work leads them into sewers and other similar places, do the same. The fact is, that taking the brandy prevents the evil to which they are inevitably exposed, from passing out of the system quickly. Indeed, taking the brandy keeps the poison in the system longer than it would otherwise stay."

Mrs. Cairns, W. C. T. U. superintendent of the relation of temperance to labor, attended the recent great meeting at St. Louis, which resulted in the union of the Farmers' Alliance and Knights of Labor, a union which has prohibition in its platform, and represents 4,500,000 voters. She gives the following pen portrait of Powderly: "Mr. Powderly is a masterful man. In every line of his face there is life and power, and especially I was pleased to see in this born leader's face the same finely-cut, firm lines of the cheek and chin that express power, conviction and determination so thoroughly in Frances Willard's face. Purpose and strength are carved on both faces, and we may rejoice that these two leaders are so much in accord in work for humanity."

tuting church machinery for individual responsibility, they have drifted away from the Bible idea of dependence on God. What we want is such a revival of apostolic, Holy Ghost religion as shall beget practical, living faith,—the kind that can personally appropriate every word of promise, and trust God even without the handful of meal or the cruse of oil. What does a man want of benefit societies who believes that he has the word of One who cannot lie: "Thy bread and thy waters shall be sure?" A card issued by A. S. Orne, of the Gospel Mission at Dover, N. H., and headed Christian Alliance, carries out this idea in such a unique and happy style that I cannot forbear copying it entire:

Protection against disease, disaster and death. Psalm 91.

There are two degrees: First, John 3: 3. Second, Acts 1: 8.

Admittance fee. John 3: 16.

Dues. 1 Thess. 5: 17.

Duties. James 1: 27.

Benefits. Psalm 103: 2-5.

This is the oldest and most reliable society in existence.

Any and all may join. Isaiah 1: 18.

Mrs. M. L. Shephard, "the Converted Nun," lectured recently at Waterbury, Conn., and stirred up the Romish element of that little city to mob fury. Mrs. Shephard is a brave woman, and met the situation heroically, refusing to leave the hall by a back way; but as she went fearlessly down the stairs and stepped into the street, she was greeted by the hoots and yells of the crowd, who were only kept at a distance by the cordon of police which conducted her to her hotel. If it is true, as the American alleges, that there are Protestant ministers in Connecticut who dare not give public announcement of one of her lectures without an apology for the same, the sooner these ministers go over to Rome in a body the better for Protestantism.

Attention was called in a former letter to a plan for muzzling the press of Boston, by passing an ordinance to forbid the giving away of handbills on the street. An Italian lad, a slender, quiet boy, a member of the Bethany Mission, who was distributing handbills on this subject, was roughly assaulted by a burly policeman and taken to the police station; but finding nothing against him, the vigilant guardians of the public peace let him go. Evangelist Davis, in his account of the affair, very pertinently asks: "If this is the way they do things in a green tree, when there is no law to prohibit such distribution in the streets of Boston, what will the Romanist police of Boston be likely to do when the proposed city ordinance is passed making it a crime to distribute handbills in the streets of the city?" New England promises to be the battle-ground of religious freedom, and the time may not be far off when to "endure as seeing Him that is invisible" may have a more practical meaning for some of us than it does now.

A letter just received from Rev. J. H. Brown informs me that his residence after April 1 will probably be Tintah, Minn. The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," has reached him from former parishioners of his, and he yields to the call. He goes to establish a self-supporting home mission on the Bishop Taylor plan in a region where there are no religious privileges of any kind. We can but regret his departure from New England, where he has endeared himself to so many of our anti-secret workers, while at the same time we join with the Cynosure readers in asking God's blessing upon him as he goes to his new field. Such noble witnesses for the truth are needed in every part of our country, and we expect to hear of much good done through his self-sacrificing labors, though the full number of the sheaves he gathers may be left for eternity alone to tell.

I am glad to inform the women of the N. C. A. that no financial hindrance now stands in the way of publishing the first issue of our monthly tract, to be distributed free to the W. C. T. U., but especially to lodge men's wives, thus enlightening them on the real nature of Masonry if they are indifferent; and showing them how to combat it with the weapons of faith and love if they already know enough about the lodge to hate it. How many a dear sister, oppressed by this monster, and daring not to speak what she really feels and thinks, would welcome our little leaflet as just the ally which she needs! If any Christian woman has in her keeping some of the Lord's money which she feels directed to give in aid of this noble cause, please send it to Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, 309, Tremont street, Boston, Mass.

"Is not this anti-secrecy reform one that most closely affects the home? and ought not women to take it up as a specialty?" Thus writes missionary W. J. Gladwin, from whom the plan emanates; and I leave it to the women, not of New England alone, but of our whole beloved country, to answer this question; remembering that the happiness of many a wife and mother, and the salvation of many a soul, will hinge on the reply they give.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—First Quarter.—March 23.

SUBJECT.—Christ Forgiving Sin.—Luke 5: 17-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Who can forgive sins, but God alone?—Luke 5: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Luke 5: 12-26. T.—Mark 2: 1-12. W.—Matt. 9: 1-8. T.—Acts 3: 1-11. F.—Ps. 32: 1-11. S.—Ps. 51: 1-19. S.—Isa. 55: 1-13.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus a Saviour from sin, vs. 17-20. This might have been Peter's house, where Christ was residing for the time. At least it was some private and probably humble dwelling. Neighborhood prayer meetings are often great spiritual blessings to a community. We can imagine how this home in Capernaum must forever after have seemed hallowed to its inmates; so nothing will make our own homes seem so sacred as to open them occasionally for meetings of prayer. Where we have felt the power of the Lord present to heal and bless, we cannot so easily let in worldly cares or frivolous company. If "we would see Jesus," either for ourselves or for our friends in some case of urgent need, we sometimes have to try very unconventional methods. It was contrary to all established procedure to go and tear away the roof in order to let down this poor paralytic, where Jesus could see and hear him. But they did not care what remarks were made by the crowd, or how much they were wondered and stared at. Theirs was the true spirit of earnestness which takes heaven by storm, and refuses, like Jacob, to let go its hold on God until it wins the blessing sought for. But the first thing Jesus does is not to heal this man's body, but his soul. We are not sure that his disease was caused by sin. He may not have been a grossly wicked man; only one who had lived for himself with no thought of his Maker. Anyway Jesus knew that his soul was sicker than his body, and that must be healed first before there could be any channel for a physical blessing. The greater must include the less. The life is more than meat. So a true "faith cure" must always come through the soul to the body, and not through the body to the soul. Jesus can always see faith, be it little or much; but he wants us to have a faith that others can see too, and then when it is justified to the world by the result, men "glorify God."

2. Jesus a Saviour for the body, vs. 21-26. Sitting by were Pharisees and doctors of the law. Full of prejudice and pedantry, they had come as cold, caviling spectators. They wanted in some way to trap this young teacher and check his growing popularity with the people. But the charge of blasphemy which they were hoping to bring against him fell to the ground in the face of the stupendous miracle which followed. They could not gainsay the truth of Christ's argument, visibly demonstrated before their eyes: that the same power which heals the body can also forgive sins, and the latter is the greatest manifestation of power of the two. David, in Psalm 103: 3, couples together the forgiveness of sins and the healing of diseases, and doubtless Christ had often read those very words, or heard them read in the synagogue. "But that ye may know," etc. In all true cases of divine healing it is not the healing itself which is the important thing. Their highest use is to show Christ as a Saviour for the soul. They are not wrought to excite idle wonder, or for philosophers to speculate about, but to make it manifest that "he has power on earth to forgive sins." The real heart cry is always for pardon more than for mere physical healing, for there is an instinctive sense in every human being that it is better to have a soul at peace in a diseased body, than a soul full of pain and unrest in a well body. There were two parties who glorified God: the healed man and the crowds which saw him healed. This is always the result of coming to Christ in faith. We do not read that the Pharisees glorified God; indeed, we are sure they did not, for they continued to oppose and persecute. The greatest manifestation of divine power only hardens the heart that persistently refuses to be convinced.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

FAITH AND FORGIVENESS.—(1) Here is an illustration of true faith, not merely "a strong conviction of any doctrine about Christ, but a strong trust and confidence in Christ," founded on what they believed about him, not philosophically, but practically. They could not have confidence in him unless they had some true faith about him, and the truer their faith about him, the stronger their confidence in him. (2) Faith is necessary in order that the sinner be led to go to Christ. (3) It is necessary because it is the accepting of the forgiveness. It is the taking God at his word when he promises to forgive. (4) It shows a state of heart and mind which makes it safe to forgive. Otherwise forgiveness would increase sin, not remove it. (5) Whosoever has real faith in Jesus will forsake and hate sin and love and obey his Lord and Saviour.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Bishop Paret, of the diocese of Maryland, has charged the clergy of his diocese to resist all movements made by Roman Catholics which are detrimental to political or social institutions.

—The colored Baptists of Missouri have started a denominational school with temporary location at Independence. About 180,000 colored people are in Missouri, with 300 Baptist churches.

—A remarkable religious revival is in progress in the village of Marlborough, Ulster county, N. Y. It is now in its sixth week, and 250 conversions have been made. On a recent Sunday morning the Rev. Dr. Dodge, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, received on probation 186 persons, and of that number 86 were baptized.

—The Teller of New Orleans says: "Through the kindness of Bro. C. W. Sterry, a Christian gentleman of Pontiac, Ill., the Saint Matthew Baptist church has succeeded in buying two lots at the corner of Clara and Second streets, whereon they expect to commence erecting a house of worship in April."

—There have been one hundred conversions in the revival services at Keene, N. H., under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association.

—Mr. W. S. Hunt, of the Senior Class in Chicago Theological Seminary, and one of the founders of the Student's Bureau of Correspondence, has received a hearty call from the church in Columbus, Neb., to visit them with a view to settlement.

—The Christian Intelligencer of the 5th inst. speaks thus of the week-day religious services in New York: "The services conducted by Mr. Moody in the Collegiate Church on Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street have attracted a multitude of people last week and this week. The large building has been insufficient to contain all desiring to be present. After addressing these audiences, Mr. Moody has been conveyed in a carriage immediately to the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, the second in size among the Protestant church buildings in this city, to repeat there the discourse just finished in the Collegiate Church, and has found this large audience-room crowded to the door. The first of these services has begun at half-past ten o'clock. Besides these large audiences, another, consisting entirely of men—merchants, bankers, brokers and employees, has completely filled Trinity Church at noon, day after day, to hear sermons from the Rev. Phillips Brooks, D.D., of Boston."

—The Bible Institute in Chicago, of which D. L. Moody is the head, has been fortunate enough to secure the services of Prof. W. G. Moorehead, of Xenia, Ohio, for the three months of April, May and June. Prof. Moorehead is regarded by many as the most suggestive, thorough, and stimulating Bible teacher in the country. Mr. Moody sends out a cordial invitation to all ministers, evangelists, theological students and other Christian workers in all parts of the land who wish a new inspiration in the study of the Word of God to come to Chicago for the entire three months or a portion thereof and take advantage of this great opportunity. The new building of the Institute is open; and those who come, will, as far as possible, be accommodated in it. Those who desire rooms in the building should send their names and references at once to the Supt., R. A. Torrey, 80 W. Pearson St., Chicago. Those who cannot be accommodated in the building will find furnished rooms near at hand and can board in the Institute Restaurant. Four dollars per week will cover all necessary expenses. As the seminaries close in April, theological students are especially invited to come and give a few weeks to Bible study under this gifted teacher and get the experience to be gained in the aggressive work of the Chicago Evangelization Society, among the masses of the city. Ministers who feel the need of fresh Bible study and contact with active workers, are also cordially invited. Christian young men and ladies from the colleges could profitably spend the spring vacation attending Prof. Moorehead's lectures.

LODGE NOTES.

The income of the grand lodge of England is over £26,000 per annum. It has invested funds exceeding £75,000 and large freehold properties. Half its income is devoted to charity. It has 2,044 lodges under its jurisdiction.

The Masonic museum, of London, England, claims to have come into possession of the tibia of one of the legs of Hiram, king of Tyre. The account of the finding and preservation of this relic seems to be well authenticated, according to the Freemason.

The grand council of Illinois Royal Templars of Temperance, met in Salem in the tenth annual session a few days since. The Methodist Episcopal church was opened, the mayor delivered an address of welcome, and at last the grand body repaired to Odd-fellows' hall for a banquet.

Hon. John H. Crocker, aged 61, Republican member of the Illinois legislature in 1882, and mayor of Maroa, died of paralysis lately. He was an Odd-fellow, a Mason, Knight Templar, and for three years Supreme Treasurer of the Supreme Lodge of the Royal Templars of Temperance.

The Covenant Mutual Benefit Association has been established thirteen years and has 33,701 members. A. W. Berggren of Galesburg, Ill., says: "I am satisfied that securing of insurance in the Covenant Mutual has stimulated the desire to obtain membership in the order of Odd-fellows that they may be able to secure the additional benefits guaranteed to them alone."

There were dances and dances on the West Side last night. Montefiore Lodge, No. 13, Independent Order Knights and Ladies of Honor, kept Prof. Frank Shradel's orchestra guessing at Bohemian Hall, and the Garden City Lodge, No. 75, Independent Order Sons of Benjamin, were out in full force at West Twelfth Street Turner Hall. The Knights and Ladies of Honor danced thirteen dances and the Sons of Benjamin thirteen. "We chose thirteen dances on purpose," said President Derriger, of the Sons of Benjamin. "Our lodge has had so much good luck since we organized that we feel like tempting fate a while."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Among the newer secret societies is the "Independent International Order of Owls." Hon. H. L. Rogers, of St. Louis, says: "Having been one of the party of five Masons in attendance at a convention at Toronto, Ontario, Canada, who came into possession of the manuscript containing the constitution, tradition, ritual, etc., of the Supremus Nidus Ululas; and being second officer of the present Supreme International Nest, and presiding officer of St. Louis Nest, No. 1, I am naturally very proud of the phenomenal success of the institution." It seems to be an attachment to the Masonic system. The owl is well adapted as a symbol of a secret lodge. It can see nothing in daylight and lives on rats, etc.

Press reports from Topeka concerning the alleged scheme to colonize Oklahoma and make a Negro State out of it have aroused the settlers to a high pitch of excitement. Twenty miles west of here, at Downs, a secret organization has decided to drive out the few Negroes and allow no more of that race to become settlers. Four miles northeast of Downs resides a colored family named Hawkins, and near by another colored family, Burgess by name. Hawkins was suspected of firing the prairie grass a short time ago on a neighbor's claim. At an early hour yesterday morning ten masked men from Downs broke into his house, took him from his bed, and severely whipped him. Buck Hawkins, a son, aroused the Burgess family. Abe Clark and Sam Burgess armed themselves with shotguns and fired at the masked party from ambush. Henry Chambers was badly wounded about the head and face. The Negroes were pursued and surrounded by the irate settlers. They were thoroughly frightened, and promised to leave the country. The elder Hawkins arrived at Kingfisher to-night and asked protection. The few Negro settlers in the vicinity of Guthrie have become greatly alarmed, and several have offered to sell their claims for a mere pittance.

Less House-Cleaning More Health

Less Annoyance More Comfort

Such is the experience of women who use Pearline for house-cleaning, and the degree of health and comfort is largely due to the way they use it. Directions for saving labor on every package. Delicate women can clean house by its aid; children will be a help, and husbands will never know the work is going on—out of the way, and they will be ignorant of it. It is bosh to say that Pearline hurts the clothing, the paint or the hands. Numbers of people clean their teeth with it; many babes have been washed with it from their birth; the most delicate of lares and linens have been subjected to the severest of tests. Everything washable, and everybody who must do this work, is benefitted by reason of the use of Pyle's Pearline. It's the modern soap. You'll know it and use it sooner or later. Your grocer keeps the goods.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. JAMES PYLE, New York.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors and gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

OBITUARY.

Died at Abilene, Kansas, on Tuesday, February 11, 1890, aged 72 years, 9 months and 21 days, JACOB AUGUSTINE, who for twenty years had been a resident of that city.

The subject of this notice was born in Stark county, Ohio, and at an early age was employed in a store as a merchant's clerk. His extraordinary energy and superior business habits enabled him in a short time to take a front rank among the young men of his age in the prosperous city of Massillon, Ohio.

Mr. Augustine was converted at an early age under the preaching of the evangelist Avery from Oberlin, Ohio, that great center of advanced thought, presided over for so many years by that great preacher and wonderful man, Rev. C. G. Finney.

Mr. Augustine became an enthusiast on the subject of religion. He accepted the advanced teachings of the Oberlin school, and entered with heart and soul into the spirit of the radical teachings of that celebrated band of religious instructors that had been gathered around the St. Paul of Oberlin, President Finney. When quite a young man he took an active interest in the anti-slavery work of those days. He was a disciple of Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips and their co-laborers. He used every means possible to extend the circulation of the Liberator, the Oberlin Evangelist, and Dr. Bailey's National Era, that first gave "Uncle Tom's Cabin" to the world. He believed with all his heart that "slavery was sin," and that the country could have no permanent peace until it was abolished.

Immediately upon his conversion he united with the Presbyterian church at Massillon, Ohio, and was one of its most active and untiring workers so long as he remained a resident of that city.

Business necessities finally took him away from Massillon, and for many years he was actively engaged in mercantile life and purchasing produce on the line of the Ohio canal, and shipping to Cleveland, Ohio. During all these years as he grew to a more mature manhood his early convictions, and what was denominated radical principles, became, if possible, more intensified. He was proud to be designated as an "Abolitionist." During his whole life he abhorred alcohol, and was always an active worker in the temperance reform. Living in Kansas for the last twenty years, he has been one of our most active, practical Prohibitionists.

In every respect a clean man of pure life, setting an example it would be well if more young men would follow. It scarcely need be stated that Mr. Augustine, holding the views he did on the slavery question, was a third party man. He voted for James G. Birney for President, also for John P. Hale, and was ever in advance of the public sentiment of the community in which he lived. For many years he was a subscriber for the Christian Cynosure, and heartily endorsed its opposition to all secret organizations.

Two years ago Mr. Augustine was attacked with diabetes. This gradually broke him down so that one year ago he abandoned all business cares, devoting himself to the care of his health. Gradually he failed and finally passed away gently, surrounded by a loving wife, son and daughter, and other relatives. He was conscious to the last. Peace to his memory.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

Men and women prematurely gray and whose hair was falling, are enthusiastic in praising Hall's Hair Renewer for restoring the color and preventing baldness.

"Tell me," the teacher, smiling, said,
"The name of names most dear."
And she glanced at each thoughtful little face
As she waited the answer to hear.
But startled was she when a hand was raised,
And a face between smiles and tears
Was turned to her and in eager tone,
A little maid's answer—all her own—
Was lisped: "Please, Miss, Dr. Pierce."

The teacher laughed heartily as she told her friends, but when she discovered that the little one's mother had for years been a sufferer from disease peculiar to her sex, and had been cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, she felt like hugging the little darling whose answer thus spoke her love for her mother.

Thousands of women bless the day when Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was first brought to their attention.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and delicate ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee printed on its wrapper, and faithfully carried out by the proprietors for many years.

As an invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon; being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

HAVE YOU READ IT?

It will create a sensation and "open" the eyes of every true American to see the "Danger Ahead," and expose the secret of Rome's attack upon our Public Schools. This wonderful book is none other than

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS

OF THE

JESUITS.

Published by an ex-Romanist.

This work is a translation from the Latin of the "Secret Instructions of the Jesuit Society." Its revelations are startling, showing to what depths of deceit the Jesuit priest and all connected with this Order of "Spies" and "Traitors" will descend to accomplish their unholy aims. It is printed in the original Latin with the English translation parallel thereto, doing away with the anticipated charge of forgery by those who set a premium on murder and treason.

A history of the Order of Jesuits and their expulsion from every Catholic country is given; also, the reason why the Public Schools must go.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HELPFUL HINTS.

To clean brass lamps, scour with damp bath-brick with a cloth, then rub well with paper and dry brick-dust.

Pumice-stone will remove match stains and other surface stains from hard-finished walls, and restore the original clean look to soapstone stoves.

Put a teaspoonful of molasses in with your blacking before applying it to the stove. It will keep the dust from flying and make the polishing process easier.

To take spots of paint from wood, lay a thick coating of lime and soda mixed over it, letting it stay twenty-four hours. Then wash off with warm water and the spots will disappear.

To remove warts, take Irish potato and cut a piece off the end and rub on the wart two or three times a day, but every time you rub it on cut a slice off the potato so it will be fresh; oftentimes one potato is sufficient.

Good cologne is made from oils of rosemary and lemon, each half a drachm, oils of bergamot and lavender, each one-fourth drachm, oils of cinnamon, cloves, and rose each four drops, and alcohol, one pint; mix and shake often for a week.

For a cough, roast a lemon, carefully, without burning it; while it is thoroughly hot, cut it open and squeeze the juice into a cup on three ounces of sugar finely powdered. Take a spoonful as often as the cough is repeated. It is as useful as it is agreeable to the taste.

To drive moths from upholstered work, sprinkle the upholstered parts with benzine. The benzine should be put in a small watering-pot such as is used for sprinkling house plants. It does not spot the most delicate silk, and the unpleasant odor passed off after an hour or two exposure in the air.

After shaking carpets thoroughly and tacking them in place, go over them with a cloth wrung from warm water with a little ammonia in it. If there are spots on the carpet, scrub them with ox-gall and water. The carpet in an invalid's room may be quite well cleansed by being wiped with a cloth wrung from clear water.

PAPERING.

The wall should be prepared before the paper is put on; if very greasy or smoky it should be washed with weak lye or soap-suds or strong soda-water. If the wall is hard-finished, or if it has been painted, it should be covered with a sizing made of white glue, and put on with a whitewash brush. With a pair of long shears trim the paper close to the pattern on one side, allowing the roll to lie on the floor, and rolling up again on the lap as fast as trimmed. Have a board wider than the paper and a little longer than a single breadth when cut. All the full breadths that will be required for the room should be first cut off and matched when cut. The pieces left will serve for spaces over doors and windows. Begin at the right and work toward the left. Lay all the breadths on the board one on the other, paste the top breadth with a broad brush, fold the two ends down, bringing the pasted sides together, for ease in handling. Adjust the top of the breadth carefully in one place, using soft towels to press it on the wall, first down the middle of the breadth, and then on either edge. In turning a corner press the right hand part of the breadth in place and then the left. Wall paper is half a yard wide, and there are usually eight yards in a roll. The colors of the paper should harmonize with those of the carpet and furniture. A low ceiling will be heightened by lines running up and down; a sunless room will be brightened by much gilding and a cheerful tint in the paper. Build no fire in a freshly-papered room till it is dry. For the paste use an ounce of pulverized alum to every pound of flour, mix it smoothly with cold water, then pour on boiling water till the proper consistency is secured. When it swells and turns yellow it is done. A few drops of carbolic acid may be added to keep vermin away. Do not use the paste till it is cool. The paste may be made one day and the rolls trimmed, and the papering be done the next day.—Sel.

The Best Remedy Taken in Season,

FOR Sore Eyes, Cancerous Humors, Prurigo, and other manifestations of depraved blood, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Used persistently, according to directions, it effectually eradicates all traces of disease, and restores the sufferer to a sound and healthy condition.

"I hereby certify that I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, with excellent success, for a cancerous humor, or, as it seemed to be, cancer on my lip. Shortly after using this remedy the sore healed. I believe that the disease is entirely cured, and consider Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be an infallible remedy for all kinds of eruptions caused by impure blood."—Charles G. Ernberg, Vasa, Minn.

"For years my blood was in an unhealthy condition. After having tried other medicines without success, I have lately taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and with the best results. I think this medicine is the only blood-purifier that can be absolutely relied upon."—Mrs. Oliver Valentine, 144 Quincy st., Brooklyn, New York.

"A neighbor of ours who was rendered nearly blind from scrofula, was entirely cured by using three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Stephens & Best, Druggists, Ball Play, Tenn.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla arrests blood-poisoning before it pervades the system. Don't delay till the forces of nature are exhausted and there is nothing to work on. Begin at once the use of this medicine, and be sure you take no other to counteract its effects.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of a bad case of blood-poisoning and restored me to health. My system was saturated with a poison which all ordinary remedies failed to reach, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla did the work completely. This was twenty-one years ago, and no symptoms of the disease have since appeared. I have recommended this wonderful medicine to hundreds of people, similarly afflicted, and always with the most satisfactory results."—A. H. Christy, Bourbon, Ind.

"For many years I was troubled with scrofulous complaints. Hearing Ayer's Sarsaparilla very highly recommended, I decided to try it, and have done so with the most gratifying effects. I am convinced that Ayer's Sar-

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The movement to elevate the railroad tracks and construct subways inside the city limits is rapidly taking shape. An ordinance is drafted which provides that the railroads shall elevate their tracks seven feet within the city limits, and outside the business district subways will be constructed for the streets and trains can be run at full speed.

Joseph Kane, an Omaha butcher, wanted for stealing diamonds, was arrested last night by Officer Linnville on Clark street. He shot the officer twice, shot a bystander who interfered, and then kept an immense crowd at bay until he reached the Pullman Building, fatally wounding Officer Briscoe on the way, who had attempted to stop him.

COUNTRY.

A bill is before the Governor of Kentucky which requires all corporations and persons engaged in mining or manufacturing to pay their employees semi-monthly, and to pay them in legal money.

Thursday, at La Harpe, Ill., James Bridgman and William Landis were fined $100 each for "bootlegging" whisky. Yesterday William T. Mills and A. S. Horn were fined $50 each for the same offense.

The Baltimore & Ohio Road has leased for 999 years the West Virginia and Pittsburgh Line, which, as reported, gives the Baltimore & Ohio almost complete control of West Virginia railways.

Hon. J. C. McGregor, Reading Clerk of the Ohio House, died Friday of diphtheria in his home at Zanesville. His wife passed away a week ago, and four of their children a few days previously. One of the remaining children and Mr. McGregor's aged father are now believed to be dying of the dread malady.

Friday it was reported at Philadelphia that within a month the gunboat Concord and Bennington and the cruiser Newark will be launched for service in the United States navy.

A Boston syndicate was reported Friday to have nearly completed the purchase for $500,000 of 1,500 acres of land between Muncie, Kan., and Mills Creek. It is stated that it is its intention to erect woolen and other mills, and put up an electric light plant on the property.

Some days ago a local-option license bill was introduced in the Iowa House. After considerable discussion the question was voted of reference to the Committee on Police Regulations, wherein the Democrats have a majority, or to the Committee on the Suppression of intemperance. On roll-call the prohibitionists won by a vote of 46 to 45.

The Louisiana lottery is said to have secured a charter from the Legislature of the Choctaw Nation. While the attention of the public was directed to Louisiana and North Dakota the lottery men were quietly at work in the Choctaw Nation, so quietly that the fact was generally unknown in the Nation till the laws of the Choctaw Nation appeared in pamphlet form. The lottery scheme resembles the North Dakota proposition in outline, conditioned upon the payment of an annual sum in the Choctaw treasury.

In the Iowa Senate the Reiningier resolution against adulterated lard, as adopted by the House, was passed.

It is reported that an English syndicate wants to buy all the manufactories in Indianapolis, Ind., over $1,000,000 being the price named.

At the opening at Springfield of the convention of Illinois miners, Secretary William Scaife reported in favor of shortening the hours of labor, saying that it would reduce the output at the mines and increase the value of the product.

Congressman F. W. Wheeler's mammoth ship-yard at West Bay City, Mich., was reported to have been sold to an English syndicate for $3,500,000.

Charles A. Pillsbury, the Minneapolis miller, is reported as saying that if the short selling of wheat is not stopped that cereal will within five years be selling at 25 cents a bushel.

The peace belt in southwestern Michigan was nipped by frost March 5. The thermometer registered zero, and it is feared that the peaches are badly damaged.

Snow to the depth of from twelve to eighteen inches is reported to have fallen throughout New England on the 2nd and 3rd inst.

Twenty students at the Kalamazoo (Mich.) College went to the room of Professors Ferry and Trowbridge, and, binding and blindfolding them, took them out for a walk, finally leaving them in a cornfield. Upon complaint being made the students confessed, and most of them were suspended.

A freight wreck on the Fort Wayne Road, near Lakeville, Ohio, was followed by the explosion of oil tanks, causing a fire that resulted in the destruction of twenty-eight cars and the warping and burning of 300 feet of the track. Three of the train hands were killed.

Four suns, each surrounded by a rainbow perfect in its prismatic colors, are reported to have been seen on the summit of the Alleghany Mountains by the residents of Christianburg, Va.

The Chicago express train on the Lake Shore Road was wrecked near Hamburg, N. Y., a Pullman and two day coaches being piled in a heap. Ten persons are reported killed and about twenty-five more or less severely injured.

The reported negotiations of a London syndicate for the purchase for $5,000,000 of the business of four firms controlling the manufacture of soda water and beer apparatus in the United States were confirmed at Philadelphia by Charles Lippincott, senior member of one of the firms interested in the deal.

It was reported at St. Louis that the Kansas Farmers' Alliance had about completed arrangements to store the corn raised by its members until better prices can be obtained, advancing money on the consignments until a sale is effected.

Dispatches from the South African Republic say that a serious demonstration has been made there against the existing government. It appears that Mr. Kruger, the President of the Transvaal, attempted to make a public speech, but the crowd refused to listen to him and he was compelled to retire. A mass-meeting was then organized and resolutions were adopted denouncing the Transvaal Government. After the meeting the crowd proceeded to the government buildings and tore down the flag of the republic. Subsequently a mob went to a house at Landrist where Mr. Kruger was reserving a deputation, and sung "Rule Britannia." The railings around the house were destroyed by the crowd and the Transvaal flag, which floated from a pole in front of the house, was pulled down and trampled under foot by the excited people.

Twenty-seven of the thirty-four wards in Chicago were represented at the recent meeting of the central committee of the Sunday Rest League. Great enthusiasm prevails in all parts of the city, and already twenty ward clubs have been organized. It was the sense of the meeting that the Sunday Rest League ought to work against the election as aldermen of pot-house politicians and boodler candidates. Committees were appointed to raise money and dispense it to carry on campaign work. A rousing effort will be made to secure a city council that will shut the Sunday saloons and enforce the law against the more outrageous violations of the Sabbath.

The Masonic Orphan Asylum in this city, though for a long season after its opening with a grand display of Knight Templar feathers and Grand Lodge pomposity, with the eloquence of Dr. Thomas and Bishop Fallows thrown in, had but three or four inmates, is yet a "good enough" asylum until after the dance. The great "charity" ball in aid of this needy asylum was lately given by the Masons. The press reports: "George M. Moulton, the Grand Commander of the Illinois Knights Templars, resplendent in his official regalia," and "the imposing figure of Sheriff Matson, in full Templar uniform and fatigue cap, loomed up in various parts of the floor." And so they danced and promenaded and displayed their clothes, quite forgetting the wailing of orphans in their asylum.

A gentleman lately employed in the Chicago postoffice has been giving us an emphatic opinion of the subordination of that great institution to Romanism. "It is Mickey from top to bottom," to use his words; and the man who is not a Catholic has to endure the bantering of the crowd, as the vast majority of the employees belong to the Pope. The same ominous evil is found in Washington. To an exchange the wife of a Union soldier writes: "I am in — Department. There are nine Irish to one American. The persecution to which I am subjected, in hopes of driving me out, is difficult to describe and hard to bear. They preach their religion and their politics. If a word is said against it the air is made blue with profanity, and such words as 'Get out, you heretic; we'll make it hot for you,' are heard on every hand." This will not do. Clan-na-Gaelism is worse than slavery.

The lottery has received its death blow in North Dakota. The House of Representatives refused to listen to the proposition of the Louisiana Lottery Company to furnish 250,000 bushels of seed for the farmers. The fight of the lottery friends is now directed against men who killed the bill, in hopes of killing them politically. Mr. Winship, who was leader in the successful fight, and is said to have refused a $10,000 bribe offered for his vote, is the prominent object of attack. Is it not time that Congress should enact a law strong enough to suppress the vice of lotteries? The conflict of the postal authorities with the lottery, and the bold movements of the lottery men to openly buy up the legislators of a State, makes some stringent law a necessity. It is folly to say that the people have not the right of self-protection.

The Farmers' Alliance which has become so considerable a factor in public questions in the trans-Mississippi region was started years ago. In Colorado and Dakota, we understand, it was an open, honorable body discussing in a friendly way the agricultural interests. In the Southwest, however, it became a secret lodge and as such has spread through Missouri, Kansas and regions further to the south. As such, also, it was put under ban by Bishop Fink of Kansas and Catholics were forbidden to join. Protestants were also forbidden its "unequal" yoking by their "great Shepherd and Bishop," but they sinfully disobeyed him. And here we have a revelation of the nature of this order. Christ's word is given not a single thought, but the prohibition of a Romish bishop is dreaded. Immediately State and county officers of the order waited on the prelate and assured him that there was no intention to conflict with the all-powerful Romish church and all religious ceremonies would be weeded out of their ritual. With this promise the order was accepted as good enough for Catholics and they are permitted to enter.

George William Curtis says in Harper's for February that "the electric light is an untamed Afrit," and that "its laws are apparently ill understood." The editor of the Electrical Engineer takes exception to this judgment, and maintains "the laws of electricity are well understood; that, like water and steam, its current and pressure can be accurately measured; that its effects under given conditions can be accurately predicted and limited, and that it has caused destruction to life and property through the neglect of perfectly well known precautions and safeguards, just as people are burned alive in railroad cars heated by stoves." If this be true every death by electric wires should be the subject of inquiry by coroners and grand juries, for they come within the limit of the law of murder. In like manner the killing of men in Masonic ceremonies, as at Huntington, West Virginia, should be subjected to the severest legal scrutiny. That such is not the case shows that our judicial system is subordinated to the secret oaths of the lodge rather than the oath to God of the state.

The proposal of the Emperor of Germany to call an inter-national conference to consider the interest of labor and laborers is worthy of all praise. Whatever might be true in our land, there can be no question that among the densely populated nations of Europe the competition of labor brings down the price to a point where it sometimes is inadequate to support life. The appeals of laborers to the royal ears have not been in vain. Unlike Rehoboam, the young Emperor does not despise the suggestion that if he would be a wise ruler he must first be a good servant of the people. Doubtless, laborers need protection, and no conference of nations can undertake a nobler work than a careful consideration of their interests. All rulers would do well to consider the admonition of the Psalmist, "Defend the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy. Deliver the poor and needy: rid them out of the hand of the wicked," Psa. 82: 3, 4. But laborers need protection not only from unjust employers but from each other. The secret labor unions have been a source of great cruelty and wrong to those not of their number. They have constituted a system of despotism equaled only by chattel slavery. The idleness that they have enforced has deprived vast multitudes of bread, deranged the general business interests of the country and have been the occasion of many scenes of violence and crime. If it takes the arbitrary hand of a Kaiser to break up the despotism of these secret conspiracies, still we will rejoice in their removal; for we believe that laborers would be vastly better off without than with them. In any event, God speed the Emperor in his noble undertaking.

THE GREAT COMMANDMENT.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER.

The question is sometimes asked, Why ought men give God the first place in everything? [Matt. 22: 37.] Well, the duty is plain, for it is based upon fundamental and unchangeable relations. As God was good and desired to do good, he wished to communicate and increase happiness. So he invented and brought into existence this universe; and at the head of this earthly sphere he placed man, whom he made in his own image for his own child and heir, Gen. 1: 26.

The animal body of man is not the image of God. It is made out of the dust of the ground and is continually changing, so that in seven years the body is mainly made up of new materials, and when death comes it "returns to the earth as it was," Eccl. 12: 7. The human body is an excellent structure and worthy of its place at the head of the animal races of earth. But it is not the image of God, as he has no physical nature.

Having made of dust the outside shell of man, Gen. 2: 7, he breathed into him the breath of life, "and man became a living soul." This was the image of God; so man came to possess the power of reason; the ability to use language; a moral nature, to judge of right and wrong; a free will, to choose and act according to his own pleasure, and so create his own moral character. Here was a new cause, like God, but exceedingly small. So God gave him dominion over all the earth as his heir. As a child should honor his father and mother, so a man should give God the first and supreme place in his thought. All that we have, all that we are, all that we can be, we owe to him.

The fatherhood of God is still more fully shown in his merciful way of saving mankind when ruined by sin. He took upon himself our nature, and bore the penalty of our crimes to deliver us from destruction. And every one of the human family who believes on him is redeemed by the blood of the great elder Brother. Thus the immovable foundation of the first commandment is the boundless love of the universal Father.

The obligation of the Lord's day, or the Christian Sabbath, naturally grows out of the same unchangeable relations. The great loving Father would have his children come home one day in seven to tell him of all their trials, temptations and sins, and of all their joys and sorrows, to ask for his direction and help, to thank him for all his favors and to listen to his Word. And he has so formed the human body that man can accomplish more with a seventh-day rest than he can by uninterrupted toil. The same is true of the domestic animals. But to disregard the day of the Lord, deadens the filial spirit in man and turns him away at length a wanderer and an outcast from the Father's house; while he is ever calling, Come home! Come home! It is from his house, the church, that we are to do the Father's work of kindness and mercy, to feed the poor, visit the sick, comfort the mourners, help the widow and the fatherless and show forth brotherly kindness toward all men until all are brought to a knowledge of their high birth and privileges. What shall we say of the Sabbath-breaking of the railroads and other great corporations, the Sunday newspapers, the mail-carrying of the U. S. postoffice department by which tens of thousands are taught to disobey and disregard the great Father of all, the beer gardens and Sunday excursions and saloons gotten up to silence that voice which still calls, Come home! Come home! to the disobedient and silly children? Will a man rob God?

Now it necessarily follows that if the human race is made in the image of God, and all mankind are his children, that they are all one family of brothers and sisters. They are all equal before God, are all endowed with equal rights and privileges, and all owe equal kindness and love to one another. All are on one great platform of equality. The rules of justice and equity between man and man are, by the divine arrangement, established by the voice of the majority. And the agents to administer the laws are to be appointed in the same manner. And, accordingly, emperors, kings and lords are usurpers in civil government; and popes, cardinals and bishops are usurpers in the Lord's church.

Having thus briefly stated and defined the foundation of the relations between God and men, I propose in the light of them to examine some of the evil ways of mankind. It is plain at the very outset that the greatest injury that can be done to any one is to induce him to act in opposition to the wishes of the Almighty Father. Selfishness is the center of all villainy in human action; it is the root of all rottenness in moral character. The selfish man says, "All for myself; not what my Maker has appointed me with his broad and equal love. The first place, the best position, all that I can take, I will have and hold. I have a right to care for my own affairs. I will be an emperor, a king, a pope or a cardinal if I can. I will 'be rich and increased in goods,' a millionaire. It is nothing to me what others lack. I am not 'my brother's keeper.' Let them attend to their own affairs." This gospel of Satan is proclaimed and practiced in many ways by men of the world who do not scruple to use any effective means to accomplish their selfish ends.

Thus the saloons attract multitudes by every inducement of social amusement and pleasure. Yet they cast off all responsibility from themselves, saying, "this is a free country and our customers have a right to do as they please." I would rather my brother were hit on the head by the highwayman's club and his money taken, then left to crawl home wounded and sore, than to have him drawn into the saloon to acquire the liquor habit and drown his soul in the intoxicating cup. No one but a devil incarnate would try to make money by such practices.

But the evil that I would here especially expose is the widely prevailing iniquity of secretism. In many countries bands of robbers and thieves have existed, having their headquarters in mountain fastnesses and secret caves. They were bound together by barbarous oaths and penalties always to conceal and never to reveal the doings of the brotherhood. Everything was done that cunning could invent or falsehood affirm to render their strongholds absolutely secret. The secret places, called lodges, are now prepared at the top of houses of many stories, with windows well secured, and a man with a drawn sword to guard the door and to admit none but the brotherhood; and any one not able to give the required sign is thrust instantly away. Now the people could not enter the first, because it was the fortress of highwaymen; they could not examine the second, it was a den of thieves; they cannot go into the last, it is a lodge! A what? What is a lodge? It is the business office of Supreme Selfishness; and in order to succeed, it is necessary to keep its plans and modes of action from the knowledge of all who are outside. This marks it as the narrow brotherhood of Satan, for without this secrecy they cannot steal a march on the people to form greedy trusts and to obtain government offices and fat contracts on public works.

They have no stolen goods in the lodge; but they have taken an oath to have their throats cut if they do not strive their utmost to shield from punishment their brothers who may rob or steal or commit any other crime, "murder and treason" excepted. Thus secretism is manifestly the certain mark of selfishness; and it is still more evident that it is used to overreach the rest of mankind by their system of swearing in those who are admitted to the lodge. In a den of thieves among highwaymen, a thing of the first moment is to secure the absolute silence of every member of the band. To administer an ordinary oath would do no good, as it would not be legal, and God would not take part in such a transaction. So they must terrify their companions into silence with horrid oaths and blood-curdling penalties. And this is the way the lodge does. The initiate is made to swear that if he reveals anything, the penalty shall be his "tongue plucked out by the roots," his "left breast torn open," and his "heart taken" out, "the skull smote off," and the body "left to rot on a dung-hill."

Here we have the unerring proof of the pater-nity, the moral character, and the use of the lodge. The father of lies is the father of it; its character is that of a school of deception; and its use is to teach the brotherhood how to lie when they tell the truth, and how to tell the truth when they lie, so as always to get the advantage over others in this world. They are all offices of selfishness, from the baby lodges of Good Templars, the G. A. R., the Daughters of Rebecca and the labor unions up through the 150 kinds to the Knights Templar, the Knights of Pythias, the Jesuits, the Odd-fellows and the 33° Masons. All deny the universal Fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man by their very organization. In honest, fair and upright societies there is no need of secretism.

We will now notice two arguments used in favor of the lodge. It is often urged that the object of these secret brotherhoods is benevolent. If by this is meant that the design is to help those inside, we do not deny it. That is the infamy of it. Why are the multitude shut out if all is fair and honorable? There is no tyler with a drawn sword placed at the door of the church of Christ to keep the people out. And who are shut out of the lodge? The aged, and men who have lost a foot or a hand or an eye, or are otherwise maimed or infirm. Very benevolent! All the weak and the needy are utterly excluded. Only mature men of sound mind and body, in good health, are admitted to the brotherhood.

Again, the vindictive spirit of these clans towards those who oppose them shows that they are not benevolent. They are taught in the lodge how to injure in secret their opponents, and to pursue with spite, and to punish with Satanic hate, their enemies. Like the bands of thieves and robbers, they endeavor to terrorize and silence all who oppose them. All this demonstrates that the lodge contains only a selfish brotherhood.

But it is urged that secret societies must be good morally because good men have been initiated. Well, brother, listen to what Paul says, Gal. 1: 8: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel . . . let him be accursed." The good man must give God the first place in his thought and obey him, or he is not good; and he must give every one of the human family a brother's place, or he is not good. The man who becomes a member of the lodge and upholds the selfish, narrow brotherhood of Satan, cannot make it holy and good, whatever may be his character and habits in other respects. And whoever follows such a one into the paths of selfishness and sin, will soon stand before the great Elder Brother who died for all, and will hear the final sentence, "Depart!" "Inasmuch as you did it not to one of the least of these my brethren you did it not to me."

Dr. Briggs's volume, entitled "Whither?" has been criticised with a good deal of severity in various quarters, but there is one utterance (p. 54) which has called forth a unanimous shout of approval. "Here is one of the difficulties of the Revision movement. The statements of the Westminster Confession on the principles of the Reformation are a thousandfold better than anything we could get from the dogmatic divines of our day." The best evidence of this is seen in the emasculated colorless systems put forth in recent days. They are as weak and pulpy as a jelly fish. Whereas in the old time, men passed through fire and through water in defence of what was dearer to them than life, and therefore they held it with the grasp of a giant and stated it with the clearness of the sun shining in his strength.—Christian Intelligencer.

WINE DRINKING.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

Among those professed friends of temperance who oppose prohibition, including Miss Kate Field and Dr. Howard Crosby, there is no more common plea than that the use of light wines tends to diminish the appetite for, and tendency to use, stronger drinks, and if wine-making were quite general, and its use unrestrained, we should soon reach the millennium of the temperance reform.

It seems strange that such people should have overlooked the appalling fact that in California, where the most wine is made, there is the most drunkenness, and that it steadily increases.

In the wine-producing countries of Europe there has been such an increase of dissipation, together with crime, pauperism and insanity, resulting from drunkenness, that the governments have become alarmed, and, especially in Switzerland, strong repressive measures have been adopted.

It is a hopeful sign that in Great Britain (and we believe in the Scandinavian states) there has been a considerable falling off in the use of intoxicating drinks. In the wine districts the reverse is true. But the fact that ought to convince the wine-drinkers (and they include the majority of Congressmen, State legislators, and nearly all of the fashionable world) is this: while the use of what is called imported wines has increased more than sevenfold during the last fifty years, the quantity actually imported is less now than in 1840.

The following from the Philadelphia press gives the official figures:

"The importations of foreign wine in 1840 and in 1888 were as follows:

1840.....	4,748,362 gallons
1888.....	4,654,545 gallons

"The figures, as will be seen, are almost exactly the same for both years. In forty-eight years the national capacity for foreign wines had not altered perceptibly. Everything else had changed. Our population had more than tripled, growing from 17,069,453 to 64,000,000. Our wealth, which might be held a fairer measure of the capacity for costly foreign wines, had grown from less than $10,000,000,000 to over $60,000,000,000. Our cities have grown from a New York of less than half a million to one of nearer 2,000,000. The thirst of Chicago and San Francisco, and all places between where "champagne and other wines" of rare labels are nightly opened, has been added to the national demand. We have built our entire railroad system, and everybody knows the skill, the capacity and the ability of a railroad man in dealing with the wine—as freight. We have added enormously to the thousands whom a few years abroad always gives new views and new tastes, and more rarely new discrimination in dealing with foreign wines.

"But the statistics of our imports remain. No more wine reaches this country than did in 1840. The returns may not have been completed then; they are far more rigorous and accurate now. The amount of wine smuggled is trifling. There is no possible question that the figures we have given above are accurate, and 1888 was a very good year for wine imports. The average imports for the five years ending in 1888 were 4,350,000 gallons. This includes everything, cask and glass, still and sparkling, French, German and all.

"The total consumption of wine in this country has grown seven and one-half fold since 1840—which is about the increase one would expect. It has grown six-fold since 1850, three and a third since 1860, and tripled since 1870. This is the increase one would anticipate, all things considered. But our consumption of foreign wines has not grown since 1840, is two-thirds that of 1850, and one-third that of 1860 and 1870. This one would not expect—judging from the labels."

The conclusion is that the mingling of strong drink, to which Solomon alludes, and on which he pronounced a woe, is not a lost art. Never in history was the ingenuity and cupidity of wicked men more conspicuous than in the manufacture of spurious wines from the meanest whiskies; and never was there such a vast array of fools who think themselves wise men and wise women, as those who are deceived and cheated by the sham. Truly, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."

A MODERN USE OF EASTER.

As Easter approaches the usual or perhaps more than the usual preparation is being made for its observance by Protestant and Roman Catholic churches and by the world. Many who will in one way or another be engaged in its observance, will neither know nor care whether they are honoring a heathen or a Christian festival, whether it be Baal, or Ashtaroth, or Christ who has appointed the festival, or whether the rites and ceremonies used are Christian or heathen. The Romish church, in order to please the nations in idolatry and thus bring them to Rome, mingled the Christian's God and the heathen idols together as objects of worship, incorporated Christian, Jewish and heathen rites into one system of worship, and did the same with Jewish, heathen and Christian festivals. Thus we find the pagan feast of Astarte, the Jewish feast of the passover, and the professedly Christian feast in honor of the resurrection of Christ, united under the name of Easter, which has received an insertion in the Authorized Version of the Bible instead of the word passover, which it should have been translated.

One of the signs of the times is that the true reformed church, having repudiated the Easter festival as not only without Scriptural authority but idolatrous, is returning again to its observance, and its mode of observance is of the same nature, to a considerable extent, as that of the Romish church. The Protestant church, in its return thus to the observance of Easter, virtually admits that its solemn protest against these institutions of Rome's devising is false, that Rome has triumphed, and Protestantism is put to shame. Every church that observes the Easter festival, does it with its face toward Rome, and every minister who leads in the celebration of its rites is protesting against Protestantism. He has set out in the way of repudiating the simplicity of the reformed religion, and setting his seal to the ritualism of the Romish church as proper in a system of worship.

But there is another use to be made of this Easter festival which would bring the blush of shame to those who celebrate it, if their consciences were awake to the presumption of substituting human institutions in place of those appointed by Christ. A new passion play has been prepared for use in the theaters in connection with Easter. It is called "The Young Messiah." It is performed with music, tableaux, etc. It is mingled with acts virtuous and vicious in order to play upon the passions of the multitude. The crucifixion will be enacted, and a young lady is to represent the Messiah. Thus the very subject which Catholics and Protestants unite in making an occasion of solemn worship, the world unites in making a subject of amusement and even mockery. It makes an unappointed religious occasion one for evincing its profanity and sacrilegiousness. The theater was once a religious institution in which pagan nations used the drama in connection with the sacrifices to their gods.

When the church in the early part of this dispensation began to decline, Biblical narratives were dramatized by ministers in the churches, as a means of devotion and impressing truth upon the minds of the people. Theatrical performances were conducted for religious purposes. The theater is now an institution for amusement, for simple gratification—sensuous and sensual gratification. Its moral tone is graded by its profits in dollars and cents, regardless of any other interest of society. Rarely does the law, which exists professedly for the defence of the purity of the community, assert its prerogative in the theater by preventing the vicious and demoralizing scenes that are attractive because they are vicious. Popular favor usually in such cases asserts its claim to be higher than the laws which are intended to preserve the morals of the people. A passion play, however, in which the scenes in the life and death and resurrection of Christ were dramatized, was a few years ago placed under the ban of the law. But it is claimed for this one that it is free from those features that would invoke the penalties of the law.

It will be well for those churches which are seeking to perpetuate the Easter festival, and thus to furnish attraction to the people, to consider what relation this attractive feature in the worship of the church sustains to the Easter dramatic representation of the Messiah as an attraction for the profane and vicious.—Christian Instructor.

AMERICAN OR FOREIGN SCHOOLS.

The educational laws of Illinois and Wisconsin were intended to make Americans of our children and not Germans, Englishmen, Poles or anything else. To this end a certain amount of instruction is required in our own language. The war upon this school law has become bitter in Wisconsin, and those who foment it are well known to be the Catholic priests. A Milwaukee letter to the Inter Ocean reviews the state of the question. It says that the politicians, and especially the Republicans, are scared into dumbness by the threats of the foreigner-speaking people, and that all the alarm has come "through the agitation of a few German Catholic priests who are openly hostile to the public schools."

The letter proceeds: "Try to hide it as they may, the fact remains that the opposition to the Bennett law originated among the known enemies of the public schools."

"The German Lutherans, who are now fighting the law and threatening with political annihilation every person who speaks kindly of it, were not the ones to begin the fight against the measure. Not till the German Catholic organs dinned into their ears for several months that the law contemplated the destruction of parochial schools, were the German Lutherans aroused. And once aroused it mattered little that both the spirit and the letter of the law had been misrepresented to them. As soon as the Lutherans had their batteries planted the Catholic papers retired from the field, not willing to continue to display their enmity toward the public schools, when their purpose could be accomplished better without. To use another simile, the Roman Catholic monkey is just now enjoying hugely the chestnuts that the Lutheran cat is scrambling to get out of the fire."

"Here in Milwaukee the fight is hotter than elsewhere, and it seems to be generally conceded that no person not opposed to the statute can be elected to an office at the coming municipal election. Paul Bechtner, who has designs upon the mayoralty, prefaces the announcement of his candidacy in this morning's Herold with the signed statement that there are features of the Bennett law which threaten the liberties of the people. He doesn't say what those features are, and the inference is that he hasn't read the law; still his statement carries weight."

"The main features of the Bennett law have been already given in these dispatches; but it may not be amiss to repeat that the law is a compulsory education measure, with the requirement that every child between the ages of seven and fourteen years (with the usual exceptions) shall attend a school at least twelve weeks each year, where writing, reading, arithmetic and geography are taught in the English language. The Catholics and Lutherans both claim that in all their parochial schools English is taught. If this is the case the law does not affect them at all. But they object, as Editor Koeppen of the Germania says, to the State assuming supervision of the parochial schools. This 'objection' is one of the fallacies of the controversy. People who haven't read the law are led to believe that the State proposes to run the parochial schools. If it does, one would never suspect it from a careful reading of the law. It does not interfere, nor attempt to supersede the parochial schools. The real objection to the law, when analyzed, is against the principles involved, which principles underlie the establishment of the public school system."

"The Bennett law may be termed a child of Governor Hoard, and that official is showing his loyalty to his offspring by firmly maintaining first that the law is a necessity, and secondly, that it is based upon true American principles. The impression is gaining ground daily that unless Governor Hoard withdraws his support from the law, the Republican convention will not dare to renominate him. And, certainly, if the Republican leaders continue to feel as they do now about the matter they will not support the Governor. But there is reason to believe a change will come. And it is safe to predict now that within four months the gentlemen who ran to cover so hastily will be ashamed of their action and will be staunch supporters of the law. A large part of the opposition to the law is based upon misapprehension, and when the law is more generally understood it will be seen to be just.

"The pronunciamento of the Catholic bishops of the State against the Bennett law will be issued Thursday morning. It is a very long analysis of the law, and contains nearly 5,000 words."

SECRET SESSIONS IN CONGRESS.

The United States Senate is wrestling with the question whether it shall in its deliberations always act as an honorable body of gentlemen, or on occasion resolve itself into a secret conclave of gossips who will in private say against men what they would not say before all the world. Roughly put, that is what it means. Everyone can readily see why the consideration of treaties with foreign governments should to the end in the Senate wear the confidential character that marks the earlier negotiations between the executive officers of the government; but when it comes to the question of confirming appointees to public offices, will any high-minded Senator be willing to say against a man in secret and behind his back when he cannot answer or explain, what he would not say before all the world? And should any low-minded Senator be allowed to do that? It is a sound rule in private and in public life to make no allegation against any one unless sure of its truth, to make it not about him unless you are willing to make it before him, and only to make it if necessary to prevent wrong. There are cases in the family and home life and in private business matters in which there may be a confidential freedom of personalities different from this; but beyond that the violation of the rule becomes slander; and yet how common in social and political life the violation of the rule is. How common innuendoes, insinuations, aspersion of motives, retailing of charges, "in confidence," by tongue and pen, about a man that are not and would not be made in his presence when he could answer them. In social and political life only? We wish we could say it is not common in the ecclesiastical world also; but we have seen it there in ways shameful and humiliating. Public men especially ought to be honorable men. They should scorn to say in secret about others what they would not proclaim upon the housetop; to whisper or write "confidentially" any ill thing about any one which they would not say before him.—Presbyterian Journal.

ORIENTAL JUSTICE.

Dr. Henry M. Scudder relates a case of Oriental justice that it would be difficult to outdo for sharp and subtle discriminations. Four men, partners in business, bought some cotton bales. That the rats might not destroy the cotton they purchased a cat. They agreed that each should own a particular leg of the cat; and each adorned with beads and other ornaments the leg thus apportioned to him. The cat, by an accident, injured one of its legs. The owner of that member wound about it a rag soaked in oil. The cat going too near the fire, set the rag on fire, and being in great pain, rushed in among the cotton bales, where she had been accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton thereby took fire and was burned up. It was a total loss. The three other partners brought a suit to recover the value of the cotton against the fourth partner who owned the particular leg of the cat. The judge examined the case and decided thus: "The leg that had the oil rag on it was hurt; the cat could not use that leg, in fact it held up that leg and ran with the other three legs. The three unhurt legs, therefore, carried the fire to the cotton, and are alone culpable. The injured leg is not to be blamed. The three partners who owned the three legs with which the cat ran to the cotton will pay the whole value of the bales to the partner who was the proprietor of the injured leg."

—A new star in the W. C. T. U. constellation has appeared. We refer to Miss Scovel, of Tennessee. Miss Scovel was healed by faith after a long-continued illness, and is giving her entire time to Bible work. The Hillsboro (Ohio) Herald says of her: "She is a theologian, logician and philosopher in a high degree. Eloquence being a secondary gift or accomplishment among the rare possessions of this extraordinary woman."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The way the Massachusetts legislature treats public questions—Romish tactics—The G. A. R. and Rome—A curious kind of "brotherhood"—Rev. L. W. Frink and his fight with the Grange.

Periodically the Massachusetts legislature bends all its lofty powers of mind to a wrestle with the dog question. Whether our law-makers are suddenly seized with a conscientious fear that they may not be earning their salaries, or whether they consider the discussion of this interesting subject an agreeable variety by which to enliven the dryness of ordinary legislative duty, nobody knows—probably they do not themselves—but it has come to be an established rule that once a year this ridiculous farce should be enacted. Usually there is a bill introduced to put the tax so high as to make it practically prohibitory, but the last one proposed makes it incumbent on every owner of a canine to keep the animal muzzled the whole time without any regard to size, breed or disposition. "Man's most faithful friend" found plenty of advocates, however, who rallied in force and defeated the foolish and barbarous measure. This would not be worth writing about were it not to show by contrast the reverse side of the shield. This same body, which can afford to spend its time in such a senseless discussion, when a really vital question comes up can seem to see nothing in it but a matter for coarse, flippant joking. It is not very long since the bill to prevent the sale of tobacco to minors was so treated, and with so much contumely and insult that more than one woman who attended the hearing avowed herself henceforth a full believer in woman suffrage; as it was patent to every intelligent mind that if they had stood on the same plane as male constituents, having the same voting power, no legislative body would have so dared to treat their just and reasonable demand. As an illustration of this disposition on the part of our law-makers to poke fun at any reform measure which comes up, take the case of Mr. Hill, of Northampton, who has lately resigned his seat for the reason that he could not retain it consistently with his self-respect. Of course the liquor interest tried to make it appear a mere matter of pique on Mr. Hill's part because the rest of House did not agree with him; but these are the facts: Mr. Hill had presented a bill authorizing the search of persons for concealed liquors. To this a Mr. Mitchell, of Charlestown, offered the ridiculous amendment that the use of a stomach pump should not be authorized, and, incredible as it may seem, the House endorsed this coarse jest, careless of the appearance it would make on the State records, by a rising vote! No wonder Mr. Hill's sense of self-respect would not permit him to keep his seat in a body which could thus make of its legislative duties a mere mockery.

The March meetings have been generally satisfactory to the friends of prohibition. If the law can be enforced in these many country towns which have voted No, Massachusetts will have at least four-fifths of her area, though not four-fifths of her population, under practical prohibition. A case which occurred in Blackstone in '88 shows how Romanism can combine forces with the saloon, if need be, to make war on our free schools. An "overflow" school was held in a certain building—pending the erection of a regular school-house—within 400 feet of which were four flourishing saloons and a licensed hotel. As the State law makes such proximity illegal, one or the other must go, the saloons or the school. Soon there was a petition circulated to remove not the former but the latter, on the plea that the building was unsafe, the petition being headed by the proprietor of one of the saloons, and clinched by the resident priest. Members of the W. C. T. U. who saw through the subtle scheme, the building having been pronounced safe by the State Inspector, rallied to oppose it, and it was not carried. But before the year closed a new school-house was erected, and the licensed venders of crime and death could pursue their murderous business without ban or check. American people are very easily humbugged. They are by nature frank and unsuspecting, and do not understand either practicing or combatting the Macchiavelli craft, which has been for centuries an inherent part of the church of Rome. But we need to keep our eyes open. Under what seem to be only innocent devices for the public good the hand of the Jesuit may be weaving the web in which to strangle our religious liberties. That rum and Romanism together inspired the proposed ordinance to prohibit the distribution of handbills on the streets of Boston does not admit of a doubt, but now Mammon has unexpectedly come to the rescue. The printers and paper manufacturers, it is found, have something to say about it, and as they claim it would cause a loss of half a million to the business of the city, the prospect is that the objectionable ordinance will not be passed. A great effort is at present being made, led by some of Boston's most influential business men, to obtain State aid for the New England Conservatory of Music. This is a noble institution, and the arguments in favor have a plausible sound, but the Woman's Voice, the able organ edited by Eliza Trask Hill, denounces it as a dangerous move, an entering wedge to obtain State aid for parochial schools.

The G. A. R. post in Brighton recently buried two comrades, and in both cases the priest refused to allow the American flag, which covered the body, to come into the church, or the members of the post to enter with their G. A. R. belts on, whereat the Grand Army men are filled with exceeding indignation, though it is a question whether they consider the insult to their patriotism or their lodge the most flagrant.

Zion's Herald is a New England sheet, so, perhaps, the following choice bit from its Southern correspondence, showing that the lodge spirit of caste is the same North or South, may be read with interest. After praising Dr. A. E. P. Albert, editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, of whom it says, "Not a criticism has reached us but hearty enthusiasm for the man and his work," it goes on to add, "Dr. Albert is another object lesson to the relentless prejudice in that city in regard to the possibilities of the Negro. . . . For years Mr. Bently was the business manager of the Southwestern. He was a noble man and highly esteemed. He was a member of the lodge of Knights of Pythias of New Orleans. In his last illness he requested Dr. Albert, with whom he had been so closely associated, to attend his funeral. At the sad service the Knights of Pythias absolutely refused to be present because Dr. Albert was to officiate. When prejudice will thus extinguish the sacred relations of brotherhood how can we be patient or moderate?" A "brotherhood," indeed! Does Zion's Herald really think that a Christian who believes that the Lord hath made of one blood all men that dwell on the earth, and that one Saviour has died for them all, can hold membership in any such "brotherhood?" and how can relations incompatible with Christianity be in any sense "sacred?"

Rev. L. W. Frink, of Boylston, continues to keep up his fight with the Grange, and his opponents adopt the usual lodge tactics of abuse rather than argument. Well may he desire our prayers that God may deliver him from wicked and unreasonable men. The Manchester (N. H.) Union has taken up the matter, and the flame seems likely to spread. God bless this brave witness for the truth. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1890.

At a public meeting recently a distinguished Washington pastor expressed the opinion that it is more difficult to be a Christian at the national capital than in any other American city. He said Washington presents obstacles to religious life such as do not exist elsewhere, and that there was a spirit of worldliness which was fostered by the exactions of society. He spoke of the difficulties that lie in the way of a Christian life here, and laid special emphasis upon the uncertainties of politics as associated with the career of those in government service. A number of clergymen, as distinguished as the first, joined issue with him, and held that he had drawn his shadows a little too darkly around the capital.

Said one of them: "Washington life is peculiar in that it is pleasure-seeking. In New York it is money-seeking. In New Orleans it is fun-seeking. The temptation is only of a different kind, and I do not see that any more temptations stand in the way of the Christian here than elsewhere."

Another said: "I have lived in Brooklyn, in Chicago, in Indianapolis, for years in each place. I have been stationed here in Washington for eight years, and I must say I have met with less vice in this city than in all the others, and with more thoroughly good and earnest people than in any community I ever saw."

Another, speaking of the social life here, said: "What is it after all—these receptions from 4 to 7? These little teas and dinners are as innocent as can be. I go to them and enjoy them. I meet friends at these receptions, and I find it a great help to me in my church work because I am thus enabled to meet many who I would find otherwise difficult to see." He insisted that it was perfectly consistent and proper to go from the prayer meeting to some reception, and that receptions and teas had no tendency to draw one from religious work.

This optimistic minister readily admitted, however, that there were many exceptions to his rose-tinted picture, and that at some receptions they would have punch, and that some of the dinners were given by fast men. Still, he said, that happens everywhere, and good people must discriminate. The general average of social life here he held to be innocent and not to be decried.

Still another well-known Washington clergyman related that whenever he went away from here his friends asked him how he managed to live in such a sink-hole of iniquity as Washington. Now he thinks the capital is a pretty moral place as compared with others, and quite as much of a church-going city as any. He said he knew that there was licentiousness and gambling and extravagant tendencies in Washington society that are harmful. He mentioned an immense sum of money that a wealthy gentleman recently gave his sister to be spent in social gayeties in Washington. The champagne that was bought with that money, and the extravagance that followed it, were very demoralizing, but the speaker did not think that such rare and extreme cases proved that an unhealthy tone existed in the average social life of this city. *

"A trifling misunderstanding between Slusher and Smith factions at Flat Lick, Ky., resulted in five sudden deaths, after which Sheriff Calloway was fatally shot while trying to arrest a Smith. An accommodating neighbor, who came to Barbourville after a load of coffins, told the tale." The above from a Cincinnati daily shows how common has become the practice of murder among these mountain clans of Kentucky, and how little attention they are receiving from the authorities and the press. A Christian lawyer of Kentucky, who had been in the habit of giving to the support of foreign missions, said recently that he had been reading Judge Lilly's report to the legislature on crime and violence in his district, and he had concluded that so long as there is so much heathenism in Kentucky we can much better afford to use our means for the support of missionaries in this mountain region than to send them elsewhere. It is probable that Bourbon and moonshine whisky is the most important factor in these conflicts. But whatever the cause, they are a disgrace to Kentucky and to the nation. We would not undervalue foreign missions, but if there are any heathen in the world that need to be converted to the Gospel of peace, they are these mountain clans.

Governor Campbell, of Ohio, has made a statement in justification of his presence at the recent celebration of Washington's birthday, under the auspices of the Patriotic Order Sons of America, in Columbus, O. He made no apology for being a guest of a secret organization, but only for the speech made by L. W. O'Brien, State Vice-President of the order, who, the Governor says, is a mechanic, and not a public speaker, and probably said more than he really meant. O'Brien's remarks were construed to be an attack on the Catholic church and priestcraft.

—The young evangelist A. F. Houser, whose good work in a protracted effort at Wheaton was noticed in December, is now in Rochelle, Ill. At Clinton, Iowa, his fervor for the truth and faithful condemnation of the evils of lodgery gained him a warning from the "White Caps" of some secret society of the place.

—Among the missionaries who sailed for Liberia Jan. 30, 1890, to reinforce Bishop Taylor's missions in Africa, was Miss Mary O'Neil of Pittsburgh, a convert from the Roman Catholic church.

REFORM NEWS.

ILLINOIS CAMPAIGNING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Kishwaukie I went to Belvidere, and called upon several parties, two of whom subscribed for the Cynosure. From Belvidere I went to Marengo where I arranged for lectures at some future time.

On Monday I turned to the southwest and stopped at Lockport in Will county and made several calls. Rev. John Lee, the pastor of the M. E. church, is taking a lively interest in the investigation of secret societies and will speak at the Conference to meet in the First Methodist church at Chicago next month. From here I went to Morris, Grundy county, and called upon J. J. Cox and wife, who are earnest friends of the N. C. A., and intend to devote the most of their property to the carrying forward of this great reform.

From Morris I went to Marsailles and called upon Rev. A. Ethridge, pastor of the Congregational church, and others. I stopped over one night and attended their meeting for prayer, and was pleased with the interest manifested in their church work. I secured several donations to the fund to send the Cynosure to the ministers.

I then came to Streator where I stopped one night and had the privilege of meeting with the brethren for prayer, and secured a promise of $10 for the N. C. A. funds. I went into the country to see Rev. Jacob Phillips, an Old School U. B., who donated $7 for different objects. He was anxious that I spend some time lecturing in the U. B. churches in that vicinity. The next morning he took me several miles to see his pastor, who was in hearty sympathy with my work, but for reasons that seemed valid, preferred to have the work postponed a few weeks.

I therefore came on to Wyanet, Bureau county. While writing in the P. O., my young friend Mr. Herrick, formerly a student in Wheaton College, but now a medical student, through whose kindness I had an opportunity to ride into the country several miles to the parsonage of the Bureau church and stopped with Rev. Pinkney. I spoke thrice on the Sabbath and got out an appointment to lecture at the Hickory Grove church on Tuesday night.

As this field is new to me I intend to continue my prospecting tour through Henry, Mercer, Warren, Knox and other counties, returning in time to attend the Conference April 22 and 23. Parties desiring lectures can address me in care of the Cynosure office.

Satan is stirring up those whom he can deceive and lead to great activity in their lodge work. Christ by the Holy Spirit is lifting up a standard against these works of darkness. The elect, whom Satan would, if possible, deceive, are being enlightened and rescued from the meshes of the net that is spread for their feet, and into which so many uninstructed ones have gone. But the truth, when it comes to their knowledge, makes them free. No one, who rightly understands the nature of the secret lodge system, will continue to adhere thereto, who has a heart of love and loyalty to Christ. Good men may be deceived and drawn into the lodge, but if the light that is in them does not become darkness, they will soon perceive, as did Mr. Finney when he was but a babe in Christ, that the lodge is no place for a Christian; and, like him, they will abandon it forever. Let continual prayer be offered for the deliverance of God's people from these snares of the wicked one.

C. F. HAWLEY.

GOOD RESULTS OF AGITATION IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Mar. 12, 1890.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—On Sabbath the 2nd inst. I preached a sermon to my congregation in this city from 2 Kings 17: 33, on the theme, "Mongrel Religions," in which I held up Freemasonry and Orangeism as striking examples of the half-breed religion of the text. A reporter of one of our city papers called after the service and obtained an outline of the sermon which appeared in the paper the next morning. I think I sent it to you. In this mail I send you two papers, in one of which is a criticism on my sermon by a Presbyterian Doctor of Divinity in our city, and in the other is my reply together with a statement showing the unfairness of the Telegraph.

If this little agitation should be attended with as good results as the one I had with Dr. Macrae in July, 1884, I shall be very thankful. Dr. M. was very much worked up at the time and wrote me a letter in reply to my Open Letter to him, that was in very bad temper and wanting in his usual dignity. Some time after I learned from one of his brother ministers here that he had withdrawn from the lodge.

On the day last week that Dr. MacDougal's article appeared Dr. Macrae and I were together at a funeral and he referred to the article that had appeared that morning criticising my sermon. As we talked freely about the matter, to my surprise he confessed that he had done a foolish thing to write to me as he did, and had been sorry for it ever since; and before we separated he told me that he had withdrawn from the Masons. I gave him my hand and told him I regarded him as a brother more than ever.

This incident clearly teaches us that we shall not lose the respect and kind regard of men by bearing a strong testimony in a kindly way against these entanglements of secretism. It also shows that it is only necessary to present the facts to men of true Christian character, and they will abandon the lodge. The truth and Spirit of God are as potent as ever. I pray that the outcome of the present stir in the enemy's camp may be that many will see the mongrel character of the religion of Masonry and leave it in time. Yours very sincerely,

A. J. McFARLAND.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MEMPHIS BIBLE AND NORMAL INSTITUTE.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The name of this institute is doubtless familiar to the readers of the Cynosure. As you well know, it is the outgrowth of the brave fight for righteousness on the part of brethren Countee, Brinkley and others of Memphis against whisky, tobacco, secretism, and kindred evils.

The light shines forth clearly and its influence is steadily and markedly increasing. One by one the churches are swinging into line, and not many years will pass, if the institution continues to grow in favor, before there will be a solid phalanx confronting the enemy. Thus will the consecrated zeal of the lamented Woodsmall and the benefactions of Peter Howe continue to bless the generations.

The attendance has been large in the various departments, over 380 names already upon the roll. A spirit of earnestness characterizes the students in all the grades. Besides the training of preachers and teachers, and the training in domestic science, and in the manual arts (this last in its incipency for lack of facilities), much interest has centered this session about the mission and nurse-training class of married women, conducted by Miss Barkley, a returned missionary and an educated physician. Several of the first physicians of the city are volunteer lecturers to the class. It is anticipated that this class will prove the nucleus of a nurse-training school, and so a most useful and much-needed vocation be opened to the colored women who are receiving religious training in the Bible and mission class.

A novel feature of the school this year is the lunch counter managed by the cooking class. Soups, biscuits and savory lunches are served daily, to the great satisfaction of the students. Thus in this department as in all others theory and practice are combined, and the idea of independence and self-support is fostered and illustrated.

You will remember that this is the peculiarity of the institution, being dependent upon no missionary or philanthropic society. It makes heavy pulling and some dark days, but manifestly it is the way out and up for any people in the process of development.

This year especially do the trustees deserve and need the co-operation of all who are in sympathy with this work of faith and labor of love, because of the failure of crops and the consequent financial straits of the people in all this country. The tuitions and donations from the colored churches —aggregating $2,700—will pay somewhat more than one-half of the expenses, which for a school of this kind is quite unusual. Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness (rightness) is the motto constantly before teachers, pupils and board, and we have faith that the $1,000, the "needful" thing, "will be added" unto us. The annual meeting is March 31st. Remember us in your prayers.

H. R. TRAVER, Principal.

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR LOCAL AGENTS.

YORK, Pa., March 6, 1890.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—The year 1889 was a very bad one for me; as a member of my family was sick for four months, a flood gave me five feet of very dirty water in the house, and I have quite a long list of troubles to get over. But notwithstanding all this, I can make a report that may encourage some of our friends to try to push the reform against secret societies.

During the year 1889 I sold 1,400 anti-secret, anti-Catholic and Prohibition newspapers, about one-fourth of them being Cynosures. I also sold 104 anti-secret pamphlets, and 145 anti-Catholic books and pamphlets.

In 1884 we had about ten feet of dirty flood-water in the house; and this flood cost us about $600. So you can see that I can sympathize with Noah, and also with the unfortunate citizens of Johnstown.

I hope that all the readers of the Cynosure who can do so, will sell or distribute the Cynosure and the anti-secret books and pamphlets, as it is the best thing we can do to arouse the friends of civil and religious freedom.

We should sell all anti-secret publications; but I find that the illustrated pamphlets sell themselves, while I have to use my tongue quite freely to sell the others. This is a very plain hint to both publishers and agents. Even three or four illustrations, if good and attractive, will add to the chances of those who sell.

Many famous men have been book sellers, book agents, printers, etc. S. R. Wells, the famous phrenologist, once said that the best way to get a good wife was to get good books and keep both eyes open while you go around selling them. The single men who read this may take this plain hint free of charge, and, as the Masons say, govern themselves accordingly.

If floods, cyclones, earthquakes, the "grippe," and the other ills that flesh is heir to, will only let me off for the year 1890, I will perhaps give a better report, and a few more plain hints in regard to some other important matters.

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

THE BAPTIST PASTORS OF NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since your readers have heard from this part of the vineyard; but, thank God, we are yet here battling for God and the right. Although the way sometimes seems gloomy and dangerous, we can hear the voice of our dear Saviour saying, "Lo! I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

It seemed as though—and, indeed, I thought that—our Baptist anti-secretists had been scared into silence, until a few weeks ago when it became a public rumor that the Grand Lodge of Freemasons was going to lay the corner-stone of the new building of the old Baptist church of this city at the conference of Baptist ministers. Elders A. S. Jackson, G. W. Walker, John H. Fleeming, C. W. Williams, J. Baptist, J. Marks, Wm. W. Davis, S. T. Clanton, B. D., editor of the Christian Herald, and myself, all arose with one united voice and denounced the actions of the pastor of the old church in inviting the Freemasons to lay the corner-stone. The pastor seemed much affected at his error, but it was gone too far, he said, to be remedied. We are told that the aforesaid pastors visited the church on Feb. 9 and preached; but before the "Sons of Hiram" were ready for solemnizing their infernal lodge rites over the stone the prominent Baptist pastors had left the scene. I never visited the grand Masonic Baalite scene at all.

Through the kindness of Bro. C. W. Sterry of Pontiac, Ill., I have been successful in purchasing two lots, corner of Second and Clara streets, in a splendid locality, whereon I expect, D. V., by the first of April to try and commence building a new house of worship for the St. Matthew Baptist congregation. The lodge element hates to see my little church prosper, but God is just fighting our battles. We lack yet $275 to finishing paying for our lots; also lumber to build will cost us much. We would be thankful for any amount contributed to help us. We have a day school of 56 in our little chapel, also we have a sewing school every Friday at 3 P. M. We would be thankful for anything to help make our work a success. Our custom on Friday is to teach the little ones to sew, crochet, knit and mend garments; also where there are poor children we occasionally give a little jacket, coat, apron, dress, or such things as we are able to furnish. God helps us in the work. Despite our opposition and many foes, God has helped us to increase in membership from 13 to 36 from last May, and in our Sunday-school from 25 to 131. From the 12th of May, 1889, to Jan. 1, 1890, our little church gave to the sick and helpless $20.20 cash and some three hundred or more pounds of groceries, and on Feb. 7 gave a decent funeral to one of our deceased members.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

A NATIONAL PROSPECT.

ROGERS PARK, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your editorials of March 6, on "Christ the Reform Center," and "The World's Fair," sets before your many readers the importance of the duties which they owe. The fair will be a great opportunity for exercising them; and that there will be a great contest between the forces of good and evil cannot admit of a doubt. You tell us that "the question of all history has been who shall be worshiped, whether the devil, who receives the homage in all false rites, or Christ in all true." You tell us also that "the Jesuit is ubiquitous," and "his brother of the secret lodge is by his side" in "every popular movement." Yes, not only lodgeites and papists but their "ap(e)stic" time-servers are willing supporters of popular delusions, ever ready to conform to, rather than reform the wrongs in the country, or in such popular Christianity as Christ would reprove.

One thing is too much overlooked, viz., that our politics are unscrupulously used to support abuses in the church and in the state, by Rome and her followers or imitators, the "apists," but the reformers are, alas! much divided. The soundest of them are those who are truly loyal to Christ in his own kingdom, which is not of this world, and therefore they dare not admit party politics into it!

This loyalty prompts the good soldiers of Christ to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and to "fight the good fight of faith" only with the weapons which divine wisdom has appointed, one being the sword of the Spirit, or Word of God, whilst they also pay taxes and are loyal to the civil power (Cæsar) as a "terror to evil doers and a praise to them who do well." But whose glory does the loyalty of lodgery and papistry and apistry seek first? Not the glory of our Christ in their ritual and worship, but the glory of their respective "false teachers and false Christ." Grand they may be in lodge esteem, or be enthroned like the Pope as supreme representatives of the divine will, and therefore claiming the right to plan work politically, and in every other way in order to obtain supremacy over the government and people of the whole world! Universal brotherhoods, indeed! But destitute of the very first principle which can truly give them a just claim to the title, namely, obedience to Christ.

Worn out in parts of Europe, Rome sees her new opportunity in the too great laxity of our free institutions towards the hordes of her foreign members whose allegiance is due first to the Pope. Rome has skillfully laid her plans, and her wisdom, experience and cunning will probably be found to far exceed that of the impulsive, brave Southerners in the late unhappy strife which threatened our national existence.

Freemen of these United States, watch your public schools! Watch the grants of your legislatures! Watch and carefully guard the fundamental principle of your glorious Constitution which your heroic Forefathers in wisdom bequeathed to you, free from the anti-Christian corruption of state connection with the Church of Christ, the wife of the Lamb. You quote Gladstone, "that the only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with divine revelation," and Christendom responds, Amen and Amen. But how sad to think that millions among us are dupes of "false teachers!" and that many are actually being trained secretly in military exercises! For what purpose? Before the execution of the seven anarchists in Chicago, hundreds of them used to march in our streets with their banners flying. How of the United Brotherhoods of Mormons, and Rome's Jesuits and Clan-na-Gaels, and others of like character who are oath-bound to aid them in preference to our civil government when so required? Verily, your closing question was all important: "What think ye of Christ?" For those who are loyal to the New Testament Christ can be relied upon as loyal to our civil government, and as good citizens every time; but those who are bound to the beast, or his image, cannot be relied upon if a time of severest need shall again test the loyalty of her citizens.

Christian citizens, on you devolves the great work! Let us all be zealous in the instruction of our inhabitants, whether born under and influenced by despotisms, whether abroad or among us, or rejoicing in their inherited freedom under our Stars and Stripes. Yours, R. PARK.

A W. C. T. U. PUZZLE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In one column of a daily paper in one of the leading cities of the great West appeared two notices which caught my eye. One advertised that the regular meetings of the Nationalists were held in the W. C. T. U. Temple on Sunday afternoon; the other that the Sabbath Observance department of the W. C. T. U. was giving lectures upon keeping the Lord's day.

Were these two notices wholly consistent? was a natural question. Interviewing a leading W. C. T. U. officer, I asked whether their committee approved the holding of political meetings in their rooms on Sundays. I was informed that the Nationalist clubs did not discuss politics in those meetings. Their next notice announced that the ballot would be the subject of discussion at their next Sunday meeting! In a subsequent report of the Nationalist Sunday meeting at the Temperance Hall the topics stated were: "Persian Civilization of the Fifteenth Century," "Co-operative Principle in Government," "Nationalization of Railroads," etc. The only thing I saw about it that looked specially religious, was the statement that in the coming dispensation of nationalism women would not marry for money, but for love.

The great cause of national reform is too valuable to endanger itself by holding its secular gatherings upon the Lord's day, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has a reputation too sacred to allow it to be compromised by countenancing such an innovation. Whereunto will this grow?

PROHIBITION PATRIOT.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM A WELL-KNOWN WRITER ON ROMANISM.

The Cronin tragedy, the recent disclosures in Salt Lake City, and the stealthy movements of the Jesuits, especially in Boston, ought to lead every intelligent American citizen to believe that there are, at least, some secret societies in our midst that are a positive evil. I believe that "a candid discussion" of the entire subject will result in good.—(Rev.) JOHN LEE.

ANOTHER CHURCH VOTES RIGHT.

It may be too late to avail anything, but it will express to you my hearty sympathy and concurrence in the proposed conference of the friends of truth and light. I don't know whether I ought to promise certainly to be there, but, God willing, it will be my pleasure to come and see face to face so many of the old veterans of reform. Some three months since the little church here adopted a resolution of unalterable opposition to all secret associations.—(Rev.) W. W. AMES, Coloma, Wis.

HALLECK FLOYD ON THE CONFERENCE.

I hail with great joy the awakening of the churches on this important interest. The secret lodge power has rent in twain my own church (United Brethren in Christ), and it is sapping the very life out of the churches of America. I see but few names of United Brethren signed to the call. But if it were presented you could get large numbers to sign it. We are, and have been for more than one hundred years, opposed to the secret orders.

THE WORLD AND THE CHURCH WALKING TOGETHER.

I hope your work may result in much good, not only in showing the necessity of churches keeping from "unequal yoking" with the lodge, but from worldly conformity in every phase. One of the worst troubles I find is the introduction of worldly purposes and principles into the management of the church, and the losing sight of the one simple, grand and proper purpose of the organization,—to tell the story of the cross in "demonstration of the Spirit and of power."—F. O. CUNNINGHAM.

VICTORY THROUGH FAITH.

I have no language to express my hatred to the system of secrecy. I have no quarrel with individuals that are drawn into the meshes of the fraternities; duped in, you may say. For while they are made to say that they go in of their own free will and accord, yet such is not the case. Many are over persuaded to take the terrible step, with the promise that it shall be nothing that shall in any wise interfere with their duty to themselves or their families, or to society, or to their God; when in truth it does interfere with each and all of these. But I had no thought of trying to delineate the evils of secretism, for their name is legion. But I feel like asking for the remedy. My own idea is that prayer is our stronghold. While I appreciate the sacrificing labors of the noble ones who have faced the persecution they must meet who dare to speak against the lodge, yet I feel that without the Holy Spirit to crown their efforts, all would fall like water spilled on the ground; and that comes in answer to the fervent prayers of God's saints, of whom there are many besieging the throne of grace daily on this subject. God does hear prayer. I believe slavery was abolished in answer to prayer, and that was a formidable thing to meet, but not too hard for the Lord. Neither is secretism; and if the abominable thing was wiped out, the saloons could be handled. But while they are so identified and held up one by the other, they are a great foe to God and humanity. But we may not despair while Jehovah lives and Jesus pleads in our behalf. A true friend to the cause.—MRS. J. GRIFFIN.

GOD WILL JUDGE US.

I believe God punishes nations for their sin. He punished ours for slavery just as we deserved. Now I should think Masons and liquor men would tremble. God will surely put them down with all who uphold them. It's a question of time, that is all. Justice is sometimes slow, but always sure. God loves America and will purify it in his own good time, and I want to be found on the Lord's side always. For once I am going to vote as I pray.—C. M. SWAN, Union City, Michigan.

LITERATURE.

Miss Willard has the first place in the March number of Our Day and discusses the "Progress of the Prohibition Party" and the probable effect of the action of the seceding W. C. T. U. on the growth of prohibition sentiment. "New Biography of Jonathan Edwards," by Rev. J. W. Wellman, will be welcomed by all theologians of every denomination as an important and valuable document. Dr. D. C. Greene of Japan contributes a paper on "Joseph Hardy Neesima," the Japanese missionary, whose recent death is lamented by all friends of missions. The Monday Lectures, now in their 15th year, were opened Feb. 3. "Dr. Storrs' Policy in Missions," by Joseph Cook, is his first discourse in this season's course and appears in this number. Our Day furnishes the only authorized report of the Boston Monday Lectures. Other departments include "Denial of Constitutional Rights to Colored Citizens in the South," by Hon. John M. Langston of Virginia. A review of "Hon. Carroll D. Wright's Report on Divorce," by Rev. Will C. Wood, is supplemented by an "expert opinion" on the same topic by Rev. Dr. Dike of the National Divorce Reform League. The German Emperor as a Labor Reformer; British Opportunities in Africa; The New British Extradition Treaty, etc., are the topics of the editorial notes.

Mr. Stanley has advanced so far with his account of his adventures in achieving the rescue of Emin as to be able to announce the title of his book, "In Darkest Africa, and the Quest, Rescue, and Retreat of Emin, the Governor of Equatoria." All sensible persons will await with patience for the publication of the authentic account, though there will be an abundance of Stanley literature turned out from the printing presses during the next few months. Charles Scribner's Sons will be the only authorized publishers in this country.

The old reliable and uniformly popular American Agriculturist has a finely illustrated article on the grand prize corn crop of 1889, which was raised by Z. J. Drake in Marlborough county, S.C. Here on an acre of the poor land of the South, which in 1887 produced only 5 bushels per acre, by proper application of manures of various kinds there were grown 255 bushels of corn. This acre won a $500 prize. This March number of the Agriculturist is full of good things for the farmer.

Good Health for March is a very readable number. Dr. Kellogg, the editor, continues his attack on the pile-doctor frauds. These gentlemen are routed by his logic. Dr. Oswald writes in a very entertaining manner of Japan, and Dr. Alcott shows, from an interesting experiment, how a vegetable diet supplies the need of water-drinking. The various departments are full of valuable hints and suggestions.

A BALLOT ON "REFORMS."

"THE WOMB OF THE PRESENT IS BIG WITH REFORMS. IT IS AS WHEN GAD WAS BORN—HIS MOTHER CRIED, 'A TROOP COMETH.'"

Each reader will please indicate his vote by penciling a circle around "Yes" or "No" after each question. If undecided put the circle about the "?." After so marking the whole list, return it to the Associated Press of Reforms, E. 90th St., N. Y.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MARCH 20, 1890.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigues in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago April 22 and 23, 1890.

ADDITIONAL NAMES.

C. E. Cesander, past. Luth. ch., Geneva and St. Charles, Ill.

RAILROAD RATES.

The sub-committee appointed by the N. C. A. Board to secure rates from the railway companies has secured from the Western States Passenger Association a promise of a round trip rate of one fare and one third to all who secure certificates from the ticket agent when they purchase tickets, showing that they have paid full fare to Chicago. The roads making this engagement are the Chicago & Alton, Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago, Burlington & Northern, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn. & Omaha, Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City, Chicago, Santa Fe & California, Illinois Central, Iowa Central, and the Wabash. Delegates must remember, when purchasing their tickets on any of these roads to Chicago, to ask for the certificate that will entitle them to a return fare at one-third rates.

The following persons have definitely promised to address the Chicago Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System:

Prof. Henry C. King, Oberlin College.
" Joseph Moore, Earlham "
" A. A. Smith, Northwestern "
" C. M. Esbjorn, Augustana "
" Joseph L. Daniels, Olivet " Rev. W. P. McNary, D.D., United Presbyterian church, Tarkio, Mo.
Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, D.D., Reformed Presbyterian, Dennison, Kans.
Rev. John Lee, Methodist Episcopal, Lockport, Ills.
" H. A. Day, editor Wesleyan Herald.
" B. T. Roberts, editor Free Methodist.
Bishop Halleck Floyd, United Brethren.
Rev. Thomas D. Wallace, D.D., 8th Presbyterian Church, Chicago.
Rev. P. S. Henson, D.D., 1st Baptist Church, Chicago.
Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., 1st Congregational Church, Chicago.
Five colleges and eleven denominations are represented by the above speakers.

Satan is never more pleased than to be the subject of a joke. There are few debates on the question of his personality where he does not inspire a considerable part of the argument. The lodge likewise thrives on the funny stories about its terrors, and its goat, and so we see them repeated in its organs. They confound the reason so that the conscience is not troubled at the real horrors of the dark "chambers of imagery." The devil is well-pleased to have men become familiar with anything but the reality of secretism.

GOD'S METHOD.

The Christian Conference next month (April 22) bids fair to secure a more general representation from the American churches than any previous meeting. Hence, the methods recommended and adopted by that body are of the first importance.

The American churches were in theory opposed to human slavery from 1620 to 1863, two hundred and forty-three years. But, until immediate abolition was insisted on in 1831, slavery grew under their opposition. This deplorable result was on account of their mistake in method. The churches opposed it in words, but sheltered it in practice.

But slavery was a child of false worship,—the worst institution of heathenism. The first man born into the world killed the second because the latter worshiped Christ, through "faith," by a lamb; and the world's false worships have been paid to Satan, "a murderer from the beginning," ever since. Hence, the false worship of the secret lodge, as in the case of Dr. Cronin, includes the spirit of murder, and every crime this side. The April Conference, therefore, meets to consider a subject second in importance to none which has ever brought men together for deliberation.

In thirty short years from Christ, Christianity had overspread the then known world. The pagan historian Tacitus says, "In thirty years this letabilis superstitio (deadly superstition) has reached not only our great cities, but spread to the remotest country villages." Almost nineteen centuries have passed away since Tacitus wrote, and there are now fourteen hundred millions on our globe, two-thirds of whom to-day have not heard of Christ. Millions wear no clothes, and worship four-footed beasts and creeping things. This argues some terrible fault of method in opposing false worships. What is that fault?

No argument is needed to prove that lodges worship. The secret order of railroad conductors even have an altar standing in the center of their hall; and altars mean religion. The methods of opposition to these strange altars vary. The most common method by pulpit and press has been universal silence, the boon which evil spirits asked, but which Christ did not grant. The sage, John Quincy Adams, sixty years ago condemned this method, and the ignorance which it produced, in the sharp words, "An ignorance which they are careful to preserve!"

The next method adopted by our clergymen has been to refrain from joining secret lodges, and to condemn them in words while permitting and so sheltering them in their communions. But this is not God's method. Had he permitted false worships to mingle with the true, the Hebrew polity would have broken down centuries before the Saviour was born,—and for this plain reason: that without a mediator and access to God through him, no God is left to mortals but the "god of this world;" for the finite cannot apprehend the infinite. Hence, if God had allowed idolatry and tolerated idolaters among his chosen people, they would have had no religion but that of Cain, which had neither Messiah nor "faith."

He therefore excommunicated Cain, the first false worshiper, from the fellowship of mankind, because he invented his worship, offering the fruits of the earth without faith, or a lamb to represent the Saviour, "who died for our sins according to the Scriptures." With such a religion there could be no civil polity, no oath to swear witnesses by, and no Christ to "judge the world in righteousness;" and no person guilty of one sin could have had access to a holy God by the merits of a man that never sinned, that is by Christ. Hence, the whole Hebrew polity was administered by Moses and Joshua by God's immediate direction, upon the principle that to allow a strange worship would be to fail,—to leave mankind without a Saviour and the world without hope! And the history of our race would have gone out like the history of the posterity of Cain.

Look at the fidelity and severity, terrible to the transgressors, with which Moses enforced this one grand, fundamental principle. At Sinai he executed three thousand Israelites at one time, for adding a heathen ritual to an orthodox creed, attempting to worship the God who brought them from Egypt, by a calf, the symbol of the Egyptian religion; and he enacted this terrible necessity into a law (Deut. 13: 6-9):

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thy own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers; namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him, but thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people."

Joshua did a like act of fearful necessity when he executed Achan and his family for hiding the accursed things of idolatry in his tent. And he who condemns them as cruel would have blamed Washington for executing Andre by the laws of war, when the fate of the United States hung upon his fidelity. Those Hebrew leaders had to choose between the suppression of false worship and striking out the nation which was to bring in Christ, the Saviour of the world. They would have stricken out Christendom from the maps of our globe! Who wishes they had done it?

But Christ HAS come. And we are not now "under law, but under grace," though our weapons are mighty through God. We are to conquer, not by bloody executions, but "by the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony." But we must not fellowship the unfruitful works of darkness. False worship is as fatal now as it was then.

Let us pray for our April Conference that this great meeting may blend the fidelity of Moses and Joshua with the love of Christ and the power of the Holy Ghost. Let us not assume to be wiser than God, or be ignorant of Satan's "devices." In the power of the Spirit let this April Conference set a light on every mountain and hill-top in the United States, whose beams shall lighten "the dark places of the earth" now "full of the habitations of cruelty."

PAPACY IN AMERICA.

In his lengthy allocution, delivered at a secret consistory, Dec. 30, 1889, Pope Leo XIII. says, "Here (in Italy) our enemies never cease to attack the church, and are even daily becoming more bold;" "the rights of the Roman Pontiffs are attacked in the very city of Rome, and are so impaired in the minds of men that they are said to be of no greater importance than that which is generally ascribed to the affairs of Royal Houses." Not only so, but "everywhere the minds of men are inclining to the same direction, and all have the same object, namely, to raise enmity against an ancient religion," etc. Yet not quite "everywhere," for he says that, in the midst of this universal revolt against Papal pretensions in countries that have had plenty of experience with Catholicism, "a timely consolation has reached us from America." The Pope has most seriously looked upon every attempt made in America to secure the Catholic vote, and obsequiousness to the Catholic voter has been taken to mean humble obeisance. He is evidently impressed with the idea that not many days hence he will have an acknowledged representative at Washington and the United States an ambassador at the Vatican. What is to hinder such a result when all parties are clamoring for the Irish constituency?

But indifference to Catholic aggression is not universal. William Parel, the Episcopal bishop of Maryland, delivered a charge not long since to the clergymen of his diocese in which he says of Baltimore and the Roman Catholic priesthood: "This city is the central point of Roman Catholicism in this country. Here resides its highest prelate, and here it puts forth its greatest effort. It is using political and social influence to obtain the religious control of this Nation. God forbid that I should blame the Catholics for any honest effort made by them toward this end. The issue, however, is greater than ever before, and they are now concentrating all their hopes and plans in this land. We must meet this advance with loving resistance. Three-fourths of their members were born in Europe, and nearly all of the remainder are children of foreign-born parents. The foreign spirit in the church is remarkably powerful. Their members become Americanized very slowly, and are not being assimilated rapidly. Our rights as citizens and churchmen are menaced by this power. The laws of naturalization are abused, and an immigrant often becomes a voter before he has caught our tongue. We have been neglectful in calling the attention of our parishioners to the encroachment of the Roman Catholic Church. I do not advise you to preach a course of sermons attacking their doctrines, but when any movement is made by them detrimental to our political or social institutions don't be silent, but speak out bold and clear on the subject. Parochial schools should be increased, so that the school life of the young in our church may not be neglected. Of course you know that I do not antagonize the public school." If our Protestant pastors would rouse themselves from their criminal apathy and deal with the Catholic question as Americans and Christians we should more often hear such sentiments as the above, and more rapidly should we see the priest power fading from its seat of authority over the consciences of men.

—The Swedish Lutheran church of 300 members, at Princeton, Ill., was opened last Sabbath afternoon for a discourse on the relation of Christianity to the lodge by Bro. Hawley.

—An engineer in Fall River, Mass., having read an exposition of Odd-fellowship found his eyes suddenly opened to the character of the order to which he had never given a thought. He now wishes to read on Freemasonry and know if he has been equally ignorant respecting that order.

—A strange story of loss of memory is told by Arthur Dow, a church member and a "strict temperance man," who disappeared from Littleton, N. H., and was found by his wife in Seattle, Washington. One of the first things that he thought of when his memory returned was the lodge. "Why," he says, "I am a Knight Templar. I forgot all about it till this moment. If I had known it in my troubles I would not have wanted for anything." Why did he not think of his relation to the Christian church? That he did not proves that the lodge had supplanted his Saviour in his affections.

—A private letter from Secretary Stoddard tells of continued interest in our work in New England. The brief speech of Rev. R. D. Grant in the meeting of Baptist pastors in Boston, and the debate with secretists at Boylston by Rev. L. Frink, are hopeful indications. Bro. Stoddard preached March 9 in the Congregational and Baptist churches of Boylston. At Worcester on Monday evening of the present week Bro. Pratt was expecting an opportunity to speak and had well prepared himself with facts and arguments. Rev. W. T. Sleeper of that city promised to second his testimony, and he relied on Rev. I. J. Lansing's aid also.

—A. T. Wolff, the present Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, was some years ago pastor of a Wesleyan Methodist church in Sandy Lake, Pa., and an eager advocate of the work of the National Reform Association. He finally became a Presbyterian and removed to Illinois and took up the title of D. D. When pastor of the Presbyterian church of Paris, Ill., he ordered a bill of books of the N. C. A. for which he did not pay. Next year, when pastor at Alton, he acknowledged the debt and promised to pay, but has not to this day fulfilled his word. The next we hear of him is two years later that he is chosen Grand Chaplain. Since this exaltation we learn of his visiting Wheaton to coquet with Anti-masonic friends.

—The Philadelphia Times says: "We at last have a glimpse into the awful mysteries of Masonry in the veracious correspondent's account of the death of a West Virginia preacher, who was fatally hurt while being lowered into a pit during the progress of his initiation into the Royal Arch degree. It has been popularly supposed that the most thrilling ordeal to which the Masonic novice was put was riding the wild and frisky goat, and if it is well established that a part of the ceremony is to drop defenceless preachers into unpadded pits, the Masons will have to go or cushion the pit." Cushioned and padded pits would not be more inconsistent with the hiding place of the Ark of the Covenant than the ceremony of finding it as practiced by Masons. The silly story of "riding the wild and frisky goat" is not more silly than the things that are really done.

—An ex-alderman fell dead of heart disease in Chicago last week. Preparations were made for his funeral, in which the city authorities were to take part. They were ready to take their carriages when the order was countermanded and the funeral postponed. The priest refused a certificate that the dead man was a good Catholic, and without it the cemetery company would not allow the body to be buried. The priest's reason was that the man had joined another religious society, to-wit, the Masonic, and could no longer be recognized as a Catholic. The opinion was given that the Baltimore lay convention had decided to remove the ban of the Romish church from all secret societies, but the priest is acting under orders, and says no.

—Prof. Traver's letter on the Memphis Institute deserves a candid reading. The field over which the immediate influence of this school is exerted is western Tennessee, northern Mississippi and eastern Arkansas, with a population of about half a million colored people. Last year there were 374 enrolled, from 6 years old in the kindergarten, to 60 in the pastors' class. About 100 were adults, and 34 were pastors of churches. The school was inaugurated and is officered by colored men; all the instructors but the president and preceptress are colored. By its act of incorporation it is pledged to instruct against all forms of iniquity, and trustees, teachers and students must be opposed to the liquor traffic, tobacco and the lodge. Such an enterprise is truly worthy of ample support, and we desire to heartily recommend it to our readers.

—Principal Dickson, of Grand View Normal Institute, Tennessee, has issued an appeal to the friends of the mountain missions of Tennessee. Many are kept from the school because there are no accommodations for them, and those who do come are crowded into small rooms that were built for scarcely more than half the number. Two teachers hear classes at the same time in a room 18x24 feet in size, and the crayon dust, floating in the air when scholars are working at the blackboard, is almost stifling. The dormitory is crowded to twice its real capacity, and many walk six miles to school every day. Any contributions of money to change this unpleasant condition of affairs will be gladly received and accounted for by Mr. Dickson, at Grand View, or may be sent to the office of the American Missionary Association, 56 Reade street, New York. Contributions of clothing, books and papers may also be sent.

—The Religio-Philosophical Journal is the organ of the spiritualists in this city. Its former editor was shot by a man whose wife it is believed he seduced. This paper editorially assails the approaching April Conference as interfering with matters outside its business. What if there are secret societies? Men have a right to join them if they wish. On the other hand the Western Catholic News says: "The movement indicates an earnest effort on the part of these gentlemen to stem the swelling current of secret societies in this country, the bane and curse of every country in which they find a foothold. Secret societies have been the primary cause of much of the tyranny exercised by European governments; and secret societies, if not checked in this country, will lead to revolution and anarchy. Every department of the local, State and National Government is honey-combed by one or more secret societies. The Catholic church is on record as the great opponent of secret societies and never fails to denounce them as injurious to the welfare of the human family. When a member of the church joins a secret society, let its aim or object be what it may, he ceases to be a member of the church and is cut off from all her benefits."

The Pope in his late encyclical gives council which, for policy's sake, it would appear as though he should have omitted, but which tradition and the scheme of the church requires that he should declare. It is that Catholics owe allegiance in all political matters first of all to the church; that is to say, that church interests must always be considered superior to those of the state, and be cared for accordingly. Even if it make him a poor citizen, or even a traitor to his country. The true Catholic must be loyal to Rome. With this as the declared policy of the Pope, it is curious to hear Catholics complain that in the United States they are ostracized politically, or, at least, that the prevailing sentiment of the country is hostile to their advancement. Why should it be otherwise?—United Presbyterian.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

GRAND UNITED ORDER OF BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF FRIENDSHIP.

Among the villainous schemes for defrauding the colored people of the South out of their scanty and hard-earned wages, there is perhaps none that is at the same time so specious, deceptive, so mean and cruel as the secret society known by the above title. It is a weak imitation of Freemasonry. Any one at all acquainted with the ritual of the Blue Lodge, cannot fail to see the earmarks of the "order."

Like its prototype it is eminently religious, and in like manner it is a religion in which both men and devils can unite. Members of this order must believe in God. "The devils also believe and tremble." But in neither case are they required to believe in Christ. In the forms laid down to be used there is a careful exclusion of his name. It is true that some Christian hymns are used, but in such connections as to make them blasphemous rather than devotional. Only so much religion is put into it as will satisfy the demands of an unenlightened conscience, and to terrify all who discard its behests.

There are seven degrees, each with its grips, signs and passwords, which for the convenience of outsiders we give together with the mode of initiation in the first degree.

The following are the titles of the officers which are abbreviated in the ritual: Most Eminent Monarch, Princess, Provos, Provossess, Recorder, Securesess, Prelate, Inspectress, Provider, Senior Warden, Junior Warden, the term Most Eminent being prefixed to each.

Persons, both male and female, are eligible to membership if between the ages of 15 and 60.

The form of initiation is as follows:

FORM OF INITIATION.

M. E. M.—Brothers and sisters, we are now ready to initiate candidates.

M. E. R. and M. E. I.—You will now retire to the ante-room and examine the candidates by asking the following questions:

M. E. R.—Candidates, do you solemnly declare upon your honor, that, uninfluenced by mercenary motives, unbiased by friends, you freely and voluntarily offer yourselves as candidates for the mysteries of the Grand United Order of Brothers and Sisters of Friendship?

Candidate.—I do.

M. E. R.—Do you believe in the existence of Almighty God, the maker and governor of the universe?

Candidate.—I do.

M. E. R.—Do you solemnly declare and affirm that the statement you are about to make shall be the whole truth and nothing else but the truth, so help you God?

Candidate.—I do.

Are you a man of one wife? (or woman with one husband, as the case may be). Are you lawfully married to her? How many children have you? Are you at peace with your neighbors?

The candidate shall give entire satisfaction to all of the questions.

M. E. R.—Do you solemnly declare before Almighty God, that if you are admitted to membership in this order, that you will cheerfully conform to all the established laws, usages and customs of the fraternity?

Candidate.—I do.

M. E. I.—Are you willing to suffer any punishment that the lodge may inflict upon you, should it ever be found that you have made a false statement here?

Candidate.—I am.

Here they will return to the holy altar with due regard and say, "M. E. M., your orders have been obeyed, and we find the candidates duly qualified and ready for initiation."

M. E. M.—Thank you, worthy officers. You may now resume your stations.

M. E. M.—M. E. Prin., M. E. Pro., and M. E. Pros., prepare the candidates.

Here they will retire to the ante-room, take from candidates their watches, pistols, knives, moneys, etc., and keep them until they are through, then return them. Hoodwink the candidates and place their hands on each other's shoulders, bring them to the door and cause them to give three distinct raps on the door, hard. M. E. S. W. runs across the floor very heavily to the door and responds thus * meantime all shall be as still on the inside as death.

M. E. S. W.—M. E. M., I hear fierce alarms on the outside of the door.

M. E. M.—M. E. S. W., you will attend the alarm.

M. E. S. W.—What mortal dares to intrude within these mystic walls, to disturb the peace and harmony of this lodge.

M. E. Prin. (outside).—A poor blind stranger, fleeing from envy, strife, prejudice, intemperance, dishonesty

THE HOME.

THE PATH FOR MY FEET.

I cast a backward glance down life's rough road
O'er which my weary, earth-worn feet have trod;
And 'midst the dark, I see the pathway strewn
With priceless blessings from the hand of God.

What though sharp piercing thorns infest my path;
Are there not here and there some rare, sweet flowers?
God sends us good and ill in love—not wrath;
We need some bitter in this life of ours.

Are shadows falling? There is light above.
Do storms descend? The sun will smile again.
And so I recognize the hand of Love
That guides me gently through a life of pain.

'Tis not all darkness. Some soft golden rays
Have shed their radiance o'er my darkened life.
And though I wander now through troubled ways,
Their memory comes like blessing after strife.

So I accept whate'er my Father wills,
Since he designs it for my highest good;
For what to our weak sight are seeming ills,
Are richest blessings if but understood.

God has been good to me. I cannot ask
For richer mercies than his love has given,
Until my soul is freed, and I shall bask
In the broad sunshine of his perfect Heaven.

O All-Wise Father, I will not disown
The love which sends the bitter with the sweet,
Nor will I murmur though I walk alone
The path thou hast appointed for my feet.

ANOTHER TESTIMONY FROM STANLEY.

A more emphatic and influential witness for the good providence of God in the affairs of men has seldom been given than is found in the letters of Henry M. Stanley on his return from the African interior. One of his latest published letters is to a son-in-law of the late Dr. Livingstone, and will be read with joyful interest by the friends of missions. It speaks of the course of events at Uganda, subsequent to the murder of Bishop Hannington by the natives. It is most interesting to read the testimony of the great explorer to the work of the Church Missionary Society and the fidelity of its missionaries. Mr. Stanley writes:

"What would have pleased Livingstone so much is that a body of Christians can become in twelve years so numerous and formidable as to depose the most absolute and powerful king in Africa, and hold their own against any number of combinations hostile to them. What can a man wish better for a proof that Christianity is possible in Africa?"

"I take this powerful body of native Christians in the heart of Africa—who prefer exile for the sake of their faith to serving a monarch indifferent or hostile to their faith—as more substantial evidence of the work of Mackay than any number of imposing structures clustered together and called a mission station would be. These native Africans have endured the most deadly persecutions—the stake and the fire, the cord and the club, the sharp knife and the rifle bullet have all been tried to cause them to reject the teachings they have absorbed. Staunch in their beliefs, firm in their convictions, they have held together stoutly and resolutely, and Mackay and Ashe may point to these with a righteous pride as the results of their labors to the good, kindly people at home who trusted in them.

"I suppose you do not know Mackay personally. Well, he is a Scotchman—the toughest little fellow you could conceive. Young, too,—probably 32 years or so, and bears the climate splendidly—even his complexion is uninjured—not Africanized yet by any means, despite twelve years continued residence. These mission societies certainly contrive to produce extraordinary men. Apropos of Scotchmen, can you tell me why they succeed oftener than other people? Take Moffat, Livingstone, Mackay, real Scotchmen with the burr—they stand pre-eminent above all other missionaries, no matter of what nationality. It is not because they are Scotchmen that they succeed; it is not because they are better men in any one way or the other, physically, mentally, or morally—of that we may rest assured—but it is because they have been more educated in one thing than all others. While I say this I review mentally all whom I know and have met, and I repeat the statement confidently. That one thing is duty.

"These missionaries, Moffat, Livingstone, Mackay, piously brought up, are taught, among other things, what duty is, what it means, not to yield to anything but strict duty. Thus, Moffat can persevere for fifty years in doing his duty among the heathen; and Livingstone, having given his promise to Sir Roderick that he will do his best, thinks it will be a breach of his duty to return home before he finishes his work; and Mackay plods on, despite every disadvantage, sees his house gutted and his flocks scattered, and yet, with an awful fear of breach of duty, clings with hopefulness to a good time coming, when the natives of the country will be able to tell out to each other the good news of 'Peace and good will to men.'"

THE YOUNG WOMEN TOURISTS.

He is without vision who sees nothing in the trip of two women around the world, each going in an opposite direction, alone and without a guide, except a freak of modern adventure or a gust of newspaper enterprise.

Miss Bisland, a native of New Orleans, but for some years a writer for the Cosmopolitan, a monthly magazine, started west and returned by way of Liverpool. Miss "Bly," the N. Y. World's correspondent, left New York, went east and returned by way of San Francisco, reaching New York in seventy-two days, six hours and eleven minutes from the time of starting. Miss Bisland was a little longer, owing to having taken a slow steamer from Liverpool.

To have made that trip in that time would have been impossible even ten years ago—railroad and steamship speed was not then equal to such a feat. For a woman to undertake such a trip was one hundred years ago an impossibility of thought. Six hundred years ago such a trip was both a physical and a moral impossibility. Six hundred years ago a woman unattended on such a journey could not have gotten safely through Christian Europe. She would have been hung as a spy, burnt as a witch, cast into a dungeon as a person dangerous to the government, or seized and spirited away for vile purposes.

There is in this more than a practical demonstration of the progress of science and the triumph of genius over time and space. Think what progress in the comity of nations had to take place to permit the success of this adventure. Where are the walls of China? What has become of the exclusiveness of the Middle Kingdom? What has tamed the Ottoman tiger? What has gone with the suspiciousness and cruelty of ignorant ecclesiastics? Above all else, whence has come into the rulers and masses of men this new respect for human life and this strange regard and even tender and protective concern for individual welfare?

Individual vices abound in all countries, crimes are numerous and disgraceful, but the shame of them we feel is due not to their excess over past centuries, but to our improved sight of their guiltiness; everywhere there is quite too much wickedness, but this event is incontrovertible proof that there is all around this world a deepened sense of the sacredness of human life. What has brought about this change? The living Word.—Wesleyan Advocate.

HIS DUTY.

A TRUE STORY.

Benny Waters got up at daylight that morning to build a fire, and warm the room for his mother, who was not strong, and found the keen air of the early spring very trying in their rudely-built cabin, a few miles out on the plains from the village. All the time he was about this labor of love, he was thinking of the fortunate opening likely to be his that day.

He had been searching for something to do in the village, for matters were getting serious in their little home. The mother had been sick so long, and their expenses had been so heavy, that the little they had saved against a time of need, was now completely gone. Next to nothing remained for them to live upon, and if possible he must find work of some kind to keep actual want from the door.

So for two or three days previous to this morning he had been looking for work, but without success. He was either too young or not strong enough, or they had no work for a boy, and he had become well-nigh discouraged. The evening before, however, just as he was about to give up trying further for that day, he had stepped into the store of Field & Swinburne, hardware dealers, and asked if they needed a boy. He was shown into the office, where he found Mr. Swinburne alone.

That gentleman, after making some inquiries as to Benny's age, and where he lived, said:

"Yes, we do need a boy, but Mr. Field is now out of town. You may come to-morrow, however, at 9 o'clock, and we will see what can be done for you. Mind, now, and be on time, as we shall hire the first boy that comes along."

"What wages would you be apt to pay?" Benny ventured to ask.

"Oh! two or three dollars a week," answered Mr. Swinburne, carelessly. "It depends altogether on how well you work."

So Benny built the fire, and busied himself in cooking the potatoes—all that they had for breakfast—happy at the prospect before him, and sure he would do his best to earn the highest wages suggested. On that amount he felt confident his mother and himself could, with proper care, live comfortably until she was able to work again.

The breakfast—if a dish of potatoes can be called a breakfast—once ready, he went to the door of his mother's room and called her.

"Only think, mother," he exclaimed, as they sat down at the table, "I'm to have work to-day; and if I'm worth it I'm to have three dollars a week, and that'll be enough for us to live on."

"Yes, indeed!" responded his mother, "but I fear you are too young to undertake so much; above all to take your long walk after each day's work."

"Oh! I can stand it easily enough, mother," he asserted, confidently.

When the poor little meal was finished he brought in several huge armfuls of wood, and arranged, as far as possible, for his mother's comfort throughout the day, and then put on his coat and started.

"Here is your scarf, Benny," said his mother, calling him back. "It will be chilly as you walk home to-night, and you will need it."

He laughingly took it, not realizing then how it would be of special service to him a little later.

It was not yet 8 o'clock, and he had ample time to reach the village before the appointed hour. The most direct way was down the railroad track, and he hurriedly tripped over the ties, as happy as a boy could well be.

Within a mile of the village the track made a sharp turn to the right, and entered what was known as Hemway's cut—where the road-bed had been blasted through solid rock for a number of rods. As Benny reached the curve, he, as a precaution, glanced back along the track to be sure the 8:45 passenger train was nowhere in sight, and then entered the cutaway. When about half way through, however, he suddenly stopped, for in front of him lay a large boulder, which had fallen from the cliff above, and completely blocked the passage.

But it was possible to climb over it, and Benny began to do so; then he as quickly got down again. The thought had come to him that the train, number twenty-seven, coming around the curve at full speed would not have time to come to a stop before reaching the obstruction, and a smash-up, more or less terrible in its results, was inevitable unless some one gave the warning.

But if he waited to warn the train of its danger he could not reach the village at the appointed hour, and might lose the place. Indeed, Mr. Swinburne had distinctly said if he was not there on time they should hire some other boy.

There was not time enough to go on to the village and have some one sent to flag the train. At least it would be a tremendous risk to do so.

The first house back up the track was a full mile away, and to go there and leave word to stop the train would also make him late at the store.

Then came his great temptation. Might he not slip across the field unobserved to the road and reach the village in that way? then no one would ever know he had discovered the rock, and could not blame him. Thus he would arrive at the village in ample time for his engagement.

For a moment he hesitated; more than this, he actually left the cutaway and went a short distance up over the cliff toward the highway. Then he came back to the track, and with quivering lip sat down. He knew it was his duty, whatever the personal sacrifice, to stay there and warn the train.

As if to test the strength of his determination to the full, a sense of their absolute need now came home to him as it never had before. It frightened him. Starvation stared them in the face. There was only food enough in the house to last them a day or two longer. He must have work at once, or he must beg.

He shrank from the thought with a shudder. But if he lost his place and could not get another, he might be forced to do that for his mother's sake; she must not suffer for want of food.

"I can't leave here," he resolutely said, "even if I do not work, and we have to beg."

The train was late that morning, and for nearly an hour he sat there. He knew it must already be 9 o'clock, and he wondered if some other boy had been hired to fill the place he had only an hour before been so sure of. In spite of himself the great tears would come to his eyes.

The low rumbling of the train at last aroused him from the despair into which he was fast falling. Springing to his feet he exclaimed:

"I wish I had a red flag, an' I'd stop the train easy enough."

Then his eyes fell on his scarf; it was large, and of a bright red color. The next moment he had cut a long stick and stretched his scarf to its widest capacity over one end, forming a wide flag. He now hurried down the track towards the coming train, moving the scarf to and fro as he had often seen flagmen do.

On came the train; now it was near enough for the engineer to plainly see him; the next instant a prolonged whistle, which Benny knew meant down breaks, rang on the air, and he jumped from the track.

The cars shot by him, but came to a standstill near the curve. The engineer sprang from his cab, asking:

"Well, my boy, what is it?"

"Just step around the curve, and you'll see for yourself," answered Benny.

The engineer, fireman, conductor, and a crowd of passengers hurried into the cutaway, and a moment later stood by the boulder.

"It is a big morning's work you have done, my lad," the conductor at length said; "had we come around that curve and stove full force into that rock there would have been terrible work here. How came you to discover it?"

So Benny briefly told his story:

"Was going to work for Field & Swinburne down at Scottsville this morning at 9 o'clock, and left our cabin back here a couple of miles to go there. When I got here I saw the rock, and knew I ought to stay to give you warning. Though I s'pose I have lost my place by it," he added, regretfully.

"How is that?" asked a tall, finely-dressed gentleman standing by.

"Why, Mr. Swinburne said I was to be there on time," answered Benny, "or else they should hire some other boy."

The conductor now decided that with enough men and proper tools, the obstruction could be removed in an hour or two at the farthest, and dispatched a messenger to the village for them. He also advised the passengers to return to the cars and make themselves as comfortable as possible during the delay.

Then a gentleman spoke up enthusiastically:

"Let us make up a purse for the lad. Here are five dollars towards it."

A hat was passed among the passengers, and a few minutes later the gentleman announced:

"We have got a hundred dollars. Now, where is the boy?"

He could not be found, but a brakeman finally said:

"I saw him go off towards the village with the man the conductor sent down there."

"He'll be back this way by-and-by, likely as not," said the conductor; "if not, it can be left at the Scottsville depot for him."

It was true, Benny had hastened off to the village, hoping he might even yet reach the store before some one else was engaged. But in this he was disappointed. For as he entered Mr. Swinburne's office that gentleman looked up at him and curtly said:

"You are too late, sir; I engaged another lad half an hour ago. Learn next time to be punctual at the appointed hour."

Poor Benny! Without offering a word of explanation he left the store and hurried off home. He had no heart to look elsewhere for work that day at least. He knew he had done right—that his mother would approve of his course—still he could not get over the great disappointment that had come to him. What in the world would they now do for bread?

As he reached the cutaway he found the men busy blasting the boulder to pieces, and paused to watch them. While he stood there the conductor caught sight of him.

"Look here, youngster," he said, "aren't you the boy that stopped the train?"

"Yes, sir!" promptly responded Benny.

"Well," he went on, "there's a gentleman up at the cars that wishes to see you."

Wondering what could be wanted of him, Benny went up to the train, clambered into the parlor car and asked:

"Is there a man here who wants to see me?"

"Yes, sir!" exclaimed a gentleman, dropping his paper, and springing to his feet. "We all want to see you. We all want to thank you for your unselfish conduct this morning, and give you this roll of bills as a token of appreciation of your act," and he handed Benny the money.

"I didn't expect nothing," said Benny modestly, and ungrammatically. "I didn't just like to see the train busted up."

"We can afford to give this money to you," replied the gentleman, kindly, "for some of us would have doubtless lost our lives but for you; and had the overturned cars taken fire in that cut, none of us would have escaped."

With joyful heart Benny now hastened home. Nor was his joy any less when his mother, after listening to his story, said:

"I had rather a son of mine should do his duty, even if it forced us to beg, than to have secured the best position in the world by a dishonorable act."

But the good flowing from Benny's unselfish act did not end here. The very next morning, as he was cutting wood at the door, a gentleman rode up and asked:

"Are you Mr. Benny Waters?"

"Yes, sir!" replied the astonished boy.

"Well, here's a letter I was asked to leave here," said the gentleman, handing it to him.

It bore the heading of Field & Swinburne, and read:

"SCOTTSVILLE, Ky., March 2, 1887.

"MR. BENNY WATERS—Dear Sir: Mr. Field, of our firm, was upon the train you so bravely warned of its danger yesterday, regardless of your own loss. We have decided that we have got a place in our store for a boy like you, and we will furnish your mother a tenement in the village, rent free, and allow you at first five dollars a week. I trust you will be magnanimous enough to overlook my unpardonable curttness of yesterday, for had you explained the cause of your delay, we should have hired you then and there. At your earliest convenience let us know your decision. Respectfully yours,

"GEORGE A. SWINBURNE.

"Firm of Field & Swinburne."

Benny and his mother have already moved into their comfortable home at the village, and he is busy at work in the store. He studies hard evenings, and hopes to thoroughly master the business he has entered. He says:

"I just did that morning what I knew was my duty, and all came out right in the end."

So it will always.—William Pendleton Chipman, in Sunshine.

TEMPERANCE.

THE NON-PARTISAN W. C. T. U. ALLIANCE.

The women of Pennsylvania who have withdrawn from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union because its National Convention repeatedly declared its sympathy with the Prohibition party in politics, held a meeting in Philadelphia last week to organize their work in Pennsylvania. This step invites from all friends of temperance the candid and earnest consideration of the necessity and wisdom of their course. We concede cordially the sincerity, the earnestness and the Christian purpose of the women who have just met in Philadelphia. But we are constrained to say that in our judgment their action is not sustained by the reasons adduced in support of it and will not be justified by future events.

It is a grave matter to divide any living organization on which the Spirit of God has placed the crown and seal of his evident co-operation in its work. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union had its birth in one of the most manifest and most marvelous movements of the Divine Spirit ever witnessed in this country or the world. No less unmistakable have been the tokens of his presence and help in its labors hitherto. When differences of judgment arise between the members of a body which is thus informed and actuated by the Holy Ghost, it is always wise, remembering how fallible are human judgments, and how liable we all are to mistake, to content ourselves with remonstrance and dissent, and to wait for further light. This is the only right course in the Church of Christ, and this rule ought to be respected in other organizations of Christian believers formed for purposes akin to those of the church. Of course the differing minority must be allowed liberty to dissent; they in turn ought freely to accord to the majority liberty of action according to their own best judgment in the fear of the Lord. This liberty of dissent was not denied to the minority in the prolonged discussion which has culminated in this breach. On the contrary, every individual member was free to express her dissent from the political deliverances of the National Union. Every State Union, every local Union, was free to endorse these deliverances or to withhold endorsement. The dissent of the minority was repeatedly heard in the National Convention, spread upon its minutes, and published in its weekly journal. But the minority were not content with this. They denied the right of the majority to declare their sympathy or to co-operate with any political party. This denial led logically to a struggle against the right of the majority, and, this resistance being unsuccessful, the objectors have withdrawn to set up a counter society. In so doing they violate, as it seems to us, the first principles of associated action. They make themselves responsible for the friction, the collision and the waste of resources which will inevitably attend the operations of two societies having the same general end, laboring in the same territory and appealing to the same communities for sympathy and help.

This conclusion would hold even if it were admitted that the majority erred in judgment, and the Prohibition party was not entitled to the sympathy and help of temperance workers. It is immensely strengthened by the familiar facts of our recent political history. The appeal of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to the National Conventions of all great parties, the scant courtesy with which they were received and the absolute refusal which they met, except at the hands of the Prohibitionists; the attempt to foist high license on the country as a righteous and suitable method of dealing with the awful evils of intemperance; the persistent crowding of secular issues to the front to the exclusion of this and all other moral questions; the proposal of Prohibitory Constitutional Amendments to divert public attention from the just responsibilities of parties, and the treacherous defeat of these amendments at the polls—all this and much more is part of the record upon which the action of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union must be judged. Friends of a true reformation might well have been excused for welcoming the rise of any party which bases itself on the supremacy of moral principles in the domain of politics, and the paramount authority of the law of God.

Besides, the "non-partisan" idea, as insisted on by the women who have formed this new "Alliance," would forbid their ever espousing the cause of any political organization. Even if there were but two parties in the field with this as the sole issue between them, they pledge themselves not to lend their influence to the party striving for prohibition. We think too highly of these estimable ladies, many of whom are our personal friends, to suppose that in such a case it would be possible for them to keep their pledge.

Some such solution as this we anticipate in the near future. Political managers cannot forever suppress these moral issues. Or ever they are aware, the country will be aflame under a new breath from the Spirit of the Lord. Political ties will be dissolved. New combinations will be formed, and those who have parted hands for the time will find themselves standing shoulder to shoulder in the final conflict and shouting with one voice in the hour of victory. Meanwhile, let friction be lessened as far as possible. We are glad to say that the tone of the speakers at last week's convention was kindly, and that moderation and charity were advised upon the promoters of the new organization.—Christian Statesman.

and dissipation, seeking refuge within the walls where exists virtue, truth and benevolence.

M. E. S. W.—M. E. M., the alarm was made by legal strangers. I recommend their admission.

M. E. M.—M. E. S. W., admit them.

Here, the M. E. Prin. will escort them around the hall four times and sing the following ode, worded by one in an adjoining room in low tones:

My thoughts on awful subjects roll,
Damnation and the dead;
What horrors seize my guilty soul,
As in this hall I tread!

Lingering about these mortal walls,
She makes a long delay;
Till, like a flood with rapid force,
Death sweeps the wretch away.

Then, swift and dreadful, she descends
Down to the fiery coast,
Among abominable fiends,
Herself a frightened ghost.

There endless crowds of sinners lie,
And darkness makes their chains,
Tortured with keen despair they cry;
Yet wait for fiercer pains.

Here the M. E. Prin. will return the candidates to the ante-room and then remain in silence five minutes. Meantime they drop and roll a ball across the floor in the lodge-room, rattle and drag heavy chains on the floor, make a noise with their feet as if trying to hold and something like a goat. They shall not speak.

Here the M. E. Prin. shall bring them to the door and cause one to rap thus, *

M. E. S. W.—Thus, * * *. Who knocketh there?

M. E. Prin.—A poor blind stranger, seeking admission into your portals.

M. E. S. W.—Strangers, you are prepared to be admitted?

Candidates all.—I am.

M. E. S. W.—Strangers, have you enemies here?

Candidates.—I trust I have none.

M. E. S. W.—Strangers, according to your desires you may be admitted, but be careful and remember that you are walking on triggers untouchable.

Here bring them in, members rise to their feet ready to assist if needed, march candidates around the hall twice, sing first and last verses of "A Charge to Keep I Have," and leave them standing alone five minutes. M. E. Pros. will smite them on their chest and say, "Strangers, take warning!"

M. E. M.—Pilgrims kneel and pray here, when they are about half through.

M. E. M.—Oh, that praying won't do, you can't pray. Here the men prepare, grab one and run with him.

M. E. M.—Mercy! mercy!! mercy!!! brothers.

M. E. Pros.—We'll give him a ride (if it is a man), place him carefully across a beer-keg, with paddle in hand, say to him, "Candidate, do you know the first principle of this order?"

Candidate.—Virtue. Strike a blow easy.

M. E. Pros.—What is the second principle?

Candidate.—Truth. (Marked thus, * * *) Little harder.

M. E. Pros.—What is the third principle?

Candidate.—Benevolence. (Marked thus, * * *) Very severely.

M. E. M.—Brothers, these are the principles on which our noble institution is based. Here stand them around the altar, take their hoodwinks off and cause them to place their left hand on the open Bible, where they shall take the following obligation:

OBLIGATION.

I, A. B., do solemnly promise and affirm that I will never divulge any of the mysteries or secrets of this order to any person not authorized by this order to receive them. And I will never do or say anything to injure a brother or sister of this order; and I will furthermore promise and affirm that I will assist a worthy brother or sister in distress, if the nature of the case require it, and I will avoid talking against a member's character, and that I will defend them. And I furthermore promise and affirm that I will cheerfully conform to the laws of my country, and avoid conspiracies against the government; and that I will obey all orders emanating from the chief executive of this order, from the officers in the lodge-room. Binding myself under no less penalty than of having this pure water (here pour water on their heads) rise up against me with all of my brothers and in the day of judgment at the last day—should I violate this my obligation wilfully—so help me God.

M. E. Provider, hand the candidate a bowl of water, saying: "Wash your hand from everything against the members of this order. Wash them clean!"

[Concluded next week.]

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A religious canvass was recently made of the city of Hartford, Conn., mainly by students of the Theological Seminary. In number of attendants the Roman Catholics led with 19,000, the Congregationalists being next with 8,500. Those having no preference numbered 2,700. There were 25,000 Protestants to 19,000 Roman Catholics. Nine and one-half per cent of the population did not attend church.

—The Chicago Hebrew Mission, working for the 40,000 Jews of the city, had during the past year a Sunday-school attended by from fifty to seventy children, which has been so successful as to rouse the opposition of Hebrew papers. An industrial school and Sunday meetings have also been maintained. A reading-room is open most of the time, and Christian books and tracts are at the disposal of inquirers. Mr. Bernhard Angel, a young Hebrew studying in Chicago Theological Seminary, is in charge of the work. Prof. H. M. Scott of Chicago Seminary is president of the mission.

—About 100 conversions are reported at Centenary Methodist church, Portland, Oregon.

—The next International Sunday-school Convention will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., in June.

—The Methodist church at Wabash, Indiana, is experiencing a great revival. About 200 have professed conversion.

—The Baptist national anniversaries are to be held next May in Chicago. It is many years since that city was chosen for these gatherings.

—The Freedman's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal church now owns forty-one institutions of learning in the South, with 7,688 pupils and 328 teachers.

—One hundred and eighty-five new societies of Christian Endeavor were recently formed in one week. Of these 43 were Presbyterian, 26 Methodist, 20 Baptist, 15 Congregational and 8 Christian.

—At Whitewater, Wis., during three weeks of special services, under Mr. N. P. Peterson, about 100 conversions have taken place. Eighty-five have already united with the Methodist church; others will follow.

—If Chicago has the World's Fair, then it has the next Catholic congress, for the last one voted to meet in the year 1892, wherever the Fair might be held, supposing, of course, it would be in New York.—Mail and Express.

—Revival meetings are being held every evening at the Mariner's Temple, corner of Oliver and Henry streets, New York, and are being well attended. Rev. J. F. Avery, the pastor, is an earnest and indefatigable worker, and is already reaping some reward for his untiring labors in the largely increased congregations and in the professed conversion of several to Christ.

—Rev. Philip Schaff, D.D., LL.D., the eminent church historian, has sailed for Genoa, from whence he will go to Rome, there to pursue investigation among the treasures of the Vatican library, a privilege which it is thought will be granted to him because of his scholarship, his fairness as a writer on the Roman Catholic church, and the letters of introduction he carries from the most eminent Roman Catholics in this country.

—A deep religious interest is now prevailing in the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O. Of the 907 students in attendance this term, 628 were reported as Christians on the day of prayer and 279 as non-Christians. Over ninety students have been transferred from the non-Christian to the Christian column, through the special services which have followed the day of prayer. About 100 citizens also have begun the Christian life through these services. Several students have offered themselves for the ministry and some for missionary work.

—A converted Chinaman on our Pacific coast sold himself as a coolie in New Guinea, for the sake of working among his own countrymen. Before he died he was the means of the conversion of two hundred of his companions.

—The Protestant world has 377 missionaries working among the Jews. It is estimated that there are 9,400,000 in the world—one missionary to every 10,976 Israelites, a larger number in proportion than among the heathen.

—Rev. Dr. James Johnson says that the signs of the times denote that Israel will be largely reclaimed by the study of the Hebrew New Testament version.

—Rev. Dr. John Hall has begun a course of five lectures on Foreign Missions before the students of the Reformed Theological Seminary, New Brunswick, N. J.

—Rev. A. Miyaki, who graduated from the Theological Seminary at New Brunswick in 1888, has become the pastor of a Congregational church at Sendai, Japan.

—D. L. Moody and Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins have been conducting successful evangelistic services in Brooklyn, beginning with a large men's meeting early in February, at Association Hall, 502 Fulton street. Men's meetings were held in the hall every night except Saturday for the next two weeks, and services for men and women on corresponding week-day afternoons. The latter services continued every day for a third week, during the first three evenings of which other meetings were held in another part of the city. During the second week Mr. Moody received and read before his afternoon congregation a very touching letter from a Christian working-woman, asking that women employed during the day might have the same opportunity as had been afforded other women by the afternoon services. The result of this was that special women's meetings were held on the evenings of February 19, 20 and 21, supported both morally and financially by the Christian women of the city to whom this appeal had come, and carried on by a committee appointed from their number.

—The opinion is crystallizing that a great American Missionary Conference should be held in this country in 1892 to consider especially the future of the Latin-American republics.

—Mrs. Bentley, the wife of one of the best-known African missionaries, is teaching telegraphy to some black boys on the Congo. She hopes to have them ready for service by the time the Congo railroad is laid.

—It is said that Sweden, Denmark and Norway contribute $300,000 annually for the support of mission work among the heathen. These countries employ 100 missionaries in various countries, and have a membership of 29,000 converts.

—Chester S. Lyman, professor of astronomy in the Sheffield Scientific School, whose death is announced, went in 1845 as a missionary to the Sandwich Islands, and Queen Emma was one of his pupils. When the Queen visited this country a few years ago she made a point of calling on her old teacher.

—It is stated that there are now 150,000 Protestant Sabbath-schools—meeting every Sabbath—in this country. These have 1,300,000 teachers and officers and about 10,000,000 pupils. This indicates a gain of 50 per cent in the last twelve years, but still there are 11,000,000 more children not reached.

—The building of the new Protestant church at Bethlehem, in Palestine, which was interrupted when it had only been half finished, in 1888, has now been resumed, the Sultan having, as the special wish of the German Empress expressed during her recent visit to Constantinople, given his sanction for the completion of the edifice.

—Up to December 10th, 4,632 students in American colleges had expressed their willingness to go as missionaries to foreign fields. Of these 78 per cent are men, 22 per cent women, 35 per cent graduates, 27½ per cent are Presbyterians, 18 per cent Congregationalists, 14 per cent Methodists, 11½ per cent Baptists. Forty-one denominations are represented.

—The pupils of the Huguenot Seminary at Wellington, South Africa, have formed the Huguenot Missionary Society, which sends out from its ranks missionaries to labor among the heathen in Africa. The lady principal, Miss Ferguson, and the other teachers, are all earnest Christians, and seek to lead all the pupils to Christ.

—The Moravians have projected a mission on the Victoria Nyanza, but have been unable to establish it by the lack of funds. Just before the opening of their General Synod this year news was brought that a legacy of between $25,000 and $30,000 had fallen to the church, and it is probable that the work will speedily be carried forward, as the men are ready.

—The totals of missions in China are: 39 societies, 526 male missionaries and 597 women; total, 1,123 missionaries; 162 native ordained helpers, 1,278 unordained, 34,555 communicants in the churches, and 14,817 pupils in schools; $44,173 were contributed by the churches the past year, and the net increase in membership was 2,295.

—According to the Statistical Year Book of Germany for 1889, the latest data on the religious status of the country are these: 29,369,847 Evangelicals, 16,785,734 Catholics, 125,673 other Christians, 563,172 Jews, 11,278 confessors of other religions or professing no religion at all. The Evangelicals include Lutherans, Reformed and the United church, i.e., the union formed in 1817 in Prussia and some other States between the two Protestant confessions; the Catholics include Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and old Catholics.

—Ten thousand Italian priests have secretly signed a petition to the government praying for protection against the tyranny of the Vatican. They have been promised assistance by several deputies, who will plead their cause in Parliament.

—A late letter to the Mennonite from Russia tells how the Czar yet demands the unrequited toil of this people whose creed will not allow them to serve in the army: "The other day we drove out to visit one of the 'forstei' (Government timber claim), which is being cared for by young men of our people. This kind of work is being substituted for military service. The men must serve here from the age of 21 to 25, and after that are placed several years on the reserve list, liable to be called on duty at any time. I am told that these timber plantations, like so many other Government enterprises, are a poor paying business. However, it is a great privilege that the Russian government grants our people this kind of service. For here they are alone and away from the demoralizing influence of military life. Here they have their own preachers on every plantation. I was glad to hear that at several places they had revivals and a number of the young men were converted to the Lord and enlisted in his service. Here we also had several well attended services during the week day evenings."

IN BRIEF.

Chicago seems likely to become a ship-building center. Her new ship-yard has just received a contract for two iron vessels, each to cost nearly a quarter of a million dollars. Other contracts on hand are for six boats for the iron trade.

Japan has thirty-one schools of medicine, one of dentistry, and two of veterinary surgery. The University of Tokio graduates an average of one hundred medical students yearly. Tokio alone has over twenty hospitals and numerous active medical societies.

The sale of lots at the new prohibition town of Harriman, on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, owned by the East Tennessee Land Company, came off Feb. 26. The town is laid off in an old field, and there are not half a dozen houses in the place, but the lots sold for an average of $26 per front foot, and 223 lots were sold. Four thousand people were present, twenty-four States in the Union being represented. The company appropriated $1,000,000 for streets, water and lights, and improvement of the town site.

Paint from potatoes is a new wrinkle in the arts and sciences. Kuhlow's Trade Review gives the manner of preparation. Boil a kilo of peeled potatoes in water. After mashing, dilute with water and pass through a fine sieve. Add two kilos of Spanish white diluted with four kilos of water, and the result will be a color of beautiful milk white. Different colors can be effected by the addition of different ochers or minerals. Apply with a brush. It adheres to plaster or wood very well, will not peel, and best of all, is cheap.

Mrs. Mackay, the wife of one of the bonanza kings of California, has recently recovered damages against an English newspaper, which charged that she had been a washerwoman before her marriage to Mr. Mackay. Even if the charge was true, there is nothing disgraceful in it. Honest labor in any direction is honest in man and woman alike, and it is difficult to see with American eyes how such an accusation can be construed into a libel, even in England, where the accident of birth so frequently determines a person's social standing. Mrs. Mackay has not increased the esteem in which she is held by her foolish action.

The entire property of the Ursuline Convent at Pittsburgh, Pa., with its magnificent buildings, will be offered at public sale, in spite of the interference of the Pope. The sale is the outcome of a quarrel between the Mother Superior Alphonse and five French sisters and Bishop Phelan, who deposed Mother Superior Alphonse and placed another sister in charge of the institution. The Pope decreed not long ago that the French sisters, as founders, be paid $60,000 for the property, but they refused this compromise, and claim the protection of the State, not ecclesiastical, laws in maintaining ownership. The property is valued at $400,000.

The full bench of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, says the Boston Herald, has given an interesting decision relative to gambling in the case of John J. Murphy vs. John Z. Rogers, which was an action to recover $120.50 on certain notes signed by the defendant, who, in defense, contended that notes were given wholly or in part for money or goods won by plaintiff from the defendant by gaming or playing at billiards or pool. The court allowed a verdict for the plaintiff, and reported the case to the supreme court which orders a new trial. The court says: "If the plaintiff kept a billiard saloon and played with defendant upon the terms that the defendant should pay for the use of the table by both parties in case he lost, but otherwise that he should not pay anything, that was gaming within the meaning of the statute. So also it was gaming if they played together upon the terms that the defendant, in case he lost, should pay the plaintiff for liquor or cigars to be used by the plaintiff, but otherwise not. In such case, the price of the use of the table, or of the liquor and cigars, was money won by the plaintiff from the defendant by gaming."

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR, Old Age and How to Enjoy It. A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help to those who are to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CARE OF THE TEETH.

At the meeting in Berlin last spring of the German Association of American Dentists, the best means of preserving the teeth were discussed, and Dr. Richter of Breslau said: "We know that the whole method of correctly caring for the teeth can be expressed in two words—brush, soap. In these two things we have all that is needful for the preservation of the teeth. All the preparations not containing soap are not to be recommended, and if they contain soap all other ingredients are useless except for the purpose of making their taste agreeable. Among the soaps the white castile soap of the English market is especially to be recommended. A shower of tooth preparations has been thrown on the market, but very few of which are to be recommended. Testing the composition of them, we find that about 90 per cent are not only unsuitable for their purpose, but that the greater part are actually harmful. All the preparations containing salicylic acid are, as the investigations of Fernier have shown, destructive of the teeth. He who will unceasingly preach to his patients to brush their teeth carefully shortly before bedtime, as a cleansing material to use castile soap, as a mouth wash a solution of oil of peppermint in water, and to cleanse the spaces between the teeth by careful use of a silken thread, will help them in preserving their teeth, and will win the gratitude and good words of the public."

NECESSITY OF FOOD FOR STUDENTS.

The notion that those who work only with their brains need less food than those who labor with their hands has been the cause of untold mischief. Students and literary men have often been the victims of slow starvation from this ignorance of the fact that mental labor causes a greater waste of tissue than muscular. According to careful estimates, three hours of hard study wear out the body more than a whole day at the anvil, or on the farm. "Without phosphorus no thought," is a German saying, and the consumption of that essential ingredient of the brain increases in proportion to the amount of labor which the organ is required to perform. The wear and tear of the brain are easily measured by careful examinations of the salts in liquid secretions. The importance of the brain as a working organ is shown by the amount of blood it receives, which is proportionately greater than that of any part of the body. One-fifth of the blood goes to the brain, though its average weight is only one-fortieth the average weight of the body. This fact alone would be sufficient to prove that brain workers need more food and better food than mechanics and farm laborers. —Journal of Chemistry.

URIC ACID AND MENTAL DEPRESSION.

Dr. Haig believes there is a relation between retention of uric acid in the blood and a state of mental despondency. When uric acid is present in excess, depression of mind and irritability of temper are marked, but give place to a feeling of mental buoyancy when the excess is gotten rid of. —New Remedies.

I want to tell prospective mothers of a circumstance that happened in my native village. Mrs. A. was a strong and healthy young woman; she wore corsets and continued to do so up to the day of her confinement, wearing them so tightly laced that a stranger would call her form a good one. What were the consequences? She died after bringing forth a living child, to be left without a mother. The long-continued tight lacing had so weakened the muscles that they had no power or strength to contract, and death was the result. She was a lovely young woman, and the local paper published a long obituary about her; but I could not help thinking that it would have done much more good to publish the real cause of her death, and had the article signed by her attending physician. —August Flower.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.

THE GERMAN AND HIS CLOCK.

The story is told of a German who took the hands of his clock to the maker to have them fixed, because they did not keep proper time. Of course, the clock maker demanded the works, as in them lay the trouble. Boils and blotches, pimples and other eruptions on the exterior tell of a disordered condition of the blood within. Be you man or woman, or aught else human, if you have these indications, be wise in time and take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It puts the liver and kidneys in good working order, purifies the blood, cleanses the system from all impurities from whatever cause arising, and tones up the functions generally. "Golden Medical Discovery" checks the frightful inroads of Scrofula, and, if taken in time, arrests the march of Consumption of the Lungs, which is Lung-scurf, purifies and enriches the blood, thereby curing all Skin and Scalp Diseases, Ulcers, Sores, Swellings, and kindred ailments. It is powerfully tonic as well as alterative, or blood-cleansing, in its effects, hence it strengthens the system and restores vitality, thereby dispelling all those languid, "tired feelings" experienced by the debilitated. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetters, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood and lung remedy, sold by druggists, and guaranteed by its manufacturers, to do all that it is claimed to accomplish, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Manufacturers, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 OFFERED for an incurable case of Catarrh in the Head by the proprietors of DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness, difficulty of clearing throat, expectoration of offensive matter; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases result in consumption, and end in the grave.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs, "creams" and strong caustic solutions with which the public have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, watering or weak eyes, and impaired memory, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are. By druggists, 50 cents.

The Public Want

Their seed fresh and true. Would they not be most likely to obtain such by buying directly from the grower? I can buy seed at half what it costs me to raise it, but could not sleep sound should I warrant seed of this class. For the same reason I make special effort to procure seed stock directly from their originators. You will find in my new seed catalogue for 1890 (sent free) the usual extensive collection (with the prices of some kinds lower than last season) and the really new vegetables of good promise. You should be able to get from me, their introducer, good seed of Cory Corn, Miller Melon, Hubbard Squash, All Seasons and Deep Head Cabbages and many other valuable vegetables, which I have introduced. JAMES J. H. GREGORY, Marblehead, Mass.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSH ILLUSTRATED

Blanchard. The ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover 50 cents; per dozen $4.00. All orders promptly filled by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemason to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man.

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and sixty-eight cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

A NOVEL PROJECT.

When it was stated some weeks since in the newspapers that the building of a milk pipe line from a point in New York State to New York City was projected there was a rather general smile, and the matter was treated as a joke. The projectors were, however, it seems, in sober earnest. A company with a capital of $500,000 has, it is announced, been formed at Middletown, N. Y., for the purpose of constructing such a line. The proposed method of forwarding the milk is in cylindrical tin cans surrounded and propelled by water, and the promoters of the scheme assert that the time of transportation for a distance of 100 miles will not exceed an hour, while the profit will be about one cent a gallon. Fire and Water thinks if this sort of thing goes on, we need not be surprised ere long to find New York the converging point not only of oil, natural gas, and milk pipe lines, but of whisky ducts from the blue grass regions, and beer ducts from Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Milwaukee. The pipe manufacturers may well feel cheerful at the prospect before them.

FARMERS' SONS WHO BECAME FAMOUS.

Washington, Adams, Monroe, Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Buchanan, Lincoln and Garfield were all born on farms; Henry Ward Beecher was a country boy who loved farm life all his days; William M. Evarts came from a farm in Vermont; Chauncey M. Depew used to run barefoot around Peekskill till Vanderbilt took a fancy to him; Whitelaw Reid is from Ohio, and was thirty years ridding his hair of hayseed; De Witt Talmage first expanded his lungs calling to an ox team—he still looks country all over; Sunset Cox hoed potatoes on his father's farm near Zanesville, O.; Abram S. Hewitt was a rosy country lad, whose garments were made by the village seamstress when he first went to New York. The list might be continued indefinitely.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

A SHEPHERD DOG.

A flock of sheep blocked up the entrance to a bridge spanning Mill Creek, near Chester Park, Ohio. A large shepherd dog had been trying to induce the sheep to cross the bridge, but they were suspicious and held back. Presently the dog, discouraged at his unsuccessful efforts to drive them, leaped upon the backs of the sheep, which, in their crowded condition, looking like one woolly floor, ran along to the bridge entrance, leaped upon the floor, and seizing in his mouth the neck of one of the ewes, dragged her along on to the bridge. Once on the floor of the bridge, the old ewe's suspicions were allayed, and she trotted on across followed by the whole flock, while the dog stepped to one side, let them all pass, and then trotted along behind.—Humane Appeal.

Here is a little girl's composition on the cow, as it appeared in the Hartford Times: A cow is an animal with four legs on the under side. The tail is longer than the legs, but it is not used to stand on. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow has big ears that wiggle on hinges; so does the tail. A cow is bigger than a calf, but not as big as an elephant. She is made so small that she can go into a barn when nobody is looking. Some cows are black and some hook. A dog was hooked once. She tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat. Black cows give white milk, so do other cows. Milkmen sell milk to buy their little girls dresses which they put water in and chalk. Cows chew cuds and each cow finds its own chew. This is all there is about cows.

LOOK HERE, FRIEND, ARE YOU SICK?

Do you suffer from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, Nervousness, Lost Appetite, Biliousness, Exhaustion or Tired Feeling, Pains in Chest or Lungs, Dry Cough, Night sweats or any form of Consumption? If so, send to Prof. Hart, 88 Warren Street, New York, who will send you free, by mail, a bottle of Floraplexion, which is a sure cure. Send to-day.

WHY COUGH,

WHEN a few doses of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will relieve you? Try it. Keep it in the house. You are liable to have a cough at any time, and no other remedy is so effective as this world-renowned preparation. No household, with young children, should be without it. Scores of lives are saved every year by its timely use.

Amanda B. Jenner, Northampton, Mass., writes: "Common gratitude impels me to acknowledge the great benefits I have derived for my children from the use of Ayer's most excellent Cherry Pectoral. I had lost two dear children from croup and consumption, and had the greatest fear of losing my only remaining daughter and son, as they were delicate. Happily, I find that by giving them Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the first symptoms of throat or lung trouble, they are relieved from danger, and are becoming robust, healthy children."

"In the winter of 1885 I took a bad cold which, in spite of every known remedy, grew worse, so that the family physician considered me incurable, supposing me to be in consumption. As a last resort I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, in a short time, the cure was complete. Since then I have never been without this medicine. I am fifty years of age, weigh over 180 pounds, and attribute my good health to the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."—G.W. Youker, Salem, N. J.

"Last winter I contracted a severe cold, which by repeated exposure, became quite obstinate. I was much troubled with hoarseness and bronchial irritation. After trying various medicines, without relief, I at last purchased a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. On taking this medicine, my cough ceased almost immediately, and I have been well ever since."—Rev. Thos. B. Russell, Secretary Holston Conference and P. E. of the Greenville District, M. E. C., Jonesboro, Tenn.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The work of the Pan-American Conference has so far progressed that adjournment is confidently expected within the next thirty days. With that in view, arrangements are making for the trip through the South, which will end the official hospitalities of the United States to the delegates.

The friends of Chicago at Washington do not hesitate to state that they are of the opinion that Mr. Belden and Senator Hiscock, uniting with Mr. Flower, are determined to adopt some expedient which may result in defeating Chicago and in giving the World's Fair to New York.

Early Tuesday morning at Washington, ex-Congressman W. Preston Taulbee died from the effects of the wounds inflicted by Charles E. Kincaid, the newspaper man. The latter was immediately rearrested and held to await the result of the inquest.

President Harrison Thursday pardoned Lewis Carter, sentenced by a court-martial May 25, 1885, to ninety-nine years imprisonment in the Stillwater penitentiary for alleged criminal assault, assault, robbery and desertion, the pardon to take effect May 25, 1890.

The German societies of Washington held a mass-meeting to protest against any legislation pertaining to the restriction of immigration. They are opposed to some of the proposed changes in the immigration laws; and, while they do not intend to obstruct the legislation prohibiting the introduction of pauper labor, yet they think the laws can be amended in many ways.

FLOODS.

It is evident from news received from points along the Mississippi River that the present flood will surpass in disastrous results the great calamity of 1883, when so much property was destroyed and so many human lives were lost. Reports from points on the Missouri and Mississippi show the rivers were rising during the week, and telegrams from the interior show all the smaller streams to be very high and the low lands in the vicinity of creeks and rivers to be under water.

At New Orleans the river on Thursday was reported by the harbor station at 17 feet, but it remained at that point but a short while when it receded to 16 feet 8 inches, where it seemed to make a stand. This was six inches above the record of other years, and the water went over the levees all along the city front at every depression or low place, and soon flooded the streets and sidewalks of a large section of the city.

At Black Rock, Arkansas, the water is reported to be six feet deep in the principal streets. The lower part of Batesville is also reported flooded; and the river is rapidly rising at Pine Bluff. No trains reached Little Rock from Fort Smith for days together.

Black River, Ark., along which there are many mills, is ten inches higher than ever known, and all the saw-mills are under water. Workmen, with their families, are in great want, and considerable distress is felt among the settlers. Every house in Powhattan, the county seat of Lawrence county, is under water, except the postoffice, which stands upon a hillside. Several bridges have been washed away, horses, cattle and hogs have been drowned, and the damage along the river is at least $50,000. If the situation continues much longer the laboring classes will be forced to ask for help.

COUNTRY.

The Supreme Court of Indiana upheld the law enacted at the last session of the Legislature providing uniform school books for the entire State. This law provides that the State Board of Education shall enter into a contract with the lowest and best bidder to supply books to all schools.

Judge McComus, who, as acting Governor of Virginia, signed the death warrant of John Brown, the Harper's Ferry hero, died Tuesday at Fort Scott, Kan., aged 74.

An English syndicate is reported to have secured options of purchase on all the Columbia River canneries save three, and is likely to secure control of the business.

George Brown, a Negro preacher of more than ordinary intelligence, is organizing a colony of his race in St. Louis to emigrate to Africa. In response to questions, he said he was making splendid progress with his scheme, but had not been making a noise about it. Already he has, he says, enlisted some sixty or seventy families probably all told, as many as 400 or 500 people.

Settlers and boomers occupied the Cherokee strip last week, which drovers had rented from the Indians. President Harrison issued an order directing the boomers to get off the strip. The settlers fired the prairies and the cattle moved with a rush.

FOREIGN.

The press of Berlin expresses great gratification at the meeting on Saturday of the International Labor Conference called by the Emperor. DAVID M'FALL.

Amid the festivities of last New Year's day the Reformed Presbyterian congregation meeting in the historical church on Chambers street, Boston, were bowed in heavy grief as they returned to earth the form of their beloved pastor. In seventeen years he had given to them the strength of his young manhood, generously lavish of his strength in his zeal for the church and people of God. His unsparing labors had their harvest; and a brave and noble life was cut off in its prime and beauty.

David McFall was born in the north of Ireland, near Coloraine, on the 12th of March, 1846. He studied at Coloraine Institute, but in his twenty-first year the migratory impulse, which has driven from Ireland her best and her poorest, sent him to America, and he completed his studies at Westminster College, at New Wilmington, Pa., and at the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Allegheny, under Prof. J. R. W. Sloane and his co-educators.

His first work was at Oil City, Pa., a locality then full of the fever of oil speculation. He was ordained and installed in May, 1871. His influence upon the mixed and shifting population of the oil country was great, and his services were in demand for addresses on questions of public interest.

After two years of this work he was called to Boston and became pastor of the Chambers street church, where he was installed on the 11th of July, 1873. On the 16th of October, the same year, he married Miss Clara B. Milligan, daughter of Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., so long the Nestor of the Covenant church. Another daughter, Margaret Ellen, was married at the same time to Prof. C. A. Blanchard, now President of Wheaton College.

Chambers street church is situated in an old and densely inhabited part of the city, north of the State House and on the other side of Beacon Hill from the Common. In the near vicinity is located the old Jay street church, memorable for Abolition meetings and for mobs. To this interesting pastoral work Mr. McFall gave himself without reserve, and became so fixed in the esteem and love of his people that death alone seemed to be able to part them.

But in 1880 an enlargement came to Mr. McFall's work. Secretary Stoddard was speaking for the National Christian Association in New England, and came to Boston, where he arranged for three meetings in the Chambers street church. A vote of the congregation in favor of an exposition of the Masonic degrees changed the nature of these meetings after the lecture of the first evening. Rev. D. P. Rathbun, who was then in Boston, was asked to conduct the public initiation. Before the close of the second evening, Feb. 5, 1880, a Freemason arose and began a severe denunciation of the church and its officers who would allow such a performance, which was a desecration of the house and a libel on Masonry.

Mr. McFall bravely stood forward as pastor of the church and defended its position as patriotic and Christian. While he was pastor of that church or any other it should be open to combat the enemies of Jesus Christ; and he considered Freemasonry a system of organized infidelity. He then confounded the lodge champion with one or two questions, so that he subsided in confusion. The Boston papers gave wide report to the discussion, but unfairly favored the lodge.

The exposition of the third degree was to follow on the next evening. The members of the lodge seem to have determined that it should not be given. They rallied early and strong and filled the church when the doors were opened. The speaker and members of the congregation could not find a place even to stand, and from 1,500 to 2,000 people were turned away from the doors. Suppressed and intense excitement filled the room, but none were so cool and determined as the young pastor, who, understanding the situation in a moment, had a police captain and large squad brought to the scene. The row began promptly, but the speaker kept on until the lodge devotees became furious as Baal's priests. They shouted and stamped like rowdies. They threw cabbages and turnips at the speaker. One well-known and wealthy citizen sat with two revolvers displayed; which, however, he dared put to no further use. Three times the police captain came to Mr. McFall in despair. He could not control the rioters, and begged the proceedings to close. "Never, until we are through," was the only reply. The degree was finished amid the tumult and howling of the mob. Next day the press of the whole country gave the story to their readers, but with a strong prejudice in favor of the lodge, and much unfavorable criticism of Mr. McFall and his people. The latter were thoroughly aroused, and those who sympathized with them no less so. A national meeting was immediately resolved upon. Mr. McFall on the Sabbath following preached two powerful sermons on the lodge system, one of which was widely published.

The memorable convention at Music Hall was held on the 24th and 25th of March following. The mobs that filled that noble hall with deafening and outrageous clamor, that assailed the delegates on the street with eggs and bricks, that attacked the aged Samuel D. Greene (then over 90) and his lady attendant with abuse, made a record for New England Freemasonry that covers that order with ineffaceable disgrace. Through all those exciting days David McFall was an intrepid leader, aiding to secure a large police force, and more brave than any officer in his effort to secure the arrest of the more villainous of the lodge mob. Such a display of moral courage was not without its effect on the Masons. Some it shamed, others it awed, from all it commanded respect. Round such a leader his people rallied with enthusiasm; and, although that church seemed to stand alone among the churches of Boston, its unfaltering stand for principle and right conquered prejudice and marked the way in which other churches and pastors are following with the blessing of God upon them. There would have been no Tremont Temple Conference in December last but for Mr. McFall and his church.

THE WI GEE HONG SOCIETY.

BY REV. J. P. STODDARD.

This is a newly discovered enterprise among the Chinamen in Boston. It is their latest accession to the Secret Empire, and though insignificant in numbers and influence when compared with the Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, etc., yet its interference with the "maintenance of law and order in the city" has given occasion for alarm.

According to a statement of the Herald of March 3, a "sworn band of 1,200 Chinamen" has its headquarters at No. 34 Harrison avenue, where it initiates members, plots, conspires and executes its penalties, and celebrates its victories in the courts and "the escape of a brother from the toils of the law" with riotous feasting and uproarious demonstrations. Evidence given before a jury of twelve men in the trial of Gun Long Quong in the Superior Criminal Court, shows that "Wi Gee Hong" is a secret society. That it imposes oaths with ferocious death penalties. That it trumps up charges and seeks the destruction of its offending members under forms of civil law. That when other methods fail, as a last resort (like Morgan for revealing Masonry, like the victims of the "blood avengers" at Salt Lake City, and Dr. P. H. Cronin for resisting the Clan-na-Gael rulers,) the offender must suffer death at the hands of the "executioner," a regularly appointed officer.

The writer of the Herald article says of the penalty: "They stick a knife into a man in the society room or elsewhere, cut up his body into pieces sufficient in number to go around and give one portion to each brother, who is expected to convey his share to an appropriate place and get rid of it as best he can." "It is hardly conceivable that a society having such a frightful regulation should exist in the center of this civilized community, and still it does."

The writer evinces surprise that "some persons claim a Masonic character for the 'Wi Gee Hong,' and asserts that 'but very little Freemasonry enters into its composition.' The points of similarity are too striking to be overlooked by any one at all familiar with the initiations, oaths, penalties and government of a Masonic body. When the candidates are ready, says the Herald reporter, "The initiation begins at midnight. From ten to fifty are initiated in a batch. From the door of the society room to the feet of the president, they crawl on their hands and knees. During this time they are at the mercy of the old members, who are at liberty to cuff, beat," etc. If this is not modeled on the Royal Arch initiation, there is a very striking coincidence between going under the "Living Arch," or over "the rough and rugged road" between Babylon and Jerusalem, and the prostrate form of the novitiate crawling to the president's feet amid the kicks and cuffs and thumps of the "old members." Every Royal Arch Mason will at once recognize the paternity of this ceremony as a child of the chapter.

After calling attention to some of the dangers to be apprehended from this murderous society, the question is very appropriately asked, "Why should not the guardians of the peace at least take cognizance of the institution?" If the guardians of the peace are not to suppress societies for conspiracy, coercion and murder, what then are their duties? And why would it not be well for these same guardians of the peace and morals of Boston to investigate the clans that are under like treasonable oaths with death penalties, whose principal night rendezvous is Masonic Temple, corner of Tremont and Boylston streets? Why not treat the whole family of brotherhoods impartially?

A glance at the City Directory will show these guardians of the peace that there are 599 secret lodges, beside the "Wi Gee Hong," meeting in Boston, or nearly two and one-half lodges to one church, including Catholics, Unitarians, Jewish, Universalists, missions, and what not calling themselves churches. If the judicial findings in Utah and in the Cronin murder case in Chicago; the death of Rev. Johnston at Huntington, W. Va., at the hands of Royal Arch Masons; and the discovery of a Highbinder society with 1,200 members in Boston, does not furnish just occasion for vigilance and action, then it would be difficult to conceive of any condition of danger from secret lodges that would arouse the people. The spirit of inquiry is abroad, and God is moving upon the hearts of the people. Let every friend do what in him lies to push on the good work.

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

The uneven distribution of wealth is a very serious cause of complaint, and many of the complaints are wholly justified. But if we think these complaints a characteristic of our own country or our own age, we are mistaken. The questions raised by the Nationalists and Socialists are very old questions; and just because they are old they ought to be studied historically. No upstart need expect to utterly ignore the past and come before the world with a theory that shall at once set up a heaven on earth. It is not by any such revolution or "sudden conversion" that God regenerates society. Excellent as are some of the things said by Mr. George and Mr. Bellamy, we feel that in the very grounds of their ideas they have ignored some of the basal elements of human nature. The daily press teems with sensations that declare beyond dispute that while "Looking Backward" might do for angels, it will not do for men as we find them. Though it might work with the men we meet at the church, it will not work with the men we meet on the railroad track, in the saloons, and on back alleys at midnight.

"But let us agitate the subject," says some one. "Let us preach Christian Socialism; let us begin to practice the 'having all things in common' as did the early Christians. Let us slowly and surely nationalize the telegraphs and the railroads and other lines of industry, until at last society shall collectively own all that individuals owned originally. Then we will hear no more the cry of 'hard times,' but one man will fare as well as another, and all will be happy in proportion as they are good and blessed in proportion as they are faithful." That there is much of the best intellect and the warmest enthusiasm for humanity behind this proposition I will attempt to neither palliate nor deny. But still the question arises, "How shall we advocate?"

In this age we are studying all things historically. No man is accounted of value in mental or physical science unless he knows the history of those sciences. And especially in view of recent agitations is it necessary for the theologian to be acquainted with the history of theological belief; and some one has suggested that a history of testimony may have a very marked influence upon the problem of Christian evidences. Now, in view of these facts, it is especially fitting for the socialist to acquaint himself with the history of the efforts of the lower classes to obtain justice, and a history of those customs and those efforts that have made the rich richer and the poor poorer.

In giving a history of this subject we must be influenced more or less by the contributions of evolutionary science. Not that a man must believe in evolution, as Mr. Spencer and Mr. Darwin have indicated, in order to comprehend the present social situation, but because our most helpful writers on social subjects for the last fifty years have been in a sense evolutionists. It is not necessary to believe man sprang from the ape and the mollusk in order to absorb the higher spiritual truths of evolution. Any man who believes that the world is growing better, that we as a race are more moral and spiritual to-day than we were in the dark ages when the people could not read and the priests did not care, when the Ten Commandments were forgotten and vice ran wild; any man who believes that our social order is an improvement upon that described in the book of Job or the book of Judges, when the children of Israel had no rulers and no prophets, and every man did that which was right (or wrong) in his own eyes; any man, I say, who believes this, is so far an evolutionist. And this is all the reader is asked to accept as a basis for our further study. Either, as Browning has written, or all this struggle and aspiration is futile. Preaching is foolishness. When the Son of Man cometh he will find no faith on the earth. I am not an alarmist. I believe our present social upheaval will subside, leaving the spiritual, intellectual and moral field more fertile and more inviting to the laborer than ever before. I think a short account of man's social achievements in the past will prove this.

"God's in his heaven,

While New Jersey is trying to amend her constitution so as to make unlawful for any power, foreign or local, to use dictation or coercion in order to compel the attendance or enforce the absence of children from any particular school, and thus protect herself from the ruin that follows in the footsteps of Roman Catholicism, the Right Rev. John J. Keane, D. D., rector of the Catholic University at Washington, is trying to hang on to both horns of a dilemma at the same time. He dare not offend the Pope: he is afraid to offend the people of the United States. In New Jersey the church has declared that Catholic children must be removed from the public schools and sent to parochial schools under penalty of excommunication as an evidence of the disposition of the church. In Washington Dr. Keane says: "People come to America from all the countries of the world, with all forms of political convictions and opinions, but America does not minimize her political principles in order to suit these conflicting views. She coerces none, but she states her principles, clearly and fully, trusting to their evident truth, and to the utility of their practical workings, and the result is as she hoped. All are convinced and embrace her principles, and we have the most homogeneous people in the world. Now if this be true as to our social principles, how can it be false as to religious principles? No one should be coerced into Christianity, but Christianity should be taught in its fullness, so that its evidentness and its beauty may of themselves win the minds and hearts of all. He would have very poor confidence in Christianity who would fear to put it to this test, and he would do injustice to Christianity who would refuse it this much fair play." Precisely so. People come to us knowing that we are a Christian nation; that the Bible is our "formation stone;" that the Bible is a non-sectarian book. All we ask is "fair play." Leave the Bible in our schools and the results with God.

ROME'S ASSAULT ON OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

FROM AN ADDRESS BY REV. DAVID M'FALL BEFORE THE QUARTER-CENTENNIAL OF THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION, PITTSBURG,
APRIL 23, 1889.

The next step rises higher than either of the preceding. It is a denial of the state's right to educate. When you expel the Bible to suit Rome, she will not take the multiplication table at your hands. You have no right to teach anything. Father Conaty, a priest of Worcester, Mass., says: "The state, as an educator, is a relic of barbarism." The Tablet, a Roman Catholic journal, says: "We hold education to be a function of the church, not of the state; and in our case we do not, and will not, accept the state as an educator." And the 47th section of the Syllabus of Errors says: "Public schools open to all children for the education of the young should be under the control of the Romish church, and should not be subject to the civil power, nor made to conform to the opinions of the age." Here we reach the climax. All disguise is now laid aside. There is no reference to such sectarian grievances as the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, and Sermon on the Mount. Even alleged immorality vexes no longer. If your schools were "pure as ice, and chaste as snow," the Pope would condemn them. Why? Because they are under the control of the state, and not subject to the Romish church. This is the issue between us, and they have made it. Rome, or America, as educator for the youth of the Republic. Let us scorn compromise and spurn all halfway measures, and fight it out on this line, if it takes all of life to do it.

To stimulate the hesitating in this conflict—if such there be—let us think what kind of an education Rome would give. She frankly tells us that reading, writing and arithmetic would not be considered necessary. The course would begin with the scapular and end with the catechism. Cardinal Antonelli said, "The essential part of the education of the people was the catechism, and that while arithmetic, geography, reading, writing, and other similar studies might be useful, they were not essential." The Catholic World for April, 1871, says: "We do not indeed prize so highly, as some of our countrymen appear to do, the simple ability to read, write, and cipher. The best ordered and administered state is that in which the few are well educated and lead, and the many are trained to obedience, are willing to be directed, content to follow, and do not aspire to be leaders. We believe the peasantry in old Catholic countries two centuries ago were better educated, although for the most part unable to read and write, than are the great body of the American people to-day. This is the only legitimate conclusion from Cardinal Manning's manipulation of statistics in the March number of the Forum. Surely this is sufficiently frank and plain. Rome's ideal education for their country is that of the peasantry of Catholic countries two centuries ago, when the majority could neither read nor write! But the Catholic World did not need to go back two centuries to find this ideal. Two-thirds of the population of Rome to-day can neither read nor write, and yet there is a Catholic teaching force there of over 6,700, or one for every fifty inhabitants. When Victor Emmanuel took possession of the Papal states, only five per cent of the native population could read and write. Perhaps, indeed, this per cent is too large for the Catholic World, and it may have been somewhat less than two centuries ago; but surely ninety-five per cent of illiteracy ought to have been enough to begin with. Fifty-seven millions out of our sixty millions unable to discern between their right hand and their left! This is the service Rome is ambitious to render to America. Surely shame itself cannot be otherwise than ashamed of such an avowal. Will Catholics themselves—who breathe our free air, and have tasted of the heavenly gift of knowledge—submit to such masters? Victor Hugo said to the clerical party in France, "You claim the liberty of teaching! Stop. Be sincere. Let us understand the liberty you claim. It is the liberty of not teaching." And truer words were never spoken.

But we have not yet done with the program. They hope to make us swap horses in the middle of the stream. "The time is not far away," says priest Capel, "when Roman Catholics, at the order of the Pope, will refuse to pay their school tax, and will send bullets to the breasts of the Government agents rather than pay. The order can come any day from Rome. It will come as quickly as the trigger, and it will be obeyed, of course, as coming from Almighty God himself." This belongs to the program, but the performance has not yet reached it. But when it does reach it, what then? According to the priest, the Romanist will refuse to pay his taxes. This shows that he will be loyal to the Pope, and disloyal to his country. The property will then be sold for the taxes. Some one not on his hands and knees before the Pope will buy it. The courts will give a title to it. But all the power of the Government in that locality will not be able to protect that man in the peaceable possession of that property. A guerilla warfare will be inaugurated. As soon as it is inaugurated, the priests will loudly condemn it, but secretly foster it. They will point out the Government's inability to keep the peace, and officially proclaim their own ability to do it. But they will not do it until the Government grants their demand. That demand will be the same as they make to-day—a division of the school fund; not in proportion to the amount they pay, which would be a mere trifle, but in proportion to the number of children attending their schools. In some localities, this would be far the larger part of the fund. Then Protestant money goes by the power of the Government to support the Romish religion. If they succeed thus far, the next step will be the foisting of the Romish church on the state, as the Established Church; and the next will be the suppression of all other forms of religion. To this consummation, the Encyclical of 1864 points as directly as the needle to the pole. The 78th section declares that "The Roman Catholic religion should be the only religion of the state, and all other modes of worship should be excluded." This is the program in outline. The details may be varied according to circumstances, but the plan will be rigidly pursued to the end. It is needless to say that it is a dream on Rome's part, and a wild one; as wild a dream as the devil's when he warred with the Almighty for the mastery. But let us not imagine that because wild, and impossible, it is therefore harmless. The bubble will be punctured some day, but it can be done now, at less expense of good neighborhoods, to put it on the very lowest footing, than it can be fifty years hence.

What measures should be taken to nip this incipient rebellion in the bud?

1. Let Protestants of every name, together with their allies—the liberty-loving millions—who do not belong to any Evangelical denomination—organize, and present an unbroken front to this common enemy. Let the action of the one be suited to the effort of the other.

2. Let the press be redeemed from its present enslavement to Romish influence. The way to do this is through the counting-room. Patronize such as will give a full and fair account of the controversy, and let the priests take care of the rest.

3. Let our laws be sharpened so as to protect, on the one hand, our institutions from Jesuitical intrigue; and on the other, to put a stop to priestly bulldozing. A bill is now before the Massachusetts Legislature having this end in view. In supporting it, Representative Gracey said a woman in Salem told him she left Ireland because her child was abused, but not taught, in a Catholic institution. When she came here she thought she was in a free country, but now the priest was after her, and again demanded the education and care of her child. This tyrannical interference on the part of the priesthood with the rights and liberties of American citizens must be stopped. It can be done. Italy has done it. Mexico has done it. Shall we not do it? Shall the world say we are intolerant when we refuse to bear a yoke cast off by those who have been inured to it for centuries? Let the amendment now before the National Legislature be pushed until, in some proper form, it is imbedded in the fundamental law of the land. Demand especially that the same restriction be put upon each of the States, as is now placed on the National Government, respecting the establishing of religion, and gifts of money, or grants of land for sectarian purposes. Close every door against the Jesuits, lock it, and throw away the key. Bear this in mind, if you do not save your institutions by the ballot, and timely legislation, your children will have to do it with the sword.

4. Bring all parochial schools, with teachers, and text books, under state supervision. Never mind the religious instruction given in these schools. Let them teach as much or as little of that as they please. But give the Catholic World and the shades of Antonelli to understand, that reading, writing and arithmetic are essential to the education of American youth. See that the histories in use there are true. If you find them saying, as they do, that the Jesuits, and not the Pilgrim Fathers, founded this country, take the liberty to correct it. And if you find these schools teaching disloyalty to the President of the United States, intimating that his superior is to be found anywhere on earth, then close them immediately.

5. Resolutely oppose everything looking toward a division of the school fund.

6. If it must be done, banish the Jesuits. This has been found necessary elsewhere, it may be found necessary here. Look into the matter and see, and if you find it necessary, let it be done. Our fathers tolerated Rome's religion, but forbade her Government. The same measure may yet be required at our hands. If the patriotism of the citizen, and the wisdom of the statesman shall now join hands, our country may yet realize the patriotic prayer, Esto Perpetua, let her stand forever.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

GRAND UNITED ORDER OF BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF FRIENDSHIP.

[Concluded from last week.]

The signs of the respective degrees are given in letters arranged according to the following cypher plan:

A B C D E F G H I J K L M
N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z

In this system A is N and N is A, etc., and the "day hailing sign" is given in the ritual thus: 1st, CYNPR, GUR, ONPX, BS, GUR, E V T U G, U N A G, H A Q R E, etc. The translation is as follows:

DAY HAILING SIGN.

1. "Place the right hand under the throat, replace on the side. The word is, I hail in I. S. & O."
2. "Place the right hand on the left hand over the eyes, then by the side, which means, I see in I. G. & O."
3. "Cover the heart with the right hand. Place it by the side. Word is, I call in J. G. & O."
4. "Stretch out your left hand in full. Replace it by your side, which means, I come."

NIGHT HAILING SIGN.

"The hailer gives three raps. On hearing them, the party hailed shall also give them three raps, when the hailer shall advance towards the party hailed and say to him or her that, 'I say that what some bosom friend.' The party hailed shall say, 'to tell my secrets to.' When your life is at stake act thus: Stretch out both arms in full length and fold them across the breast. At night cry thus, 'Oh, Lord, have mercy upon me,' three times."

TOKEN GRIP.

"Grasp the hand as usual. Press the thumb between the joints of the second and third fingers, slightly drawing the thumb down the same. Then testing party shall say, 'You responded in V. T. & B.'"

FIRST DEGREE.—"Stand erect. Place your right hand on your heart and say, 'Virtue.'"

SECOND DEGREE.—"Stand erect. Slightly lean forward. Place the first finger of the right hand on the tongue and say 'Truth.'"

FOURTH DEGREE.—"Stand erect. Stretch out the hands. Clasp them together and say, 'Affectionate.'"

FIFTH DEGREE.—"Stand erect, the two first fingers and point, say, 'Fidelity.'"

SIXTH DEGREE.—"Stand erect. Advance two steps. Step off on the left foot and stop on the right. Bend forward and say, 'Integrity.'"

SEVENTH DEGREE.—"Stand erect. Raise the right hand as if to sound a gavel and say, 'Kindness.'"

On this ritual it is worthy of remark:

1. The promise of the candidate that he would willingly suffer any punishment the lodge may inflict upon him in case he made a false statement, is a promise that is untrue in fact, and that he had no right to make; for a lodge has no authority or right to inflict any punishment.

2. The hoodwinking the candidates and the effort to terrorize them is as foolish and wicked as it is mean and cruel. The ode on death is especially designed to inspire them with terror. It amounts to a threat of eternal torments with the damned spirits in case they are not obedient. This is administered to boys and girls of but 15 years of age. The heavy chains dragged across the floor are but to deepen this impression. The singing, smiting on the breast, the command to pray, the sudden interruption of the pretended prayer and the seizing the candidate and riding him on a beer-keg, are all worthier of a company of demons than of Christian citizens.

The obligation, as in nearly all other secret societies, embraces the two principles of secrecy and obedience. The candidate swears that he will "never divulge any of the mysteries or secrets of this order," and that he "will obey all orders emanating from the chief executive, or from the officers of the lodge." This takes away all right of private judgment and makes the member the slave of the order. Such a covenant no person has a right to make or is bound to keep, since he has no means of knowing what he must conceal or what orders he will be required to obey. The pouring of the water and the appeal to God are designed to impress the candidate with the danger of everlasting death in case he repents of his unholy promise.

The oath required of officers of this order at their installation is especially worthy of remark. It is as follows:

Here they shall repeat their names and say, I—, in the fear of the Almighty God, and in the presence of these my brothers and sisters, with my right hand upon the Bible, the Holy Word of God, do solemnly promise and affirm that I will faithfully serve in the position to which I have been elected, and at the expiration of my term I will deliver to my successor all the properties I may have, by virtue of my office, belonging to this lodge and order. And I furthermore promise and affirm that I will not reveal any of the transactions of this lodge, or loan any books or papers belonging thereto—so help me God and keep me steadfast.

It is ordinarily sufficient to require of the officers of any voluntary association a simple promise to fulfill their duties. These are not of such a nature as to demand the solemnity of an oath; and it is but degrading that solemn appeal to God, and "taking his name in vain" to prostitute it to such purposes. This oath, it will be observed, swears again to secrecy. We must notice, too, the list of "working tools" used in this lodge. They are thus given in the ritual:

WORKING TOOLS.

The working tools of this order shall be a ladder, stone, compass, rule, Holy Bible, clock, globe, goat.

What, we would ask, must be the moral effect, —or de moralizing rather, of thus making the Book of God a tool for all sorts of men, like clocks, ladders, stones and goats! This sacrilege is abominable.

The "Monarch" (mark the word!) wears an emblem of the blazing sun on his cap front, and the "Princess" the likeness of a moon. This indicates the conformity of this order to ancient sun-worship, and such a use of the Bible might be expected of people engaged in heathen ceremonies.

ALLUREMENTS.

Perhaps the worst feature in the whole plan is that the organizer, who may be any man willing to do the work of the order for liberal pay, can become a member and be authorized to organize lodges, grant charters, initiate candidates and collect dues, though he has never been initiated himself. Charters and certificates of membership are made out and sent to him duly signed by the officers, but with the names of persons and places left blank. Moreover, such organizer is told to collect $1.30 each from all who shall be organized, for his own services and something more for the Grand Lodge. He is to promise those uniting $3 per week in case of disability and $5 on their decease, to be collected by assessments on the members. Thus the members must not only support the Grand Lodge, pay the salaries of its officers and its rents as well as local expenses, but must pay the organizer a good salary, and all this for the privilege of paying to each other such sums as may be assessed against them. The ignorant are made to believe that this is benevolence, and they join the order under the expectation of receiving much more than they pay out. They are made to pay for more than they have any right to expect. They take upon them the burden of supporting the officers of an order who simply fatten at their expense. They may indeed receive a moiety, if the order is conducted honorably and carefully, but they have no assurance that this will be the case.

It is such societies as these that make and keep the freedmen poor. They take away the stimulus to exertion and thrift by promising help in sickness and an honorable burial. They destroy true Christian charity by teaching Christians to "give that they may receive as much again." Sinners do this. They take the time, attention and means that are sorely needed by the church. They substitute spurious religious ceremonies in place of Christian worship, and foster a great company of human vampires who suck the blood from the innocent poor, and leave poison in its stead. It is time that the whole secret order system was suppressed.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Sunday newspaper—Another Spiritualist swindler behind the bars—How Governor Goodell concluded to be his own lawyer—The defeat of another temperance bill in the Massachusetts legislature—What Mr. Hill says about them—Is there not a reason?

The other day an advertisement of the Sunday Globe met my eye and set me to pondering the mystery, how public sentiment can stand this hash of corrupt reading that goes into thousands upon thousands of American homes leaving behind it the veritable "trail of the serpent." "The gross, overweighted and vulgarly obese Sunday newspaper, reeking and unctious for the most part with useless information," as one writer describes it, is degrading and defiling to the last degree; and my only wonder is that the pulpits everywhere do not thunder against it, and all people claiming even the shadow of respectability cast it from their houses as if it had the plague. This subject of pure newspapers came up at a recent meeting of the Liberal Union Club in Providence, and Mrs. Anna G. Spencer suggested that there be an organization in every city of intelligent, earnest men and women to watch the daily press and reform it. This sounds like a suggestion to pare the lion's claws. The only possible way to reform such a paper as the Globe, for instance, is by a strict boycott from all respectable people; but as long as such will buy and read it, it is useless to suggest a remedy. The paper which a family reads, not simply tinges but is wrought into the daily woof of its life and manners, and no wonder the effect of such a vast increase in this prurient journalism has been not only a stunting but a retrograding in public morals and intelligence.

The arrest of another spiritualist medium in Springfield has exposed a few more of their vain and dark tricks, but it is a singular fact that none of these revelations have shaken the faith of the genuine believers in spiritualism. They recognize the presence of imposters as only another evidence of the truth of their creed. It may be a surprise to some readers to know that there is or was—I believe it is now about dissolved—a spiritualistic bureau in Boston whose special object was to help mediums in hard straits. A medium receiving a call to lecture before any particular people, could, through this bureau, obtain many valuable facts regarding their deceased relatives with which to startle a credulous audience without any converse with the unseen world. All he needed was a good memory and enough mother wit to cover up any little mistake in detail. A story is told of one woman who consulted a medium on two different occasions to know what she should do in a difficult situation. The second time the advice she received was exactly opposite to what he gave her at first, but when she ventured to call the medium's attention to this fact, he drew himself up with dignity and solemnly answered, "Madame, the second advice is the best, take that." She was obliged to pay one dollar for the precious information. Which horn of the dilemma she concluded to take history saith not.

Governor Goodell of New Hampshire, who is now seriously ill with spinal trouble to the deep regret of all who appreciate the importance of having such sturdy Abdiels actively at the front, attended the recent meeting of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society at Cambridge. Governor Goodell is a simple farmer and manufacturer and does not pretend to be an orator, but he can give a very interesting address. When the idea was impressed upon his mind that as a prohibition governor it was his duty to see that the law was properly enforced in New Hampshire, he consulted one lawyer after another to see how far his authority as chief magistrate extended. They all informed him that he had absolutely no power in the premises; he could call out the militia in the case of riot or any great emergency, but strange to say he had no authority vested in his office to make rumsellers obey the law. But Governor Goodell being a man of independent thought, began to investigate on his own hook, and finding that there were decisions of the courts which gave him sufficient precedent for such action, he issued his famous proclamation. In his address he gave among other hard nuts for high license advocates to crack some statistics showing that while New Hampshire has only one-fifth the population of Massachusetts, the former State under prohibition has less than 250 convicts, while the latter under high license has—not five times as many convicts in the proportion of her population as New Hampshire, but twenty times as many.

The retirement of Mr. Hill, the Northampton member alluded to in my last letter, has caused many comments, wise and otherwise. Some of his friends are disposed to regret it, feeling that he should not have allowed himself to be driven out by vulgar insult. But in no other way could Mr. Hill have made so emphatic a protest, or one that would have so arrested public attention, and lead people to consider what kind of men they were sending to the capital to make their laws for them. The old seaport town of Beverly has long been engaged in a bitter fight over the question of town division, and one of his first experiences after taking his seat was to find that one side kept a hotel open in Beverly, a dram shop annex where delegations from the Legislature were taken out and feasted, he himself being almost daily importuned to make one of the number. Who can wonder at his disgust? While giving due credit to many of our representatives as able and thoughtful men, Mr. Hill considers that "the great majority are there because they have forced themselves into prominence without any special fitness or even general qualifications for understanding the needs of the State." But how many of these members have obtained their seats by pulling lodge wires; and, to quote Cowper with a slight variation,

"Have they not sworn on every slight pretense, Till perjuries are common as bad pence?"

The Boston Political Class, whose last lesson was on civil government in England from the reign of Henry VII. to that of Queen Elizabeth inclusive, would do well to consider the subject of secret societies in their influence on government as shown in the history of France, and England under the Stuarts. There is great and just complaint of venial legislatures, but how can this be otherwise when the members owe their seats to venial methods? When the sense of honor and righteousness is not keen enough to prevent a man from hoisting himself into office through lodge patronage, it will never be strong enough to keep him from being bought, and betraying his constituents when he has once got in.

REFORM NEWS.

OBSERVATIONS ON SOUTHERN AFFAIRS

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The sectional feeling at the South has been manifested more than usual the past season. Disappointment in politics, on account of the election of General Harrison, was no doubt one exciting cause; and the funeral of Jeff Davis furnished an excellent opportunity for secessionary display. One notable circumstance, however, was the total absence of the masses of the people from the show. The politicians and the old-time slaveholding aristocracy had the day mainly to themselves. I saw no general movement of the population in Memphis, or in the towns I passed through in northern Mississippi on that day, nor in Birmingham, Ala. It was nothing like what I saw on Thanksgiving and the evening before, when the people manifested their interest by unmistakable signs. My impression is that the old slaveholding spirit still survives among the old men, and that it has been largely instilled into their descendants; and thus it is readily aroused by the friction of passing events. The most exciting cause of all is the steady, constant advancement of the freedmen in learning, in character and in wealth. Their schools and colleges are crowded with students; their fine large churches are filled with intelligent worshippers; and the mines, furnaces and shops depend largely upon them for their efficiency.

It is a law of human nature that men hate those whom they have wronged; and if the wrong is not repented of it becomes a permanent disease. What is called race prejudice has its foundation here. No people were ever more utterly abused and robbed of all than the freedmen. They were bought and sold and used as cattle for many years; so they who did it hate and abhor them. The great effort is self-justification, not only in the sight of the world, but at the bar of their own consciences. One delusion that they have hovered over and half asserted is that the freedmen have no souls. An elderly lady in Nashville, Tenn., affirmed this doctrine in the year of grace 1890. At any rate the South affirms that they shall not be treated as if they belonged to the human family. Citizenship shall be denied them, as far as possible their ballots counted out, and every one shall be refused admittance to the caucus; and they must go apart in the cars, like cattle.

In the meantime the Afro-Americans are making great progress in the arts of civilization. They are entering all the fields of mechanical industry. A multitude are engaged as teachers in schools. They are entering the professions of law, medicine and theology. They are generally earnest, faithful and self-possessed men, and most of the rank and file can read. When the Southerners see how prosperous they are becoming, they curse the Government for not sending them to Africa. When the freedmen use their privilege, and emigrate to Kansas or Texas, they curse them for leaving. Let the South heartily return to the American doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man, and repent of their crimes against humanity, then their troubles will be ended. And as long as God lives there is no other way; for the children of Ham and the children of Shem are as near and dear to him as though children of Japheth.

On my way North, I stopped over at Atlanta, Ga., and preached in the A. M. E. Bethel church on Wheat street. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Thomas, is an able man, and we had a large audience, while I discussed the work of the N. C. A.; which seemed to be generally approved. But I got the impression that our teachers and missionaries in Georgia were laboring under the surveillance of the police. And in this respect it seemed the hardest field in all the South.

I stopped several days in Chattanooga, and on Sabbath morning I preached in the Congregational church, at the invitation of the pastor, Rev. J. E. Smith. I had a large audience, that appeared to be in full accord with the National Christian Association. In the evening I addressed a large assembly in the A. M. E. church, by request of their pastor, Rev. Mr. Harris.

From Chattanooga I passed on to Nashville, where I stayed some time with Bro. A. F. Smith, resting up. Things look prosperous in the schools and universities, which are overflowing with students. On Sabbath, February 9th, I preached a reform sermon at 3 p.m. in the College Street Mission. On the following Sabbath morning I addressed a large Sabbath-school, which was engaged in interesting revival services in northeast Nashville. There were a number of hopeful conversions. In the afternoon I preached to a Disciple church there; and on Wednesday evening following I addressed the faculty and students of Fisk University in Livingston Hall. This institution, under the able management of Pres. Cavath and his assistants, is enlarging its influence and usefulness. My last Sabbath in Nashville was a rainy, muddy day; but I preached on reform to a small audience in the First Baptist church at 3 p.m. On the 28th ult. I arrived at Lane Seminary on Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, O. Thus ends for the present my Southern campaign.

S. F. PORTER.

WHERE THE MONITOR CONQUERED.

OFFICE N. C. A., WASHINGTON, D. C., }
March 19, 1890. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just returned from Norfolk, Va. My purpose in going thence was to more thoroughly understand the Southern situation of our work, and if possible to devise some plan through which the light of the "Pole Star" could farther penetrate. After studying the field as far as opportunity would allow, I have a plan which I shall suggest in due time to the N. C. A. Board.

This trip of nearly four hundred miles was made by boat, a much cheaper, and, when water is calm, much pleasanter way of travel than by rail. Taking the steamer Leary one week ago this evening we were soon gliding down the Potomac at a very rapid speed. My stateroom proved to be neat and pleasant. After committing myself to Him whose eye never sleeps, who rules on land and sea alike, I slept soundly, awaking in the morning just in time to see the sun as it appeared to arise out of the ocean, for we were now on Chesapeake Bay, off Cape Charles. Soon Ft. Monroe came in sight. As the black-mouthed cannon peered through the grim port-holes in this defiant fortification, I was forcibly reminded of the nation's dire scourge, which it is to be hoped may never come to us again.

Large hotels at "Old Point Comfort," I was told, were constantly filled with those seeking health. A refreshing sea breeze is almost constant here.

Norfolk is a city of about thirty-five thousand inhabitants, more than half of whom are colored. Being a sea-board city, it harbors all vices known to such cities. Misery and distress confront you at almost every corner. Hundreds sit in poverty and idleness, while scores beset each incoming white man with cries of "Shine, sir?" "Carry your valise, sir?" etc., etc. The reason of this sad condition of things was made evident on acquaintance with the causes which brought it about. Here are about twenty thousand colored people, having at a low estimate six thousand children who should be in school, and only two schools for them to attend, accommodating together about eight hundred. One of these schools is sustained by the United Presbyterian church as a mission. The children who are not fortunate enough to secure a place in one of these schools, are mostly compelled to roam the streets in idleness. But the light is shining and this people is advancing. I met colored preachers, lawyers and doctors that would excell many of their white brethren in the same lines. Schools are hated by the Southerner, who looks upon the colored man as necessarily his servant.

While visiting the U. P. mission school I was happily surprised in meeting Dr. Fulton, pastor of the Fourth U. P. church, Allegheny, Pa., and Mr. and Mrs. Arey of Sewickley, Pa. The Dr. is spending a little time in the South to regain health, which is already much improved. Rev. D. R. McDonald, the newly elected principal, took great pleasure and pains in conducting us through the departments and explaining the work they are doing. I regret that space does not permit a review. I am sure could many Northern people see the eagerness of these children to learn, and the proficiency they make, they would give these schools all possible encouragement.

To encounter the lodge in a place like Norfolk is extremely difficult, but with patience and grace much may be accomplished. Children are taught from infancy that secret societies are good. Babies in the cradle are insured in them. The people are taught that not to join a "society" means to be buried like a pauper. To join an influential "society" means to be buried like a king. Many look upon the painted poles and glittering gewgaws with all the admiration of blinded superstition. On the persons of a number of colored Odd-fellows I saw parading at a funeral, there were enough trinkets to have amused a half dozen babies.

All the pastors to whom the Cynosure had been sent had either refrained from joining these lodges or come out if they had previously united.

Sabbath morning I spoke in the Bank Street Baptist church, Rev. Young, pastor. In the evening Rev. Cook arranged to give me a hearing in his church, the A. M. E. Both these churches are large and well attended, the latter having thirteen hundred members, I believe. They worship in a new church edifice erected at a cost of some $30,000. St. Paul's Episcopal church has a cannon ball in the southeast corner, thrown there during the Revolution. Most of the grave-stones are of very ancient date in the cemetery around this church. One bears the date of 1673; another 1687. One epitaph read as follows:

"Remember me as you pass by,
That as you're now, so once was I;
Whilst you're in health prepared be,
That when death calls to follow me."

W. B. STODDARD.

THE MASONIC OATH AND RESERVATION.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The lecture that I arranged for the Hickory Grove church was a failure on account of heavy rain and deep mud. I went to the place, however, and stopped with Mr. Bradley, who donated $5 to the reform work. Returning to Wyandot and then to Princeton I was entertained hospitably by Mr. and Mrs. Hodgman, the latter being president of the W. C. T. U. The pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church invited me to lecture on the relation of Freemasonry and other secret societies to the Christian religion, in his church, at 3 p. m. on the coming Sabbath.

The Sabbath was a busy day. I preached morning and night and gave the lecture in the afternoon. The Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal, and Free Methodist pastors were in the congregation. The M. E. pastor offered the opening prayer, and when I saw him afterwards, expressed his approval of the argument. He said I made some points with which he was not acquainted before. The Swedish pastor, in whose church I lectured, also expressed his approval of the lecture, and a regret that all of his young men were not present to hear it.

A number of the city churches were represented in the audience, and I could but feel that Christ, our Lord, owned and would bless the effort.

While I was working up the meeting I called upon a gentleman who was formerly a minister of the Methodist Protestant church, but now preaches to a congregation known as the People's Association. He frankly informed me that he was a Mason and had taken the Knight Templar degree.

"But," I said, "you are not opposed to the investigation of Freemasonry and the secret society system in general?" He replied, "Certainly not." I then asked him if he would kindly announce my afternoon lecture in his morning service. Without hesitation he agreed to do so. Entering into familiar conversation with him on the subject of Masonry, I asked for an expression of his views, and he said that he saw nothing wrong in it, as far as he had gone.

I then called attention to the obligation of a Master Mason to keep the secrets of a brother Master Mason when committed to him, "murder and treason excepted;" and the obligation of a Royal Arch Mason to keep the secrets that a companion Royal Arch Mason may commit to him, without exception. I suggested the possibility that such obligations might embarrass witnesses, when called upon in the courts of their country to tell the whole truth about what they had Masonically sworn to keep an inviolable secret. He did not call in question the statement that Master and Royal Arch Masons were so sworn, but called my attention to the assurance given them that there was nothing in the obligation they were about to take, that could conflict with their duties to God, or their country, or their neighbor, and so drew the conclusion that they were not bound to keep any criminal secrets that duty to God, to their country or their neighbor would require them to reveal. I could but think that my friend took a very happy view of his Masonic obligations, and wondered whether he took those oaths without any evasion or mental reservation, and whether he was posted in the Masonic dogma, so tenaciously taught and held, that it is the covenant that makes the Mason, and that what makes one Mason better than another is that he more strictly observes his covenant.

It is unfortunate for a man to pledge or swear to do a thing the nature of which he cannot know until after his oath is given. It is poor comfort when he finds that he is sworn to keep criminal secrets, to remember that he was told beforehand that there was nothing wrong in the oath he was about to take. But the sad fact remains that it was the oath he took and not what the Master said about it that made him a Mason. Why, thought I, is murder and treason excepted, when a man takes the oath that makes him a Master Mason, if they don't mean to bind him to keep all the criminal secrets in the calendar of crime except those two? And how, in view of that exception in the Master's oath, can a man, when he takes the oath that makes him a Royal Arch Mason, resist the conclusion that they mean to make his heart the sepulcher, where his Royal Arch companions may bury their secrets, though they be murderers, or plotters of treason? And when they teach, as they do, that the covenants of Masonry are more binding than either civil or ecclesiastical law, what wonder is it that the administration of justice in the courts of our country, and of discipline in the church is obstructed? What kind of a witness will that man make who is Masonically sworn to keep as an inviolable secret, that which he is judicially sworn to tell the whole truth about? Good citizenship, sound morals, and pure Christianity all unite in a protest against the secret lodge system.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHURCH MUST PREPARE THE WAY FOR POLITICS.

DEKALB, Iowa.

A political organization, even with the best of principles, like the American party, cannot succeed in carrying a State or the nation without regular politicians. Perhaps Hon. S. C. Pomeroy came nearest filling the bill. He is our best statesman, and did the best he could for prohibition by resigning in favor of St. John. Those of us who voted for St. John and then for Fisk will never regret it. The Prohibition party has a goodly number of politicians. We have none. We are not on that line. Prohibition is the best of statesmanship. The American was in advance of the Prohibition party with a prohibition plank in its national platform. All evils are akin, and when national prohibition is won, it will at least weaken all compacts used to perpetuate the rum traffic. A. Thomson well says, He is dull who cannot hear the "Forward, march!" of our great Commander, who never lost a battle. The rum fiend is to be met with our ballots. Nothing is so damaging to the drunkard-making interest as prohibition ballots. If I remember right Bro. Thomson says, "Blind is he who does not see the saloon hosts preparing for the decisive struggle" (in the lodge). I know of no language sufficiently strong to use in condemnation of the worse than heathenish rum traffic. It never could have grown to be the gigantic curse that it is without the cover of secretism.

A minister who resided in Omaha said, "If a merchant opposes the saloon they go into their secret lodges and ruin his business." Honest Freemasons have told me that "the lodge is being used for very bad purposes by rascals in it;" and saloon men are mean enough to use secretism for all there is in it, or as far as it will screen them. The lodge is the bulwark of the saloon in disguise. But of course there are prohibitionists in the lodge who will not allow it to be thus used where they can help it. Providence seems to use the American party and our reform to help prohibition, not only by voting but by giving noble-hearted temperance men light, who have been unfortunately blinded by lodgery in regard to the most crafty enemy of prohibition. Satan, through purely human organization, appears to temperance men as an angel of light and blindfolds them.

The best we can say for the lodge is that it is a human institution. It has no place in the economy of God. All legitimate human law governs both ecclesiastical and civil organized governments, and has its foundation on the solid rock of eternal truth. The law governing lodges is neither civil or ecclesiastical, consequently cannot possibly have any foundation in truth. The church is both human and divine. The lodge is human and Satanic. Who ever heard of any one in the church to meet with a fatal accident and lose their life while being initiated into "the kingdom of God and his righteousness?" A man recently lost his life by being initiated into the seventh degree of the kingdom of Satan. There is said to be less danger to the body from accidents in this degree than any other. The most fatal danger is to the soul.

Is not the whole realm of Satan's kingdom a hurt to every good work? If not, why does it cost so much to move reform on any line? Are not the "unfruitful works of darkness" but broken reeds for temperance men to lean on?

We are glad to see a growing movement among Christians to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." It is a divine command; and when the churches walk obediently in the light, the church of Christ will be freed from the lodge.

When the churches give the commands of God the prestige they should have, then there will be a political party with the ablest statesmen and wisest politicians, more than willing to insert the principles of our anti-secrecy plank in their State and National platforms and carry them into perpetual effect. The church must first do its work, then God will raise up the men we need in civil affairs. No reform ever amounted to anything that did not start in the church. "Righteousness exalteth a nation." Now what does the conference of churches mean? CYRUS SMITH.

WORDS OF CHEER TO REFORMERS.

MONTDALE, Pa., March 10, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—For many weeks past my time has been much absorbed in special evangelical work, genuine "Christian Endeavor," and with encouraging results. My health and age not allowing me to do much more than the regular pastoral work, I called Bro. Sanford, now of Thompson, Pa., to assist in the effort. He is of the Moody school, and of a thoroughly reform spirit on all "living issues," with a spinal column in him—anti-secret, anti-saloon, in short, anti-sin at every turn of his moral make-up. The "sword of the Spirit" is most emphatically his weapon.

Our program was to pray in every house, saloon and all, which was literally carried out in every case where it could be. Somewhere from forty to fifty hopeful conversions may be reported and a goodly number seem serious and in an enquiring mood.

There are two churches: Baptist, in which the meetings were conducted, and M. E., with which many of the converts were connected in family ties. Probably the converts will divide about equally between the two churches; between which the fullest harmony has been aimed at. Bro. Allen, the M. E. minister in charge, was with us in the meetings part of the time, his health not permitting him to enter in fully to the work. Bro. A. is among the noble exceptions in the M. E. ministry, an anti-lodge man, though not radically and actively so. He well understands the ignoble wire-working of lodgery in the M. E. conferences. He sees that no outspoken anti-lodge man need look for desirable parishes in the M. E. church.

A number of the members of this Baptist church, who went out twenty years ago on the anti-lodge issue, held by this church, have been revived in spirit, and we hope will come back to the fold, and such now seems to be the indication. Some lodge men have professed to be converted, and would unite with us only for our anti-secret record. They can go into the M. E. society here if they desire. It has no rule against secretism, only what is found in the M. E. book of discipline. The M. E. church here was founded on the division in the Baptist church twenty years ago, and its leading spirits "went out from us." The most marvelous, if not the most disgusting thing in that division, was the fact that the disaffected party called a council of Baptists, with a D. D. at its head, which council took side with the lodge party against the church. Then it was that your humble correspondent stood up with this church seemingly against great odds. God was with us because we were on his side. It has seemed to me that God intends to vindicate the right here.

Our hope is now that he will also clean out the saloon. Only one is here. We have visited it, and by the consent of the occupants, prayed with them. Many interesting things have happened, but I must not enter into details. Our meetings have, as a rule, been extremely quiet, solemn and orderly. Some saloon victims made a demonstration or two in the meetings. We visited and prayed with the leader of the disorder two days later, and a daughter and her husband were converted and stand candidates for membership in this church. The father has been a bartender in this saloon and is a Freemason.

Allow me now to most earnestly congratulate you on the great success of the Christian Conference at Boston, and to express my most sanguine hope of a still grander success at Chicago, April 21st and 22nd. Add my name to the list in said call. We have everything to gain from discussion of this subject. Our side has nothing whatever to fear from the most exhaustive investigation by the giant minds of this nation in church and in State. Let us advertise most vigorously.

On looking over the list of those who call for said congress, I find very few Baptists. How is this? Are Baptist ministers and educators going behind in this God-appointed move? How many Gordons and Giffords are we to reckon upon in the lists of this important meeting?

Did the Weekly Witness of New York recognize in any way the Boston Congress? I have read the paper most of the time from its beginning and am much attached to it for very many reasons, but cannot see why it nearly or quite ignores so important an issue as secretism in our land. Surely its columns teem with things of much less moment, both to church and state. I am puzzled at its reticence on this question of paramount interest to our whole people.

On the 22nd of April, if I live till then, I shall be seventy years of age. What a treat it would be to me to spend that 70th birthday in Chicago, in the prospective conference. My soul is thoroughly enlisted in every phase of every moral question now thrust before us by God's providence. My very soul burns with indignation against saloonism and its twin brother lodgery. I sometimes imagine that I feel like a volcano, with its crater clogged, and am ready to exclaim, "Oh, that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence; as when the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence," etc. Isa. 64: 1, 2.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

PITH AND POINT.

STRONG AND GOOD WORDS FOR THE CONFERENCE.

"Our Prof. Burr hopes that he may attend some of the sessions, but cannot agree to prepare to speak. Many of us feel the importance of discussing the question of secrecy as an element in our national development, and we hope the convention may be productive of good."—EDWARD D. EATON, President Beloit College.

"I trust the conference may be a success. I thank you for assigning me so vital a topic; but its discussion is simply out of my power at present."—HERRICK JOHNSON, Prof. McCormick Theological Seminary.

"We are in full sympathy with the object of the convention, and are rejoiced to see the number of names attached to the call and the character of the persons represented. I trust it may be a success."—J. B. McMICHAEL, President Monmouth College.

"I trust the meeting will be a success. May the blessing of God rest upon it."—H. Q. BUTTERFIELD, President Olivet College.

"I would gladly undertake the service you desire of me, if I were not loaded with extra work. I do not dare to pledge myself for anything more than I have already agreed to undertake; and those of our Professors who sympathize with the aims of the convention fully and heartily are unable to attend. But I feel sure you will not want for able speakers and that you will have an enthusiastic and profitable gathering. Wishing the movement great prosperity, I am yours ever sincerely."—EDWARD H. MERRELL, President Ripon College.

"You may attach my name to the 'Call.' I am surprised not to see the names of Bishops Floyd, Wright, Barnaby and Becker on the list. They are surely in sympathy with the movement. Also Dr. L. Davis and Dillon of Dayton, O. I am a 'Radical' U. B. throughout. I remember well when Weaver called President J. Blanchard 'our dictator.' Some of the President's sayings have come sadly true to our church. Success to him and co-laborers. I was at the first 'congress' and want to be at the next."—REV. GEO. M. FRESE, Washington, Ill.

"We come in contact almost continually with the dark orders of secretism. Those of the U. B. church who are most persistent in its revolution through nullification are also most persistent in demanding that secretism have a place in the denomination and that the church should cease its opposition to all secret societies. Hence we are ready for a congress of churches to be held in the city of Chicago. I am advertising the 'Congress' at my quarterly meetings, and it is almost universally endorsed by our people."—C. BENDER, Mendota, Ill.

"I will attend the Conference April 22 and 23, God willing. I am firm as ever, and I certainly think victory will eventually come on our side. A few more Cronin and Morgan affairs and we have it."—W. O. DINIUS.

LITERATURE.

VOICES OF PRAISE for School and Church and Home. Compiled and edited by Rev. Charles L. Hutchins. Price 40 cents. Ditson and Co., Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

No book of hymns and tunes for the devotional use of children ever received more unequivocal recommendations than this, and that its great popularity is sustained is proved by the fact it is nearly twenty years since the first edition was given to the public. Several revisions have followed, and the last has given the dear little singers in our homes a book about the size of the four books of "Gospel Hymns" at less than two-thirds their price. There are 383 hymns with tunes, and an excellent addition of about 60 chants, clearly printed and well arranged, and though this is about twice the number of pieces given in the ordinary Sabbath-school hymn book, yet with this great increase in number and variety, the book is light and convenient. But it is the character of both words and music that more especially commend this book. The fact that children are very rapidly educated in their musical taste and in their ideas of music in the worship of God as well as in their ideas of religious experience and doctrine as expressed in hymns, should cause parents and teachers to exercise the extreme care in their selection of hymn books. Books that are made "to sell" should have no quarter, and every composer who feels compelled to amend for the paucity of his music by adding a chorus of "vain repetitions" to each number should be marked down. It is said that organ-grinders and cheap musicians are not allowed to perform on the streets of German cities because of the ill effect on the rapidly forming musical taste of the children. Our American children are beset with a multitude of second to fourth-rate Sabbath-school organ-grinders. We are much better off with less music, if we retain the best. The work of Mr. Hutchins as a compiler has been generally done with excellent taste. The hymns and tunes are, as a rule, dignified without being dull, and are full of brightness, enthusiasm, sense and piety. And we are especially glad to note the addition of so many chants, with which our American children should become more familiar. But we must strongly protest, in the midst of general and hearty commendation, against the introduction of "Christmas" and "Easter" hymns, of which there are a considerable number. The very excellence of the rest makes these selections more to be avoided. Few books of the kind are to be sure above our criticism in this respect, but there is a larger and better selection than usual in this book.

The April St. Nicholas will contain the first of several important papers entitled, "Six Years in the Wilds of Central Africa," by Mr. E. J. Glave, one of Stanley's pioneer officers. These articles will contain vivid descriptions of the author's personal experiences, and will in addition, tell much of the methods and achievements of the great explorer Stanley. The series will be illustrated by Kemble, Taber, and other artists, after sketches by the author.

The last issue of the African News, Bishop Taylor's magazine of the missionary work in Africa and other mission fields, is full of information. The Bishop has several articles and among them we note, "Justification by Faith," "Don't Read Novels," and an address to local preachers. Rev. Ross Taylor contributes an article on the origin of the Congo State. A large share of the magazine is given up to correspondence.

Mr. John La Farge will contribute to the April Century a continuation of his "Letters from Japan," with illustrations by himself, engraved by Marsh, Kingsley, and Whitney. Mr. La Farge's letters have the double interest of being written by a traveler of experience, and by an artist who stands in the front rank of his profession in America. The special subject this month is the "Shrines in the Holy Mountain of Nikko."

The American Garden is rich in hints on horticulture and contains eleven illustrated articles on fruits and flowers. Potatoes and onions come in for their place as does also the culinary department, the reading-room and the conference corner.

A BALLOT ON "REFORMS."

"THE WOMB OF THE PRESENT IS BIG WITH REFORMS. IT IS AS WHEN GAD WAS BORN—HIS MOTHER CRIED, 'A TROOP COMETH.'"

Each reader will please indicate his vote by penciling a circle around "Yes" or "No" after each question. If undecided put the circle about the "?." After so marking the whole list, return it to the Associated Press of Reforms, 74 E. 90th St., N. Y.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

RAILROAD RATES.

The sub-committee appointed by the N. C. A. Board to secure rates from the railway companies has secured from the Western States Passenger Association a promise of a round trip rate of one fare and one third to all who secure certificates from the ticket agent when they purchase tickets, showing that they have paid full fare to Chicago. The roads making this engagement are the Chicago & Alton, Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago, Burlington & Northern, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn. & Omaha, Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City, Chicago, Santa Fe & California, Illinois Central, Iowa Central, and the Wabash. Delegates must remember, when purchasing their tickets on any of these roads to Chicago, to ask for the certificate that will entitle them to a return fare at one-third rates.

The following are among the papers and addresses that have been promised for the Chicago Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System, to be held April 22 and 23, 1890, in the First M. E. church, corner Washington and Clark streets:

Secret Societies.—A general discussion of the whole subject, by Prof. Henry C. King, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Secret Lodges Out of Harmony with Christian Churches.—By Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, D.D., pastor Reformed Presbyterian church, Denison, Kansas.

Subject to be Announced.—By Rev. P. S. Henson, D.D., pastor First Baptist church, Chicago.

Secret Orders and Revivals.—By Col. George R. Clark, Superintendent Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago.

College Secret Societies.—By C. S. Bullock, Theological Student, Evanston, Ill., and by ex-President A. A. Smith, Northwestern College, Naperville, Ill.

Jesuitism as a Secret Oath-Bound Organization.—By Rev. John Lee, pastor M. E. church, Lockport, Ill.

Civil Government and Secret Societies.—By Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor Earnest Christian and Free Methodist, North Chili, New York.

Have Our Best Men been Masons?—By Prof. Joseph Moore, Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

Secret Beneficial Societies.—By Rev. W. P. McNary, D.D., pastor United Presbyterian church, Tarkio, Mo.

What is the Duty of the Church Concerning Secret Societies?—By Prof. C. M. Esbjorn, Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.

Mormonism as an Oath-Bound Organization.—By Rev. Thomas D. Wallace, D.D., pastor Eighth Presbyterian church, Chicago.

The Relation of the Minor Secret Orders to the Christian Church.—By Rev. Halleck Floyd, D.D., bishop of the United Brethren church, Dublin, Ind.

The Jesuit Policy.—By Prof. Joseph L. Daniels, Olivet College, Olivet, Mich.

Subject to be Announced.—By Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., pastor First Congregational church, Chicago.

Unity of the Ancient Mysteries and Freemasonry.—By Prof. David McDill, D.D., United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio.

The Exaltation of Christ, as Lord and Saviour, Our Purpose.—By President C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

SOLOMON'S METHOD WRECKS CHURCH AND STATE.

In contrast with God's method of dealing with false worship, which we explained last week, let us now consider the nature and deplorable results of Solomon's unwise tampering with the pagan religions about him.

How do we know that the false altars of secrecy are the same in nature as the false altars in Judea?

Answer: The standard writers of Masonry affirm it. (See McClenahan, "Book of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," pp. 558, 568, 575, etc.; Mackey, Manual, pp. 12, 22, 23, etc.; Mackey, Lexicon, Art. "Antiquity," Fellow's Mysteries of Freemasonry, p. 9; Dr. Weiss, The Obelisk and Freemasonry, pp. 3, 22, 47, etc.; Rebold, Pierson, Morris, and numerous other Masonic writers.) These all affirm the Egyptian origin of Masonic mysteries, and that they came from the mysteries of Isis and Osiris through the Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans, Druids, etc., down to our own day. They say the baptism of the ruling rite of 33° of the present day "came directly from the religion which existed before the pyramids;" and Solomon's first strange altar came with his first political wife, Pharaoh's daughter, from the same source. We read:

"Solomon went after Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Sidonians, and Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites. Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon. Likewise did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods."—1 Kings 6: 11.

These all were political marriages, and like the political altars of our day, political altars. They borrowed from the true worship of God, which Moses received in the mount, enough to save their worshipers from popular contempt and deceive the masses; but they left out the Decalogue and the Messiah,—the law of God and the Gospel of Christ. This wrecked both church and state. Warburton says: "Each of those pagan shrines had secret rites, to which only the initiated were admitted." They left no national oath or worship. Their high places were national brothels, and their religions are characterized by the Bible as ABOMINATIONS.

Moses, Joshua and David had enforced God's law against these false worshipers. (See last week's editorial.) But Solomon, as seen above, admitted them, though in his prayer dedicating the temple, he had prayed that God would incline their hearts "to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments which he commanded our fathers."—1 Kings 8: 58.

The rigid exclusion of these false altars had enriched the nation and exalted Judea above all other nations. Solomon received in one year six hundred and sixty-six talents of gold; the targets and shields of his royal guards were of beaten gold, so were the drinking vessels of Solomon. He violated the law of the realm by introducing cavalry and chariots into his army for pomp and purposes of invasion, and his commerce exceeded that of any other realm. This led to his political marriages, and his marriages plunged the nation into idolatry; so that in his reign the masses followed the court, invented religions and built secret altars of their own, and the age became one of secret lodge altars and nightly picnics.

"Wherefore the Lord said unto Solomon, forasmuch as this is done of thee I will rend the kingdom from thee; notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's sake. But I will rend it out of the hand of thy son."—1 Kings 6: 11.

All which came literally to pass. And those who will read Josephus's "Wars with the Jews," will see how wrath came upon the people to the uttermost. They were split into parties, and rent by factions which fought each other with such terrible malignity, that while the axes of the Edomites were ringing on their gates, and Roman battering rams thundering at their walls under Titus Vespasian, in the year of our Lord 70, three parties within the city under John, Shimean and Eleazer fought each other with malignity so diabolical that blood ran ankle deep out of the principal gate! In the famine women took their nursing babes from their breasts and cooked them to satisfy their hunger; and though the mercy of Titus would have spared their magnificent temple, the words of Christ were literally fulfilled, and of that temple not one stone remains upon another to show where it once stood.

And yet at first Solomon, like the clergy of our day, condemned false altars. He would not allow the daughter of Pharaoh, his first political wife, a residence within the capital city, Jerusalem, because the places where the ark of God had been were holy, and her's was an unholy religion. (2 Chron. 8: 11.) We read, "And Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father; only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places." (1 Kings 3: 3.)

Now the National Conference of April 22nd next month, are to have the learning, character and influence of the churches of America to settle for them the question whether the secret altars of our day are identical with those of Solomon. If they do so, our nation will be saved, as the United States of Judea were saved, by the vigorous action of kings like Josiah and Hezekiah,—saved from the curse of God which has "dried up those realms to deserts." The promise then was that the Messiah would come. He did come, and was rejected. But the promise now is that he will come for his final triumph. That he will put all enemies under his feet, deliver up the mediatorial kingdom to the Father, and God shall be all in all. "Now if the fall of the Jews has been the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulness." (Rom. 11: 12.)

O, brethren! may not the time be at hand when even the Jews, scattered and peeled for centuries, will say, in the words of Christ, "Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord." (Luke 13: 35.)

THE BIBLE AND THE WISCONSIN SCHOOLS.

The good people of Wisconsin were surprised last Wednesday by the news that their Supreme Court had decided against the use of the Bible in the public schools.

The case is that of Weiss against the Edgerton School Board. Catholic parents objected because school teachers read the Bible to their pupils, and especially because King James' version was used, parts of which are repugnant to Romanists. The Circuit Court of Rock county rendered a decision in the case which was widely published and hailed by all patriotic people. It overruled the objection on the ground that the Bible was not a sectarian book. This decision is in turn overruled by the State Court, and the victory is thus given to the Catholics and the use of the Bible in Wisconsin schools declared unconstitutional unless the Supreme Court of the United States shall be called upon to decide, and shall reverse the order.

The Wisconsin Court holds that reading from the Bible is instruction; and many passages of it sectarian instruction; as, for instance, the portions teaching the eternal punishment of the wicked, the divinity of Jesus Christ, the binding force of the sacraments, etc. It says that the place where the Bible should be read is a place of worship, and the constitution forbids the use of school houses as places of worship.

The first reply that we would make to this decision is that it is perfectly Masonic, and therefore it is the business of the Cynosure to expose and oppose it with all the power God has given us.

The reasons for this judgment are:

1. The Christian religion is the only religion taught by the Bible; and this is the only true religion.

2. But if the Bible is sectarian, as the court affirms, the Christian religion is sectarian.

3. And if the Christian religion is sectarian we are thrown back upon the religion of nature, which Cain practiced, which is the religion of the Masonic lodge. The dogma of Rob. Morris, Masonic "poet laureate," is iterated and reiterated throughout the whole collection of Masonic writers. It is the consensus of public opinion. He says:

"So broad is the religion of Masonry, and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew, and the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, the Confucian, and the worshiper of deity under every form."

"The religion of Masonry is pure theism," says Mackey. "Masonry can and will educate the pious man to that higher religion—that religion in which all men can agree—which, indeed, embraces the lower religion of creeds and sects," says Steinbrenner in "Origin of Masonry," page 13, 14.

Now the Wisconsin decision puts the Christian religion upon this same basis. It therefore denies virtually that the Christian religion is the true, and is purely Masonic.

But the decisions of courts, the opinions of our ablest jurists and law-givers, and of such fundamental documents as the Ordinance of 1787, which covers the territory of the State of Wisconsin, could be quoted by the page that the religion held to be the true in these United States is the Christian religion, of which the Bible is the foundation. And as the final decision, which establishes the judgment of courts and makes it law, is a matter of opinion, we desire in our next to give at some length the opinions of individuals and of bodies of men which prove that the Christian religion and the Bible are not sectarian, and that therefore the work of this Wisconsin Court cannot stand.

—Secretary Stoddard attended last Thursday the "Bethany Missionary anniversary," at "Park" Congregational church, as near as we can understand his letter. He met workers from all parts of New England and found them opposed to the lodge. He distributed many tracts, and addressed the meeting, as did Bro. Wm. F. Davis, who spoke directly against Freemasonry.

Following this event Mr. McFall was frequently called upon to speak at anti-secret conventions. One of these addresses, before the New York State Convention, was regarded as one of the ablest of its kind and was immediately published in Syracuse for wide distribution. He gave other addresses in New England, and was for some years president of the New England auxiliary association.

As a warm friend and supporter of the National Reform movement, he was always ready to give his best efforts to the promotion of that great and fundamental work. One of his last addresses was that from which we have quoted on another page. During the struggle for free speech in the public places of Boston, and in the cause of the Protestant religion and the American common school against the intrigues of the Jesuits, Mr. McFall rendered brilliant service, although his health was for some time shattered. The admiration for his addresses was not limited to the locality of his home, for in 1882 he was selected to give the annual address on Commencement day at Wheaton College.

Of his abilities as a speaker, a contemporary has said: "Mr. McFall's logical powers were of the highest order. His style was pure, terse and singularly strong; while his wit flashed like a scimitar, and his earnestness glowed like a furnace when he spoke on any theme which appealed strongly to his conviction."

For two years or more his health had been failing, and his congregation gave him a long respite. He wished to take a sea voyage, but his condition seemed so hopeless that vessels in New York refused to receive him as a passenger, lest he should die on the voyage. He recovered, however, so as to go on with his work in the church for a year or more longer. But all too soon for those who knew and loved him came the call to his brave spirit, "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A PERSONAL ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A very large number of letters have been received from the friends of Mrs. Blanchard, whom the beloved Dr. Hasselquist speaks of as removed to the "better country, that is an heavenly," where "her health is and will be forever perfect."

Physicians have enjoined me from writing, on account of my own health, which, through the mercy of God, seems likely to be restored; and since it is impossible for me to write answers, I take this method, therefore, of answering the friends who have written, and of assuring them of the affectionate gratitude I hold in Christ toward them all.

CONFERENCE EXPENSES.—The amount needed for the Chicago Conference for hall rent, printing, advertising, and for the railroad fares and hotel entertainment of speakers, will be about $500. If each send a little, the expense will be easily met, and go far toward making the Conference a success. Sixty-nine contributions have been received, amounting to $238.85; yet needed, $261.15. One hundred more, doing as well as the sixty-nine have done, would give an abundance. As you read this ask the Lord whether you shall pay anything for him towards the expenses of this important meeting.

—A National Conference on the Christian principles of civil government will be held in Lincoln Hall, Washington, D. C., April 1, 2, 3, under the auspices of the National Reform Association. Among the speakers announced are Rev. Henry T. Cheever, of Worcester, Mass., who will discuss "The Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic;" Dr. McAllister, of Pittsburgh, "The Secular Theory of Government;" Secretary Wylie, "The Accountability of Nations;" Secretary Weir, "Christian Politics;" Dr. I. N. Hays, of Allegheny, "The Acknowledgment of Christ in Thanksgiving Proclamations;" Secretary George, "The Kingly Authority of Jesus Christ." The annual meeting of the Association will be held in connection with this Conference.

—The following from the Union Signal helps us to understand that the lodges are not in the business of saving men from the saloon curse:

"A celebrated orator, in speaking of Sacramento, says: 'The last thing you pass by as you enter the cemetery gate, and only sixty feet from it, is a saloon. The first thing which confronts a mother after laying away her boy, a victim of the liquor traffic, as she passes out at the gate, is the legalized business that destroyed him. Inside the cemetery are places set apart for the burial of Odd-fellows, Masons, and members of the Improved Order of Red Men. It seemed to me that what was most needed in wine-cursed California was an improved order of white men.'"

San Francisco has resolved that Chinatown shall be removed into the suburbs. We do not greatly wonder, for the Chinese quarters is not a pleasant part of the city, neither is the Chinaman the best sort of a citizen. But there are a class of people in that and all our other cities who need "removal" far more than the Chinaman. They are the men who make and sell whisky. These men, by the business they pursue, produce poverty, corrupt morals, incite to crime, and cause thousands of deaths. Worst of all, they control our political parties in their own interests. The Chinaman, on the other hand, is industrious, self-supporting, and in the main peaceful and law-abiding. He is a heathen, but that is not altogether his fault. He is generally willing to learn, and by his honest labor makes the country richer rather than poorer. There are a thousand-fold more reasons why the saloon-keeper should get out of our cities than that John Chinaman should go. This San Francisco movement is probably only a bluff. It is well enough understood that no city has a right to legislate against Chinamen any more than against Englishmen or Germans.

By the decisive vote of 37 to 31 this important measure has been rejected by the U. S. Senate. It has previously passed the Senate by considerable majorities, and was only lost in the House by party machinery. Had it reached a vote in the last Congress it would have unquestionably become a law. Since its first introduction, the State provision for schools in the South has considerably increased and national aid has seemed less a pressing necessity. Still we cannot but deplore its failure, for the greatest need of both the colored and poor white people of the South is greater facilities for education. We are far from believing that education is the only and final remedy for the race troubles. So far, the education of the Negro has tended to intensify political animosities, just as the demands of the Abolitionists (both in Egypt and America) tended to tighten the chains of the slave. But one thing is certain: that without the education of the Negro the race problem can never be settled. Our speediest road to unity and peace, both at home and abroad, lies through the universal education of all the people. In view of the enormous sums that are being expended and proposed for pensions, for fortifications, and for a great navy, it seems most unreasonable and cruel that the remedy, which if applied would avoid all occasion for the means of war, should be withheld.

"Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
But given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts."

A STRANGE STATE OF LAWLESSNESS.

GLENWOOD, Ill.

The man of sin is not my theme to-day, though I purpose to say a few words about a sinful man who deliberately fired a revolver at the school-house in Glenwood, Cook county, Ill., on Sabbath, March 16. Three young men were in the yard back of the school-house. One of them had a revolver. He was bantered and dared by one of his comrades to fire at the school-house. At first he demurred, not wishing so to do, but at length yielded to the pressure, and pulled trigger, sending a ball through the glass in a window.

The firing took place after the teachers and scholars had assembled for Sabbath-school, and were awaiting the opening exercises. The ball struck Mrs. Luella Worrell on the side of the head near the left ear, making a flesh wound which proved not to be very serious, as the force of the ball was nearly spent. As soon as this fact was ascertained, her husband rushed into the yard and went for the offender and marched him to his home to hold him until he could be taken to Bloom (the next town) and given over to the guardian of the law. It was claimed by a number of persons that it was illegal to hold the young man, who must be arrested by a warrant. Therefore he was allowed to go free.

On Monday J. R. Worrell went to Bloom to have warrants issued. The warrants were not issued by the circumlocution office, but the applicant was advised to go to Chicago, and have the matter prosecuted. He did so, but with no better success, and so the wrong-doers are at large. And so, as we have no justice of the peace, no constable and no lock-up in our village, we are left to the tender mercies of every ruffian who may think best to make a school-house a target, and all that is left us is to be glad that things are no worse than they are. BENJ. F. WORRELL.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1890.

An interesting question to be decided is who, which, or what will purchase the tract of land known as the battlefield of Valley Forge, now owned by a Philadelphia lady. It is for sale, and there is no lack of proposed purchasers for this historic, revolutionary spot. A bill has just been presented to Congress for its purchase by the Government. A summer hotel syndicate wants it, and a New York syndicate of brewers wants it. The secret order known as the Patriotic Sons of America want to preserve it from becoming the property of liquor dealers, and the W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, rather than see it given up to the manufacture of liquor bearing a Valley Forge trade mark, are raising money to buy it. The tract consists of 192 acres, and is valued at $60,000. It comprises the defense line of the great camp, and is said to be the only place in the country where the original fortifications remain. The brewery pool, which wants to buy it, is willing to pay more for it, it seems, than any one else, but the owner has just declared that she would prefer to sell it to the Government at a low rate, and hence the bill just introduced in Congress.

There is also a bill before Congress for the establishment of an asylum for inebriates here in the District of Columbia. Recently a citizens' mass meeting was held to urge Congress to act in this matter. It was attended by merchants, doctors, lawyers, and ministers of the Gospel, and many good things were said on the subject of temperance.

Judge Cox opened the meeting by saying, while it could not be called a temperance movement, it was an attempt to afford some relief from the groveling effects of intemperance. He considered intemperance a disease. If insanity was a disease of the brain, a confirmed drunkard was insane. He should be so treated, and removed from the temptation long enough to effect a cure. He did not think intemperance was a proper matter for discipline. There were many who used stimulants in a small way through years of a useful and honorable career, to whom came a time when excess was necessary. The garland of roses became manacles, the friend who had been welcomed became an enemy, and no exertion could save him from downfall. For such a man anger should give way to pity.

A distinguished physician also contended that people should have more sympathy for fallen souls. After the habit got hold, it was a disease. He said if an asylum is a mere sobering-off place, where men may recuperate for another drink, it is not of the slightest value. "We have tried jails and workhouses here;" he continued, "now let us try a home, giving it sufficient power to be of benefit, with broad fields surrounding it, outdoor work, compulsory labor, regular mental and physical occupation." Another said that people are beginning to understand that "children's teeth are set on edge because their parents ate grapes." Intemperance was a disease, hereditary or otherwise.

The governor of the Soldiers' Home, near this city, who has had much experience with inebriates, about three-fourths of the inmates of this institution being so, said you might as well punish any other class of deeds committed by insane men without malice aforethought. Punishment led to no reform, but he thought through such a humane institution as is proposed, at least one-third of the cases could be cured and restored to lines of usefulness.

THE HOME.

I CLIMB TO REST.

Still must I climb if I would rest,
The bird soars upward to his nest;
The young leaf, on the tree-top high,
Cradles itself within the sky.

The streams that seem to hasten down,
Return in clouds the hills to crown;
The plant arises from her root,
To rock aloft her flower and fruit.

I cannot in the valley stay;
The great horizons stretch away;
The very cliffs that wall me round
Are ladders unto higher ground.

To work, to rest,—for each a time;
I toil, but I must also climb.
What soul was ever quite at ease,
Shut in by earthly boundaries?

I am not glad till I have known
Life that can lift me from my own.
A loftier level must be won,
A mightier strength to lean upon.

And heaven draws near as I ascend;
The breeze invites, the stars befriend,
All things are beckoning to the best;
I climb to Thee, my God, for rest.

LET PARENTS REMEMBER.

My dinner table was laid for invited guests, and everything was ready for them to be summoned into the dining-room. I gave a parting glance at my well-arranged table, and felt proud and pleased. I knew, too, that the dinner was well cooked, and the feelings of satisfaction which possessed my soul more than compensated me for the extra labor and care I had had in preparing it. I had seated my little girl, five years old, fresh and sweet in her clean starched dress, in her high chair, and was about to turn to go into the parlor to call them to dinner, when a sudden cry from her made me look back. She had, by some terrible unlucky accident, overturned a tureen of gravy, and the greasy liquid was rapidly spreading itself over the table. My temper rose in a twinkling, and an angry expression rose to my lips. I was overwrought with work and excitement, for a dinner party was not a common occurrence in our quiet household, and our guests were those of whom, to tell the truth, I stood somewhat in awe. A minute before everything was so auspicious, and now, what should I do! It seemed a drop too much for my tired nerves—many drops too much for my table cloth. I was about to jerk my child down angrily from the table, when a blessed influence held me. I caught the expression on her face. Such a sorry, frightened, appealing look I never saw, and suddenly a picture of the past came, and stood out vividly before my mind's eye. My child's face revealed feelings which I had experienced twenty years before.

I saw myself a little nervous girl, about eight years old, in the happy home of my childhood. It was a stormy afternoon in winter. It was when coal-oil lamps were first introduced, and father had bought a very handsome one. The snow had drifted against the kitchen windows, so, although it was not yet night, the lamp was lighted. Mother was sick in bed, upstairs, and we children were gathered in the kitchen, to keep the noise and confusion away from her. I was feeling very important, helping to get supper; at any rate, I imagined I was helping, and in my officiousness I seized the lamp and went down to the cellar for some butter. I tried to set it on the hanging shelf, but, alas! I didn't give it room enough, and down it fell on the cemented floor.

I never shall forget the shock it gave me. I seemed almost paralyzed. I didn't care to go up stairs, and I was afraid to stay down there, and to make it worse, I heard father's voice in the kitchen. He had cautioned us all, again and again, to be careful of that lamp, and now, there it lay, smashed to pieces! But his voice seemed to give me the impetus I needed to go up, and meet the scolding or whipping, or both, which I felt sure awaited me, and which I really felt that I deserved. So I crept up the dark stairway, and as I entered the kitchen I met father with such a stern look on his face that I was frightened. I saw there was no need to tell him what had happened. He had heard the crash, and if he hadn't, I guess my face would have told him the story. The children stood silently around, waiting to see what father would do, and I saw by their faces that they were horror-struck, and that lamp had been the subject of too much talk and wonder to be smashed without creating a sensation.

As for me, I felt so frightened, so confused and sorry, that I couldn't speak. But upon glancing again at father I saw the angry look die out of his eyes, and one of tenderest pity take its place. I doubt not that he saw the same look on my face then which I saw in my child's face to-day. In a minute he had lifted me in his arms, and was hugging me close to his breast. Then he whispered, oh, so kindly, I can hear his voice now:

"Never mind, little daughter, we all know 'twas an accident, but I hope you will take the small lamp when you go down to the cellar again."

Oh, what a revulsion of feeling I experienced! It was such a surprise to me that I was suddenly overwhelmed with feelings of love and gratitude, and burying my face in his whiskers, I sobbed as if my heart was breaking. No punishment could have affected me half so much, and nothing can ever efface the memory of it from my mind.

How I loved my father to-day, as the sight of my own little girl's face brought all so freshly before me. Will she love me as dearly, I wonder, twenty years or more from now, because, moved by the God-given impulse which stirred my father's heart in that long-ago time, I was able to press the little frightened thing to my heart and tell her kindly that I knew she didn't mean to spill the gravy, and that I knew she would be more careful another time! Will she be helped by it when she is a mother, as I have been helped to-day? Oh, how impossible for parents to estimate the effect of these seemingly little events!

If it had taken as long for this to pass through my mind as it does for me to tell it, my dinner would surely have been cold, and my guests tired of waiting. But it was all done in a twinkling, and buoyed up by a new and sudden strength, I quickly wiped off the soiled cloth, spread a thickly-folded clean one over the place, and called my company to dinner. Strange to say, the awe I had been feeling for my guests was gone. I felt easy and tranquil, and such a remarkable spirit of happiness and sociality prevailed, and everything passed off so smoothly, that I couldn't help feeling as if unseen hands and an unseen presence had helped me through it all.—Sel.

WHAT A HYMN DID.

A touching little incident occurred not long ago in the woman's prison on Blackwell's Island. It happened at a Sabbath afternoon service in the chapel of the prison. The first part of the service was a sermon. It was short and simple and full of earnest feeling. But it seemed to fall like good seed upon the stoniest ground. The hundreds of poor wretched creatures ranged before the preacher apparently lost none of the hard, desperate look that sin and despair had stamped upon their features. They sat bolt upright, seemingly hearing nothing of what was going on before them. After the sermon, two lady visitors present asked the privilege of singing a few hymns. They began with that sweetest of spiritual songs, "Jesus, lover of my soul," which they sang with much expression. "Very soon," said one who was present, "I noticed the faces beginning to soften. And in a moment's time the heads began to go down, and before the verse was finished they were sobbing aloud in all parts of the room." Rev. S. Howland conducted a song service in Tompkins' Square, New York, every Sabbath afternoon last summer. The power of Christian song has never been more strikingly illustrated than in that series of services. Thousands of men and women, many of them among the worst characters in the city, were brought together Sabbath after Sabbath, to listen to the singing of hymns. Evidence is not wanting that the saving truths of the blessed Gospel were in this manner, on the wings of sweet music, carried home to many hearts. It would have been impossible, such is the general character of the neighborhood, to have held any other kind of religious service in Tompkins' Square. They would not listen to sermons, but they could not resist the influence of sweet singing.

MRS. CRAIK AS A HOME-MAKER.

Few writers have depicted home-life more tenderly and beautifully than has Dinah Mulock Craik, the beloved author of "John Halifax." It is a pleasure to her admirers to know that her own home life was as ideally perfect as any which she has described in her books. In 1865 she was married to George Lillie Craik, the younger, a member of the publishing house of Mac Millan & Co. The home they built for themselves is said to have been one of the most charming about London, across "the lovely Kentish meadows" at Shortlands, ten miles southeast of London. Outside the house toward the garden was a little recess called "Dorothy's Parlor," where Mrs. Craik was fond of taking her work or her writing on a summer's day. It was named for the little daughter they had adopted years before, and who was the sunshine of the house up to the time of her foster mother's death. Within the recess was the Latin motto "Deus haec otia fecit" (God made this rest), which Mrs. Craik once said she selected as the motto she would wish to build into a home of her own, should it ever be given to her to make one. In the house there was one charming room that served for library, music room and parlor, filled with books and choice pictures, but chiefly beautiful because of the presence of its mistress, as she brought her work basket out for a quiet talk with her friends. Over the mantel of the dining-room was the motto, "East or West, Home is Best," which pleasantly gave the spirit in which Mrs. Craik lived in her home, for she used to say that home-keeping was more to her than story-writing, and she often got only one hour a week for her pen.—Christian Standard.

The New York Advocate utters this needed note of warning, which we would sound in the ears of all our Evangelical parents also: "Parents are sometimes ignorant of the habits and practices of their own children, and if one should tell them the facts in the case they would be offended. A traveling secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association recently made an address in an Oregon town, in which he drew a picture of the haunts of young men in that place. A gentleman in the audience challenged him to the proof of his statements. The secretary offered to show him that what he had said was literally true, and at the close of the meeting the two started together on an exploring expedition. The first place they entered was a gambling den, and when with considerable effort they had forced their way in, the skeptical gentleman was horror-struck to find himself face to face with his own son. Thousands of young men are spending their nights in such places, while their parents are fondly dreaming that there is no danger. It is possible to exercise too rigid a surveillance over young people; but when a young man once abuses the confidence of his parents, and visits places where he knows it would grieve them to have him go, he is on the high road to ruin."

WRITE TO THEM.

"Yes," Tom said to me that morning while he stood in the hall, surrounded by trunks and boxes, and tried to look manly and don't-care as he tightened the straps of his valise, "yes, you can say what you choose; but it's hard lines on a fellow to be packed off this way to school for three or four years at a time, and I'm sick of it!"

"But, Tom dear," I reasoned, with what he calls my "big-sister tone," "you must have an education, you know, and you can't study nearly so well at home. Besides, it isn't very long before vacation."

Tom was struggling into his overcoat, and the exertion was probably what made his voice so suspiciously husky, as he said impatiently: "That isn't it. I don't mind the going away from home so much, for there are some jolly fellows up at school, and we have gay doings sometimes; but then, you see, when I think of you all here, and remember that I'm the only one away, it makes me lonesome in my throat."

When Tom was a baby, and tried to tell mother what homesickness was like, he had called it being "lonesome in his throat," and the use of the childish expression made me feel that big Tom was, after all, at heart, my little brother still.

Then mother came into the room, and put her arms around her tall son's neck. Tom gave her a bear hug, and then, half ashamed of the honest tears in his eyes, he broke out: "Look here, you people, it wouldn't be half so hard if you'd write to a fellow oftener. Some fellows' mothers write every day. Billy Lawrence gets a letter from his mother every morning regularly. I wish you'd do that."

"But, Tom," expostulated the little mother, diligently plying a wisk over her boy's broad back, "how can I write a letter every day? I haven't very much time, with a house like this, and, more than that, I have three little children, to say nothing of my big ones, and my sewing and church work and poor people, and calling and shopping. I try to write to you every week, and I know you're happy and well cared for. Remember, dear boy, that your mother isn't like Mrs. Lawrence, and has four sons instead of one. Besides, Tom, what would I find to say? You know that I hate to write letters anyway, and nothing ever happens here that can't be saved for the weekly letter."

"Well, I know, mamma," Tom answered, "but Alice and Belle and Kate don't write to me either, more than once a month; and father never does, except to send me a check. Not that I am complaining about the check. Don't think it; but sometimes a letter with it would taste awfully good. I know there isn't very much to say. Billy Lawrence's mother never says much except just 'I love you, and how are you getting on?'"

"All right, Tom, dear," said his mother as she gave him a final kiss, "we'll try to do better, and Alice and I will write to you as often as we can, even if we don't say anything except 'We love you, and how are you getting on?'"

So Tom departed, and when the mending-basket and I joined forces, a little later, we had time to think it over, and this was the conclusion we came to. Tom was right; it isn't fair to the boys that they should have so few home letters. Of course, I argued, we are busy. Here the mending-basket seemed to heave a great sigh of assent. But, after all, there isn't any love in the world like home love, and that is made up, in a great measure, of mother and sister love; and our boys are far too precious to us for them to be allowed to slip away, and lose the close home interest that makes them "think back" to the mothers and sisters left behind.

And a boy's school life is his forming time—his growing time. He makes new friends, and touches life in new ways, and, when the school days are merged into the college days, we do not want to feel that we are losing the brothers, that they are turning their lives into channels which run far away from the home river.

So we decided, the mending-basket and I, that Tom must have more letters. They need not be long ones, but just little reminders to bring his heart home often, and keep him safe by love. Boys are tender-hearted, many of them, and often impulsive and easily led. Why, then, should the tiny threads of influence which surround the boy, and are to weave the web of the man's destiny, be held by the careless or indifferent hands of school acquaintances, when mother and sister can hold them so tenderly and lovingly that the boy will feel them growing stronger each year?

Tom's home letters were much more frequent after this. Often, on busy days, it seemed all but impossible to find a moment for writing, and sometimes the letters only contained this: "Dear Tom, we love you, and how are you getting on?" Of course he rather objected to this treatment, but, after all, when we unpacked his trunk, we found twelve or fourteen little notes carefully tied up, and none of them containing anything but these few words.

This is the way we succeeded in managing matters. There was no scramble or hurry for envelope or stamps, for a package of stamped envelopes, all directed, occupied a special pigeon-hole of the library desk, and in each was a blank sheet of letter-paper. This was Belle's idea. Then we took turns; first mother did it for a week, then each of the sisters, and the result was that Tom had a letter from some one at home every day, even if it were but a very few words.

And he liked it, and told it among the "fellows," and other sisters are trying it too. For it is a good plan, sisters of boys who are away at school, beginning their new lives without you. You, too, will find it so, and many a warm, loving thought of his sister will find its way into the heart of your Tom, and make it truer and better for all the years that are to come, if sometimes you will pause in your own happy, busy lives to say, "Dear Tom, I love you, and how are you getting on?"—Ex.

WITHOUT HIM YOU CAN DO NOTHING.

A little boy once said: "How hard it is to do right! I've tried and tried, and there's no use trying any longer."

But one day, after reading his Bible, he said: "Why, I've been trying to change myself all the time, and here I read that only God can change me. I can no more change my heart than a colored man can make himself white. How foolish I have been not to ask him!"

And he was right. Are you trying to change your own heart? You can never do it. It will get worse and worse until you ask Jesus to give you a new heart.

The first point of wisdom is to discern that which is false; the second, to know that which is true.—Lactantius.

TEMPERANCE.

GENERAL GRANT REFUSED WINE.

Let us take a few facts: When traveling in India he was surrounded with social customs, to disregard which required the strongest will and the firmest purpose. Not a few foreign residents in the East are hard drinkers. There were not hours enough in the day for Grant to accept the invitations he received. To be courteous, he not infrequently accepted invitations to half a dozen tiffins on the same day, at each one of which he would remain a few moments, until the last one had been reached. At all these gatherings, wine and liquors were freely used. He became so thoroughly disgusted with the custom that, on his return to his hotel, he said to his wife, "Julia, I do not intend to take another glass of wine to please anybody." That was in 1878, and from that time forward to Mount McGregor, his temperance habits were above suspicion.

From Calcutta he went to Burmah. The reception committee furnished large baskets of champagne and liquors. These were subject to Grant's orders. To the disappointment and disgust of the committee, the baskets were not opened. Surprise was expressed; but Grant simply said, "Gentlemen, I do not wish anything to drink," and the baskets were returned unopened to Calcutta. I received accounts of this incident from General Litchfield, late Consul-General to India, and from Mrs. Grant.

After Grant reached California, his old friends were the witnesses of this new proof of his personal decision. While in the city of Mexico, his enthusiastic admirers invited him to what is called "a wine dinner." Bishop Harris was present, and he informed me that General Grant deliberately turned his glasses upside down.—Rev. Dr. John P. Newman in the American Magazine.

THE BEER PITCHER.

A great deal, says the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette, was heard about "working the growler" during the hearing of the applications for liquor licenses before Judge White last spring. One of the greatest evils connected with the retail business is the facility afforded for carrying beer into the homes of the middle or lower classes, and the means usually employed is a pitcher or bucket in the hands of a child of tender years. The evil has grown to such large proportions in these two cities that the court could not fail to take cognizance of it, and to make it a rule not to license any dealer who would sell to that class of customers. The official organ of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association has joined in the crusade against the beer pitcher as a terribly demoralizing agency. Says the Wine and Spirit Review:

The overdone beer business in what is popularly called "working the growler" is the cause of the ruin of many homes. It makes sots of the women of the lower grades of life. The beer pitcher is kept going from morning until night, and the result is an alarming increase of intemperance. No one knows this better than our saloon-keepers, and it is especially gratifying and a hopeful sign of improvement in the retail trade that there are men among our saloon-keepers who have the courage to acknowledge this openly. At the last meeting of the Eighteenth Precinct Liquor-Dealers' Association, of which Mr. William Padian is president, Mr. Riley arose and said: "I know that the increase of intemperance, of which many complain, is due more to an excessive use of malt liquors than spirits, especially by women." This statement openly made, which went uncontradicted in a society of retail liquor dealers, should be proclaimed from the housetops. It is the truth.

DRINK IN IRELAND.

Why will so many, who claim to be friends of Ireland, keep studiously out of sight the truth that drunkenness and the drink traffic have much to do with the present misery of Ireland? Drunkenness has wrecked more homes—once happy—than ever fell beneath the crowbar brigade in the worst days of the eviction; it has filled more graves and made more widows and orphans than did the famine; it has broken more hearts, blighted more hopes and rent asunder family ties more recklessly than the forced exile to which their misery has condemnad emigrants.

The whole land is suffering from the direct or indirect power of the drink trade. In times of depression only one interest still prospers—its profits may be slightly lessened, but its gains are always large and safe—that is, the great trade in drink, which enriches half a million of brewers, distillers and publicans, with the trades depending on them, and wrecks millions of men, women and children. This one traffic more than any other destroys the domestic life of the people.—Cardinal Manning.

One would think that Ireland had troubles enough without those that directly flow from the intoxicating cup, but it is evident she has her full share of these. The Recorder of Dublin, in disposing of certain applications for new drink licenses in that city about two months ago, uttered these strong remarks on the evils bred by the licensing system: "I have been for a whole week trying cases such as no Christian judge ought to have to try—cases of outrage and violence in the city, every one of which originated in public houses. The drinking system of Dublin is responsible for three sentences of penal servitude, and seven heavy sentences of imprisonment which I had to impose, varying from twelve to twenty-four calendar months. I marked the evidence in every single case, and every one of them began in the public house. It is the drink system, and drink alone, that leads to all this crime and misery and sorrow. Yesterday I went through a mile and three-quarters of miserable, wretched streets, manifesting on every side the penury and wretchedness of the unfortunate people who lived in them. The only bright spots were the public houses, which, brilliantly lighted up, reflected and contrasted with the surrounding misery. I hate this magnificence. I look upon it with horror. I know it but too well. As each case of crime and violence comes before me, the same wretched story is told—the Drink Demon is as necessary a part of every case as the police or myself."—Messiah's Herald.

Most States that license rum-sellers make a farce of requiring that those who take out licenses shall be men of good moral character. We do not know whether a man of good moral character ever took out one, but it is certain that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand are a sorry set. Take the whisky-sellers in the city of New York, for example, and see what a refined and moral set have been provided, as required by law. Of the whole number in the city 2,004 have served their time in different State prisons; 2,645 have been confined in county prisons, and 1,769 have been "cooled off" in the station house, leaving only 1,616 out of the 8,034 who have thus far managed to successfully cloak their deviltry from the police. Of the whole number over 502 are American. The number of Germans is 2,179; of Irishmen, 3,041; of Negroes there are 265.

The policemen of England and Wales, if brought together, would form a great army. They number 37,296. Nine-tenths of this army could be discharged if the sale of liquors were prohibited,

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON I.—Second Quarter.—April 6.

SUBJECT.—Christ's Law of Love.—Luke 6: 27-38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6: 31.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Luke 5: 27-39. T.—Luke 6: 1-26. W.—Luke 6: 27-49. T.—Matt. 5: 1-20. F.—Matt. 5: 21-48. S.—Matt. 6: 1-34. S.—Matt. 7: 1-29.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The law of love. Vs. 27-30. An unrenowned man can abstain from injuring his enemies, but he will never truly love them unless he has the Spirit of Christ. To give love for hate, blessing for cursing, is utterly opposed to the spirit of the world, as well as to every false system of which the god of this world is the chief. Truth may be distinguished from falsehood by the way she treats those who oppose her. Paganism has always persecuted Christianity, but true Christianity never persecutes in return. So every system which emanates from paganism is marked with the same bitter, malignant spirit. The long chapter of Masonic outrages,—of faithful men of God, ostracized, abused and boycotted by the lodge for their testimony against it, is full as good proof of its heathen origin as even the testimony of its own writers. He that is "born after the flesh" will always continue to persecute "him that is born after the Spirit." The command does not mean a tame submitting in all cases to injustice and wrong. Such a course would be opposed to the general good, nor is it in any true sense love to an enemy to allow him to go on doing us malicious injury unrebuked. The example of Christ himself and of his apostles shows that it is the spirit and not the literal letter of these commands which is to be obeyed. See John 18: 22, 23, Acts 16: 37.

2. The Christian's only true standard. Vs. 31-38. Christ tells us first what charity is not. It is not to do good with the expectation that in some way we shall get the equivalent back again. This is the line on which all the so-called "good deeds" of the lodge are done. It takes in only the healthy and strong, the very class who will not be likely to need charity; and after paying out for the relief of its needy members only about a third of what has been paid in, it poses before the world as "a purely benevolent institution." At the best the lodge only does good on the principle condemned by our Saviour; and if it were honest enough to pay out to its members the full equivalent of what they pay in, it would still be simply business and nothing more. But charity is not business. It is not machinery nor red tape. It is something which is not of this world but belongs entirely to the other. It is not governed by worldly maxims, nor measured by any human standard whatever. But it has a standard nevertheless, which Christ tells us is nothing short of Infinite Perfection. We are to be merciful even as our heavenly Father is merciful. The boldness, the simple grandeur of this assertion alone would be sufficient to show the vast difference between Christ and all other religious teachers. All salvation by works is based on the idea that the human soul if properly trained and developed contains within itself a perfect standard, when all humanity can do at its noblest and highest is simply to reflect such a standard; for it is only in the character of our heavenly Father that absolute perfection is to be found. Our Saviour evidently means that no Christian should aim at anything less than this, and if he honestly does his best, though he may fall infinitely short of attainment, he will approach much nearer the mark than if he aimed lower. Emerson's saying, so much quoted, "Hitch your wagon to a star," is based on this idea. The principle is not peculiar to Christianity. It has not only been at the bottom of every great achievement in art, but of all real success in life. The man who hid his talent in the earth is the type of the slovenly, slipshod Christian who makes his inability to attain fully to the standard before him an excuse for not striving at all. To "conform to the law of God" is to bring ourselves under the dominion of the same laws of righteousness and truth which govern the Eternal Being. This is to be in that state of holiness or sanctification, which Jesus in this lesson sets before us as the only true goal of the Christian life. It is to have God's image restored in us, however wavering and broken may be the reflection.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

WHAT DO YE MORE THAN OTHERS?—I. Disciples have to do more than others. 1. Maintain the Christian life. 2. Extend the cause of Christ. II. They are able to do more than others. 1. They are in alliance with God. 2. They have more light and knowledge. 3. They have more moral power. III. More expected of them than of others. 1. By their Saviour. 2. By the world. 3. By their own consciences.—Condensed from the None-such Professor.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FROM PELOUBET.

I. If the laws of heaven were obeyed on earth, earth would become like heaven.
II. The only power that can overcome evil is good, Rom. 12: 19-21.
III. To fight evil with evil makes two evils instead of one, and cures none.
IV. The desire of the Christian is always to give, to help, to lend, to make others happy.
V. It is easy to love those who love us, or to think we do. The proof of love is to love where it is hard to love; to love enemies, the unthankful, the unworthy.
VI. "All hopes of heaven which do not lead us to strive habitually to do to others as we would that they should do to us will fail us at giving up of the ghost."
VII. God's children must be like him. There is no other proof that we are his children.
VIII. Children of God are heirs of his nature, his love, his care, his joy, his home.
IX. God gives many things to all alike, but men do not use them alike; they can raise thistles or wheat, thorns or flowers, with his rain, and do deeds of love or hate in his sunshine.
X. Christians ought to do more than others. 1. They have received more. 2. They profess more. 3. They expect more. 4. They are more.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A very hopeful revival at Melrose, Ill., a short distance west of Chicago, has been conducted by the Free Methodist pastor, Rev. Mr. Kendrick, who was assisted by Rev. Mr. Ferries, of this city, and Rev. J. J. Hales, of Crystal Lake. Twenty-five are hopefully converted.

—Three hundred and fifteen days in the year Mrs. Judge Williams, of Eugene, Oregon, corner Seventeenth and C streets, uses her elegant parlor for the honor of the name of Christ every afternoon in the year except Saturdays. She gives Bible readings and lectures. The Judge is ex-United States Attorney-General. She became inspired for this work about three years ago. The Lord healed her body and saved her soul from her fashionable, worldly life, and she gave all her energies to his work, visiting the sick and winning souls. The Judge has been converted, and she has been successful in the conversion of infidels. God bless the work.—Fire and Hammer.

—The number of Lutheran Synods in America was recently increased by the organization of the first Finnish Synod in the country, Snomi Synoden. The meeting was held at Houghton, Mich., and on this occasion the new Finnish Lutheran church at Hancock, Mich., was dedicated. Finnish emigrants are coming to our shores in great numbers, and like their neighbors, the Scandinavians, they are all of our faith.

—Prof. Lansing, of the Reformed Theological Seminary, New Brunswick, N. J., who is a fine Arabic scholar, has offered to associate himself with three of the students in that seminary, for the purpose of doing missionary work in some Arabic-speaking country.

—Mr. Graham Wilmot-Brooke, whose attempts to establish an independent mission in the Soudan are well known, has now become fully connected with the Church Missionary Society, which has assumed the responsibility for the mission under the name of the Upper Niger and Soudan Mission. Three gentlemen have been associated with Mr. Brooke, who will also be accompanied by his wife. The mission is to be supported by a special fund, made up of voluntary offerings for the mission. All the missionaries will adopt the dress of Mohammedans of the Soudan, and will not avail themselves of their rights as British subjects, but will go among the people, conforming to their manner of living as closely as possible. There are no Christian missionaries yet in the Soudan, and this attempt to reach the far interior will be watched with great interest. The people are intelligent, well-clothed, and partly civilized; the climate is healthful, transportation up the Niger is easy; and the prospects for success are exceptionally favorable, if the prejudices of the Mohammedans can be overcome.

—The Moravians have projected a mission on the Victoria Nyanza, but have been unable to establish it by the lack of funds. Just before the opening of their General Synod this year news was brought that a legacy of between $25,000 and $30,000 had fallen to the church, and it is probable that the work will speedily be carried forward, as the men are ready.

—One-fourth of the Congregational pulpits of Vermont are without permanent supply; one-half of the population is unchurched.

—Rev. Duncan J. McMillan, D.D., president of the College of Montana, has been elected third secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions.

—One hundred and ten thousand dollars have been appropriated by the Book Committee from the proceeds of the Book Concerns to the relief of superannuated ministers, widows and orphans of the Methodist Church for the current year.

—The Presbyterians of Tennessee have petitioned the Legislature protesting against the introduction into the schools of the State of a State history written by the Hon. James Phelan. They assert that in his chapter on "Churches" he had sadly misrepresented the Presbyterian church, and the reason for the origin of the Cumberland Presbyterians. Moreover, he shows too strong Methodist proclivities.

—The ninth national convention of the United Societies of Christian Endeavor is to be held in St. Louis this year. From 5,000 to 8,000 delegates are expected to be in attendance. The dates fixed for the convention are June 12, 13, 14 and 15.

—The Beacon Hill Church, of Boston, has decided to dispose of its property. Dr. Cullis has secured five lots of land, at a cost of $16,020, on Huntington avenue, on which will be erected a new church edifice and parsonage and a business house. Negotiations have also been concluded by Dr. Cullis for the purchase of the George W. Hollis estate at Wellesley Hills, formerly known as the Scudder estate, for $75,000.

—Rev. James Pettie writes from Okayama, Japan: "By far the greatest faith enterprise in this part of Japan is the Okayama Orphan Asylum, opened two years ago by Mr. Ishii, a medical student, and his excellent wife, in humble imitation of the great George Muller. It has grown steadily from three orphans to fifty-five. Its home now is in a Buddhist temple. Mr. Ishii is one of the purest, strongest spiritual characters I ever knew in any land. He depends entirely upon God. His faith is something marvelous. He has beggared himself for these little waifs, and devoted his life to this one noble cause. The home has had some remarkable experiences in the line of answers to prayer, and those children are just as sure as Mr. Ishii himself that God will not let them starve. This institution has no debt. It spends only what it receives, and that most wisely. Twenty dollars annually will support a child under the best influences. This asylum, though positively Christian, is wholly unsectarian. It is supported by voluntary gifts. There is a movement on foot to buy the Buddhist temple for the asylum. Two hundred dollars will do it. Subscriptions to this cause may be sent to Horace Pettie, Esq., Manchester, New Hampshire."

—When the Presbyterian missionaries in India, whose salaries were $1,050 a year each, heard in 1873 that the salaries of their secretaries in New York were raised from $3,000 to $5,000, they petitioned their Board for an increase in their own salaries. The petition was refused, whereupon some of them resigned. "And," said the Missionary Review fourteen years afterward, "the missions have been barren of spiritual results ever since."

—Arnot says: The object I had in going to Africa to establish a station in a healthy part of the interior, was accomplished after seven years. Though I traveled without a white or even a black companion, and with no body guard or show of arms, I never received any ill-treatment. Guns were carried by some of the party for hunting purposes, but I was generally careful to keep them out of sight during the day, a fact which the natives were not slow to notice. Repeatedly they expressed their joy and satisfaction at the way I had treated them by coming amongst them with open hands. Difficulties, of course, arose from time to time by the way. My porters sometimes got me into trouble, and mistakes were often made by myself; but every difficult case that arose I referred to their own native tribunals, demanding justice from them; and, without a single exception, I received nothing but just and fair treatment. As the result of seven years' experience, I would say that you can go anywhere in Africa, if you only go in peace and love. I pray that God may thrust forth many more laborers into poor, dark Africa.

—Marshall Booth, in reviewing his Salvation Army forces at Chicago, said that within twelve years 1,000,000 men and women have been rescued from the slums and transformed into self-supporting, sober, Christian citizens by its work. He is prepared to establish at once in London ten more Rescue Homes for 300 girls (which will enable the Army, by the help of God, to rescue at least another 1,000 a year), and also to establish ten food and shelter depots, six for women and children only, and four for men, with a capacity for 1,000 beds per night for women, 500 for men, and 200,000 meals per week, or at the rate of 547,500 beds and 10,400,000 meals per annum. He appeals for $75,000 to meet the expense of fitting up and furnishing these twenty buildings.—Miss. Review.

—It has been determined to open in Springfield, Mass., an industrial and technological school in connection with the School for Christian Workers, of which Rev. David A. Reed is the head. The object of the new school will be the training of manual school-teachers, skilled artisans, and mechanical missionaries. Sufficient subscriptions toward a fund of $100,000 have been secured to erect a new building, for which plans have already been accepted. Religious teaching, which will be a prominent feature in the course of study, will be conducted by the Rev. D. A. Reed, who has resigned his pastorate of Hope Church to give his entire attention to the new work.

—The first Young Men's Christian Association in the United States Army has recently been established at Fortress Monroe, Va. Although only two months old it now has eighty members. Books and papers for the library would be gratefully received at the office of the depot quartermaster, No. 25 Whitehall street, this city, and will be forwarded to Fortress Monroe.

LODGE NOTES.

A new paper, devoted to the interests of the Patriarchal Circle, will soon be issued in this city.

The Grand Commander of Illinois Knights Templar, George M. Moulton, has issued his call for the observance of Easter and Ascension Day.

Sheriff Matson, of Chicago, had his flashy $250 diamond pin nipped from his shirt-bosom while attending the G. A. R. Encampment at Quincy, last week.

During 1889 153 new sections of Knights of Pythias were organized, 3,300 new members were admitted, a record unequalled in any previous year since its organization.

At the meeting of the G. A. R. Encampment of Indiana, at Indianapolis, Wednesday, resolutions were passed urging Congress to have a service pension law at the present session.

A charter list of 225, entirely of A., F. and A. Masons, many of whom hold eminent degrees, have completed the formation of Hobomok Tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men in Boston.

John A. O'Neill, Master Workman of the National Operative Potters' Association, which has a membership of 8,000, has tendered his resignation, owing to dissatisfaction expressed with his work.

A number of women met at the residence of Judge John S. Harvey, Centralia, and organized a branch of the F. M. B. A., to be known as the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association Ladies' Guild. They have sixteen charter members. A committee was appointed to draft declarations of principles, and issue an appeal to the farmers' wives and daughters of Illinois to organize thoroughly and assist their husbands and sons in the battle for their rights. The next meeting will be held April 4.

A Canton, Ohio, special says that the expulsion of District Delegate O'Malley, of Canton, from the Atlanta Knights of Labor Convention has borne fruit. Canton Local Assembly of D. A., No. 93, which Mr. O'Malley represents, has withdrawn from the order, and returned its charter to District Secretary Lewis, to be forwarded to the general headquarters. Delegate O'Malley said to-day this was the first assembly of seven organized in Canton, and it is the last one to go. It leaves that city without K. of L. organization.

The members of Tensing Council, No. 59, Order of Chosen Friends, decided to have a good time yesterday, says a late Inter Ocean, and they had it. They invited a large number of their friends and their friends' friends, and gave them about twelve consecutive hours of fun and enjoyment. In order to make sure of having a good time these Chosen Friends began at 3 o'clock in the afternoon with a musical program. Supper was in order and remained in order from 7 till 8 o'clock. The festivities of the evening were of a two-fold nature, and consisted of frequent vile and frothy potations from the bar-room and the long German waltz. It was morning before the Chosen Friends dispersed.

IN BRIEF.

Jonathan Young Scammon, the founder of the Chicago Inter Ocean, died at his home in Hyde Park, last week, aged 78 years.

A fire occurred last Monday in the Bowen-Merrill book-store in Indianapolis. While a number of firemen were on the roof the walls fell in, and they were buried in the debris. Ten were taken out dead and sixteen were injured, several fatally.

The British East Africa Company is about to start a railroad which is expected ultimately to connect Victoria Nyanza with the sea. The company has sent two caravans of a thousand people into the interior for purposes of exploration. If the church were half as enterprising as commerce, the world would soon be converted to Christ.

The widows of the victims of the Nottingham mine disaster, by which eight men were killed by an explosion of gas, about six weeks ago, have entered suits in Wilkesbarre, Pa., against the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, for damages aggregating $100,000. They claim that the accident was due to criminal negligence on the part of the company in not providing sufficient ventilation to prevent the accumulation of gas in the mine.

In Gasconade county, Missouri, with fifty-four school districts, one-half of the public schools are taught in the German language. The same is true of a large number of public schools in other counties in the vicinity of St. Louis. In some of the schools, especially in St. Louis county, the Catholic or Lutheran catechisms are taught, thus making them virtually parochial schools. In other cases appropriations to parochial schools are made from the public funds direct, by accommodating officials. This sapping and mining of the public school system should be made constitutionally impossible.

The Michigan Advocate, an independent Methodist paper, thus speaks of the periodicals of that denomination: "It is understood that some of the official papers are not self-sustaining, and are published at a loss to the church. From the reports of the New York house it appears that the New York Advocate yields a profit of $27,662.07, and the Sunday-school Journal a profit of $14,309.91, while the Review, Sunday-school Advocate, Classmate, Northern Christian Advocate and the Southwestern are all published at a loss. It has cost the church a net loss of $41,903.11 to try to establish Our Youth."

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, post-paid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to our periodicals.

PREMIUMS.

For ten new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Cynosure, sent on or before May 1st, 1890, the Original Webster

Unabridged Dictionary will be sent free. Express charges paid.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TREATMENT FOR DIPHTHERIA.

Dr. Robert Walker, in his Journal of Health, recommends the following treatment for diphtheria: First, isolate the patient. Give him a large, airy room to himself, with nobody to enter it except the nurse and doctor. When a patient is taken with fever, sore throat, perhaps sickness of the stomach, and illness which calls for attention, let the throat be examined, and if a dirty, yellowish, white coating or membrane is found just where the mouth becomes throat, viz., the fauces, diphtheria may be diagnosed. The first thing to be done after putting the patient to bed is to wrap his throat in ice. If an ice-bag can be promptly obtained from the drug store, fill it with ice and place it over the throat, and refill it as often as the ice melts. Keep the throat cold. By the application of ice the external skin will become as red as though a mustard plaster had been applied, causing the internal swelling to subside, the condition for rapid decomposition to be obviated, so that in the course of a week or ten days the patient will become convalescent. In connection with the application of ice, which should not be neglected in any case, the feet should be kept warm, and the bowels should be emptied by enemata of tepid water. Three or four enemata daily during the fever will not only tend to relieve the bowels, but will cool the fever wonderfully by its soothing influence upon the alimentary canal. The tepid bath once a day is also in order, though not really necessary, and may be dispensed with if the half-pack, made by folding a sheet twice, wringing out-half of it out of tepid water, and wrapping it around the patient between the arm-pits and the hips, being careful that it is smooth and comfortable, covered by the dry end of the sheet, which is wrapped around the wet sheet and the body, and allowed to remain in place from one to three hours, if the patient is comfortable, and it is found to be agreeable. At the end of three hours it may be taken off and repeated, if it cools and soothes the fevered patient.

There is not much else to be done, except to wait. The patient has no appetite, and all food should be withheld, even for one, two, or three days. In case of appetite, the patient may be allowed to eat very lightly of plain food, such as gruels, fruit, home-made bread, without meat, eggs, soups, beef-tea, or anything of the kind. If this treatment is followed, the mortality will be found to be very slight indeed.

HINTS FOR THE SICK-ROOM.

An exchange says that if a mustard-plaster is mixed with the white of an egg instead of water, it will draw but will not blister.

When first recovering from a cold, wear thin layers of wool or cotton batting over the chest and gradually remove them when strong and well.

Flaxseed tea is an excellent remedy for a cold. Pour boiling water over whole flaxseed, using from four to six tablespoonfuls of flaxseed to one quart of boiling water. Add the juice of two lemons, putting in half of the yellow skin, and sweeten the mixture to the taste. Allow it to stand in a warm place. Strain out a glassful when needed with an ordinary little tin gravy strainer. This is an excellent drink for any person suffering from pulmonary difficulties, as it seems to loosen the cold. A fresh pitcher of this tea should be made every day, as it soon becomes unfit for use.

When first going out in the air after recovering from a severe cold, it is well to wear a little cotton in the ears and to avoid talking in the open air. If such precautions are observed a convalescing patient may take exercise with safety in the open air much sooner than he otherwise could.—N. Y. Tribune.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. D., 181 Pearl St., New York.

The True Way To Reach Boils

TO CURE Eczema, Pimples, and Eruptive Diseases of all kinds is to purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Until the blood is cleansed, there can be no permanent relief from these troubles.

"Four years ago I was severely afflicted with salt-rheum, the itching being so incessant as to seriously interfere with sleep. Painful scrofulous sores appeared on my neck and the upper part of my arms, and from there the humor went to my eyes. My appetite being poor, my health rapidly failed. I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished ten bottles I regained my appetite, improved greatly in strength, and was permanently cured of the salt-rheum and scrofula. I consider that what I spent for this medicine was well invested. The Sarsaparilla has indeed done me incalculable good."—Mrs. Caroline A. Garland, Deerfield, N. H., (formerly of Lowell, Mass.).

"My little niece was afflicted with a severe cutaneous disease, which broke out at intervals and resisted treatment. At last, we tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This acted like magic. She is now entirely cured and has been in perfect health for several months."—Margaret Preston, Clarendon, Ark.

"For a long time I was afflicted with salt-rheum, and could find nothing to relieve me. A friend recommended saparilla, and after taking four bottles I was cured."—Edwin L. Tombs, Ogemaw Springs, Mich.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

And Carbuncles, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine produces such immediate and salutary results.

C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., was almost literally covered with boils and carbuncles. These all disappeared as the result of using only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This proves that the true way to reach these troubles is through the blood. "It is now over six years," writes Mr. Murray, "since I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I have not had a pimple, nor boil, nor a sign of one in all that time."

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. Another effect of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a number of carbuncles on my neck and back, with swellings in my armpits, and was tormented with pain almost beyond endurance. All means of relief to which I resorted failed until I began to take Ayer's Sarone bottle of which medicine restored me to health."—S. Carter, Nashville, Tennessee.

FARM NOTES.

GOOD ROADS AND PUBLIC ECONOMY.

The experienced traveler who finds himself at the beginning of a newly-mended road will betake himself to the nearest house and learn how far the improvement extends; if for the distance of ten miles, he will then inquire by what circuit, not exceeding fifteen miles in length, he can escape from the danger of the repairs. After a time nature mends the damage done by the process of reconstruction, and the journeyer finds once again a way tolerable, save where the hillsides are steep or the ground wet. In the winter season such roads, at least in the counties where the soil is of a clayey nature, are often practically impassable. In such regions, after a distressing experience of some decades, the people find themselves willing to turn over to a corporation the precious privilege of controlling their highways. A little knowledge as to the art of road-making, an expenditure of not more labor than is normally given to the annual repair of the roads, would in most cases have secured to the community about as good roads as they obtain by the construction of turnpikes. In other words, our system of ignorant mismanagement in the construction and maintenance of rural ways leads to a vast and purposeless expenditure. If we take the misapplied expenses of our countryways, if we count at the same time the mere social disadvantages which they bring to the people, it is probable that the sum of the road-tax in this country is greater than that of our ordinary taxation. From some data which I have gathered in my personal experience with roads, I am inclined to think that even in New England the cost to the public arising from ineffective roadways, as well as from the waste of money expended on them, amounts to not less than an average of ten dollars a year on each household. In this reckoning I have included the loss of time and of transporting power of vehicles, the wear and tear of wagons and carriages, and the beasts which draw them. It is probable that the expenditure in this direction is greater than that which is incurred for schools or any other single element of public interest. I am inclined, indeed, to think that it comes near the sum of our State and Federal taxation together. —From the "Common Roads," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, in October Scribner.

LET THE FARMERS KNOW THEIR PROSPERITY.—"A Minnesota Farmer," of Donnelly, Minn., writes: "The United States Senate, that august body of plutocrats, has refused to have the mortgage indebtedness of the farmers taken for the census! The Senators prefer to keep the slaves ignorant so they will not complain. It is natural. The American aristocracy is just like all others—it fears intelligence on the part of the people. It fears it can no longer gull them with tariff clatter if they see the grip the money-lenders have on them. If farm mortgages are evidences of wealth and prosperity, why not let us have a list of them so we can see how rich we are? Are they afraid we will become purse-proud and haughty, and refuse to work? If the farmers of Iowa owe Eastern money-lenders $65,000,000, as Senator Wilson says, the interest at 8 per cent is $5,200,000 a year. This interest bill calls for 35,000,000 bushels of corn this year. Now, if it is desirable to ship 35,000,000 bushels of corn from the State each year, without getting a penny for it, then according to the wise Senators we had better double the debt until it takes all our crops to pay the interest."

When Macbeth ironically asked, "Canst thou minister to a mind diseased?" he little knew that mankind would one day be blessed with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, this powerful alterative gives tone and strength to every function and faculty of the system.

Capitalists and small investors read "War" Robertson's advertisement in this paper.

JEWELS AND LACES.

"Oh, girl with the jewelled fingers,
Oh, maid with the laces rare!"

What are your jewels and what are your laces worth to you if, from undergoing the trying ordeals which fashionable society imposes on its devotees, and which are enough to test the physical strength and endurance of the most robust, you break down, lose your health and become a physical wreck, as thousands do from such causes?

Under such circumstances you would willingly give all your jewels and all your laces to regain lost health. This you can do if you will but resort to the use of that great restorative known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Thousands of grateful women bless the day it was made known to them.

For all those derangements, irregularities and weaknesses peculiar to women, it is the only remedy, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

As an invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader. —Northwestern Christian Advocate.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man.

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and sixty-eight cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorised ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

The negotiations of an English syndicate for the leading distilleries of Kentucky have been closed. Julius Goldman, who has been acting as the agent of the English company, refused to affirm or deny the report, but prominent distillers say it is correct.

It was stated in St. Paul, Minn., that the Minneapolis elevator men have agreed to furnish 300,000 bushels of seed grain, at 75 cents a bushel, for the needy farmers of North Dakota, but to guard against loss the relief committee of that State will charge the farmers $1 a bushel.

At Joliet, Ill., Tommy Wineman, a boy 12 years old, shot and killed Bertie Polhamus, a companion of 10 years. The boys were playing marbles, and a disagreement in the game caused young Wineman to draw a pistol and shoot his little playmate in the stomach. He died a few hours later.

General Von Caprivi, commander of the Tenth Army Corps, has been appointed Chancellor of the Empire, to succeed Prince Bismarck, who, in his note to the Emperor tendering his resignation, alleged that old age and failing health were his reasons for desiring to withdraw from public life.

The resignation of Prince Bismarck, which was received at first with general complacency, and without much care one way or another, is now arousing considerable fear among the people, which increases as the alleged full significance of his act becomes understood. In other words, the possibility of war when the Kaiser takes into his own hands the relations of the German Emperor with foreign powers is alarming.

The absurdity, as well as the cruelty of the convict-leasing system of the South, is illustrated in the case of Kilrain, the pugilist. He had been guilty of violating the laws of the State of Mississippi by his brutal prize-fight with Sullivan. He was condemned to pay a small fine and to two months imprisonment. His backer at once hired his "services" for the two months, and he will doubtless spend his time in giving exhibitions of boxing. Had he been an ordinary criminal he would have had small chance of escaping with his life. Meanwhile Sullivan, by the liberal use of money, seems to be able to escape the law, and is still engaged in his barbarous and degrading business in Boston and New York.

Sabbath evening Dr. Norman Seaver preached on the Sabbath question in the New England Congregational church of this city. His discourse was of the radical type not always heard in city pulpits. The Anglo-Saxon people have been known for centuries as a Sabbath-keeping people. Their history has been one of great prosperity, and it is just to infer that adversity will follow Sabbath desecration. The Sabbath destroyed, and the conscientious workman must give up religion or his job. Then elections will be held on the Sabbath, and the Christian man must give up his vote. Then public offices will open on that day, and no Christian man can hold office. And from such a despotism we would gladly take shelter in the domain of the Czar.

An additional proof that the empire of Brazil was overthrown by Masonic plotters is given by the Italian papers. The Bittadino di Genoa says: "To prove the important part which the Masonic organization took in the conspiracy in Brazil, especially where the new standards were raised, it will be sufficient to observe the fact that, in certain Italian journals, the new Republican flag of Brazil was described before any news, by telegraph or otherwise, could have arrived. Indeed, the thing is very plain; the new flags, destined to symbolize the revolt of the people of Brazil, were sent not very long ago from the port of Genoa under a false entry in the custom-house. And we believe that the flags were not the only things sent from Italy." It may be claimed that the revolution was beneficial to Brazil. But the revolution is not yet "out of the woods." Beside, from all reports, it began with merciless injustice and massacre, and the government overthrown was already benignant and humane. A republic would have come in a few years when the masses of the people, including large numbers of released slaves, could be ready for it.

All friends of scientific temperance instruction feel deeply the defeat in the Massachusetts Legislature of the bill for hygienic text-books in the public schools showing the effect of liquor and narcotics on the human system. The law as it now stands is evaded and violated by instructors and school-boards unfriendly to its enforcement, to a degree that makes it in many places null and void. Henry H. Faxon recently made the statement that "there is more lying and deception in connection with liquor cases than with any other class." This is the reason why it is so imperatively necessary that all laws on this subject, whether for temperance instruction in the schools, or to prevent liquor-selling, should be radical and clear-cut—the very thing which seems to be most studiously avoided.

The discussion of the eight-hour working day by the Chicago labor lodges shows the seeds of anarchy are ready to sprout again into bombs. At a Scandinavian meeting last Sabbath day a member of the Cigar-makers' Union, and former president of the Trade and Labor Assembly, made a speech which the reporters have given us in these words: "The man who will not strike at the present time, who will not work for a shorter day, is not a true American, is not a civilized man. If there should be another panic like that of 1873, with no organized labor to relieve the sufferings of idle brethren, instead of a few hundred thousand idle men, as then, there would be ten millions. They would take possession of the cities and burn them. Millionaires' heads would fall." Such are the vicious sentiments promulgated in the secret societies.

Rhode Island, on account of her diminutive size, has long been esteemed a fair target for newspaper jests. The latest specimen is from the Pittsburgh Chronicle, which asserts that a Pittsburgh man lately asked of a friend just returned from that State, "What is the outlook?" and received for reply, "Why, that is all there is in Rhode Island." However, the importance of the world's great battle fields are not measured by their size. Some theologians have thought that our little planet, though but a tiny atom among the worlds that revolve through space, has been selected to be the Waterloo of this whole moral universe—the field on which shall be fought out the last decisive struggle between good and evil. However this may be, all things considered, no State in the Union is now attracting more attention from the friends and foes of prohibition than little Rhody. High license cannot complain that it hasn't for once been given "free course," though the result is hardly of a nature to "glorify" it even in the eyes of its most enthusiastic advocates.

The war on the common schools of Wisconsin, which culminated in the decision of the Supreme Court, is not likely to be settled by that action. Two weeks or more since the Catholic bishops of the State published a formal protest against the new law requiring certain instruction in the English language. This law they affirm to be needless, offensive and unjust to their people, whose parochial schools already give the instruction required. If this be so, we do not understand the necessity of a formal protest. But while a month since the politicians of both parties were terrified and abject, ready to drop an obnoxious and dangerous topic, a pronounced change is reported among these weather-cocks of popular opinion. Governor Hoard has from the first stood by the law, and with the sagacity and integrity of true statesmanship has maintained that the principles of the law were right and would in time prevail. He was willing to stand by it though it cost him a re-election. Men are rallying around a leader who has convictions and can stand by them, and the law will doubtless be saved.

The resignation of Prince Bismarck and his total withdrawal from public life is the unwearying theme of European dispatches. It is now stated that the young Emperor actually compelled him to resign. The German press is very reticent and gives nothing official, and our sources of information may not be altogether reliable; but such as they are, they are sufficiently alarming. Kaiser William could not, with Bismarck at the head of the council of state, be free to carry out the ambitious and willful designs of youth; and from treating the old Chancellor coolly, he went on to give such orders as must force a separation and cause a resignation. Bismarck has been in office since 1862, and since the successes of 1870 he has been the foremost figure in European history. His efforts have placed the authority of the Prussian crown upon a firm base, and given the young Emperor a terrible edged tool in the German army, with which he may hew and perhaps be hewn. His imperious temper is ominous, and all Europe feels the shock of Bismarck's fall as of a great tower from the wall of European peace. Bismarck has so long been a man of "blood and iron" that it is remarkable with what unanimity the sympathy of the world goes out to him. In Berlin his departure for his home was the occasion of "the greatest public demonstration" since the return of the victorious army in 1871; and the press reports speak of him as one of the great benefactors of the race.

THE BIBLE CAST OUT.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

By a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin the Bible has no place in the public schools of that State.

The Roman Catholic church has its Index Expurgatoria, in which all books inimical to its interests are marked as dangerous and to be avoided. The principle, if rightfully applied, is correct. Any book or other publication that would tend to corrupt the morals, impair the loyalty, or mislead the mind as to important facts, ought to be excluded from our schools. There are some such books, but the Bible is not one of them. There are books that find a place in our school libraries that ought to be left out,—books which excite the imagination, but do not improve either the mind or the heart. Such books are unwholesome food and should be prohibited as we prohibit other poisons. But when a great State, either by its legislature or its judiciary, deliberately excludes from our schools the Book of books, the fountain from which we draw the principles of social morality and civil government, it commits an act that is little short of madness. What they need is not to stigmatize, but to exalt and honor it; for if the people of Wisconsin do not become utterly demoralized, it will be because of the benign influences of the Word of God. For both Protestants and Romanists admit that it is the great source of our knowledge of morality and religion, and that it contains the word and the law of God. Even the Jew, though he does not acknowledge the divine character of Jesus, does admit that his moral teachings are excellent, and are unsurpassed. All men admit that Christian morality is fundamental to the highest well-being of society, and to the highest success of a republican government.

What we most need is a higher tone of public morals. Our heaviest burdens and our greatest dangers come from our small regard for Bible morality. If the State teaches anything, it must teach morality, for morality is far more essential to public happiness than mere intellectual culture. If morality is to be taught we must have a text book. It has not been proposed to exclude the Koran or the books of Confucius from our schools, yet who will not say that the Bible is incomparably better than they are?

We cannot exclude the teachings of morality from our schools if we would. No teacher can govern his school except by moral precepts. The truth is that higher and purer moral teachings is the great want of our nation and our times. Our intellectual development has altogether out-run our moral growth. The mental machinery has been overtaxed, and we have lacked the balance wheel of moral restraint. This is why crime, suicides and insanity abound.

Under such circumstances to exclude the Bible from our schools, as the one book on which above all others we would place a moral stigma, is practically to repudiate truth and exalt iniquity.

But we have no right to infer that either the legislature or the judiciary of Wisconsin do not believe in, and respect the Christian Scriptures. Utterly unjustifiable as was such a decision, it did not mean that they disowned the Bible. They surely would not class it with evil books. It was manifestly a political trick. To secure party ends they seem willing to cast out the Bible and all else that is sacred. Wisconsin has a large Roman Catholic population, larger in proportion than any other State. The Romanists are unwilling to have the Bible in schools except as it is interpreted by their priests. They will not support any political party that will keep the Bible in the schools. So both parties are bidding for their support. Each seeks to bow lower than the other. In Wisconsin, as elsewhere, the interests of public and private morals count as nothing when put in competition with the interests of a political party. Next to a revival of religion we need a revival of patriotism.

Berea, Ky.

WE MAY KNOW MASONRY.

BY REV. DAVID M'KEE.

When we undertake to determine the character of secret societies, we are met by the declaration that as you have never been a member of these societies, nor initiated into their rites, you know nothing of their character; that it is unfair to receive the testimony of the enemies of these societies in regard to their character, and reject the testimony of their friends.

I reply that such is not the case. In forming a judgment in regard to secret societies we may avail ourselves of the testimony of both friends and enemies; of those who adhere as well as of those who have seceded. Adhering members have been publishing so much of their history and ritual as they thought proper to reveal for ages past. Large volumes have been written, and lexicons compiled explaining the meaning of the symbols employed; at the same time admitting that there are secrets which they are not at liberty to reveal. Again, seceders from these societies who have taken the different degrees, and become familiar with their secret rituals and mode of operation, have renounced their membership in these associations and published their ritual and mode of operation to the world.

It is rather a bold declaration to tell an individual who reads the writings of both adhering and seceding members, that they know nothing about them; and are incompetent to judge of their character. It implies that either these institutions have nothing that can be revealed, or that when an individual enters them he becomes incapable of ever afterwards being able to speak or write the truth; for nothing is more certain than that both adhering members and seceding members have for years been trying to tell us what they are. We may, however, be constrained after all to adopt the opinion of the Yankee who was asked to define a certain thing. He said, "It was the little end of nothing whittled down to a very small point." Henry Clay is said to have varied the figure when he called one of these societies "a great big nothing."

THE GOOD-MAN FALLACY.

BY MRS. L. M. HOYT.

In conversation with a lady friend recently, she said, "The reason I don't condemn Freemasonry is, so many good men belong to the order that I am led to believe it cannot be so bad as some people say. If it were, these good men would not join it, and if they did join and found it bad, they would renounce it at once."

I wish first, without using any Anti-masonic arguments, to show why these men are in the lodge, to quote statements by adhering Masons themselves made personally to me.

In conversation with a Mason of high degree, a man qualified to teach in high school or college, and titled as "Professor," I asked why he joined the lodge? if it was to better his condition spiritually or financially? His reply was, "No; I had no idea of spiritual benefit, but I had an eye to financial advantage."

"Now," said he, "to illustrate my point; if I was to come to Ware and apply for a situation as a teacher in the high school, and another man equally qualified, made an application also who was not a Mason, if the school committee were members of the Masonic order, I would get the position, and the other man would have to hunt a position elsewhere. I joined the Masons for the sake of advantage, yet it costs me heavily. I seldom get through the year for less than two hundred dollars. Spiritually, I know I do not enjoy what I once did. I have fallen into a state like that of the majority of popular church members. I go to church, pray and speak, but the fervor and enthusiasm of my early Christian experience has died out. In fact, I do not enjoy religion as I did years ago."

When living in Pennsylvania I had quite a prolonged conversation with a "Masonic physician" on the lodge question. He said, "Mrs. Hoyt, we have an object in belonging to the Masonic fraternity. In case of malpractice, if we should be attacked by law, I doubt if a judge and jury could be found that would find us guilty. In the first place they would have to get the testimony of a physician that it was malpractice, and I doubt if there can be found an M.D. of any note who is not a member of the lodge."

I asked if that was the reason why an acquaintance of mine had failed to bring two physicians to justice, who were just as guilty of murder in the first degree as though they had shot their victim in the highway. "Yes," said he, "the man came to me to get me to testify against them; but I would not do it, for they were members of the same order—Free and Accepted Masons."

It is a self-evident fact that crimes of the most heinous and brutal character are covered under the ban of secret organizations. The Dr. Cronin case is only one of many to which we might call attention, in which are found so many "good men."

"Good," according to Webster, is having the qualities God's law requires, virtuous, pious, religious, applied to persons, and opposed to bad, vicious, wicked, evil. It cannot be said truthfully that men who adhere, and are connected with these horrible conspiracies, are really good; if they were, they would not be found in the company of such men as are found in every lodge-room in the world.

It is an old and true saying, "A man is known by the company he keeps." But, they say to us, don't the righteous and the unrighteous mingle together even in the house of God? Yes, I admit that they do, but then the good Christian man does not take an oath, to "always hail, ever conceal and never reveal" whatever may be done by the unrighteous of that assembly. I understand full well that a host stands ready to condemn a man when he renounces secretism, after seeing and knowing for himself how contrary to the divine teachings is the whole system of oath-bound lodgery. They certainly ought to be as consistent toward these men as they are toward sinners. That vile, wretched sinner, when he bows at the altar of God and seeks the forgiveness of sins, and confesses them, is honored by every respectable, law-abiding citizen, and all that love the Lord Jesus Christ. But when a man, after going into the lodge, sees that he has done wrong, and renounces the whole system, many, even professing Christians, stand ready to condemn him and say, as one man did to me, "Morgan ought to have been killed; and I am glad he got his just deserts. It is just what every man ought to get who leaves the lodge after joining them."

What a system of bondage and tyranny a man joins when he goes into the lodge! He dare not assert what he knows to be his right as an American citizen. He has a right, according to the Word of God (Lev. 5: 4,5), to come out boldly and let the world know into what a whirlpool of destruction he was drawn, and, by so doing, warn others of their impending danger.

What would be thought of a church that had such a system of idolatrous mummery, oaths, and death penalties? It would not be tolerated in a civilized land, but would be put down by law. And, yet, the church has just as much right, legally, for these secret conclaves.

It is not in accordance with the law of God, nor the law of civilized nations, that these lodges should take life, or dispose of their victims just as they see best and in accordance with the heathenish rites they practice.

Personally, I have no confidence in "Masonic Christians." We are either Christians or not Christians. There is no "half-way" about the work of God. He says (Matt. 12: 30), "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." I have never found a "half-way place" on this heavenly way, and I don't believe the greatest Masonic preacher ever found it. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Luke 16: 13. There is no use for us to "daub with untempered mortar." If we are combating the lodge element because it is wrong and sinful, there is no use in saying we can be Masons and be Christians at the same time. Such a theory is not consistent with our work.

Ware, Mass.

A CRIME AGAINST LIBERALISM.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin against the reading of the Bible in public schools has created grave surprise. This is an age distinguished by its liberalism; orthodox people read "Robert Elsmere," nationalists and socialists read and admire the strong individualism of Tolstoi; everybody who pretends to general information knows something of Darwin or Huxley. That the school children of Wisconsin should be doomed by a decree of the Supreme Court to learn nothing of the most most marvelous literature extant seems incredible.

Job's description of the war-horse, the story of Solomon's Temple, the description of the New Jerusalem, as given in the Apocalypse; the Beatitudes, the narratives of Joseph in Egypt, and of the birth, life and death of Moses, certainly are not "religious teachings," except as all that is virtuous or wonderful or sublime is religious—meaning, as religious truly and firstly does, "binding" upon the thoughts and imaginations of all peoples in all lands. One and all they contain nothing that could disturb the creed of a Mohammedan, a Confucian, a Roman Catholic, or an agnostic. They are literature, pure and simple; and they are literature to be ignorant of which is disgraceful to the church or state ordaining such ignorance upon its members. The morality of the Beatitudes is the morality of the highest order of created intelligences. It is morality the inculcation of which seems to be peculiarly needful in these days of social agitation.

The decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin is too wide in its sympathy with ignorance and prejudice, and too narrow in its sympathy with liberalism in education. The doctrinal epistles might perhaps be well left out of school exercises, but there is small chance of their ever being brought into them. It is not in the doctrinal chapters that the highest eloquence of Scripture is reached; it is not by them that the imagination of youth is kindled. It is not from them that mankind at large derives the most pleasure; they even are falling into desuetude into the pulpits of most churches. It is in the historical and moralistic portions of the Bible that men take most delight; it is from them that the secular orator derives his most glowing imagery; it is by them that the mind is most enlarged. It seems as unjust and as illiberal to exclude the orations of Paul upon Mar's Hill from the text books of the free schools as to exclude a description of the death of Socrates or an extract from Cicero against Catiline. Religion apart, it is as needful that a child should learn something about the origin and philosophy of the ancient Jews as that he should learn something about the history of Rome or Greece. It is as needful that he should know who Christ was, and what he said, as it is that he should know who Columbus was and what he did. For if Christ had not been, Columbus never would have sailed in quest of regions to convert to Christianity.

Nor does the act of teaching the history of Christ necessitate the teaching of his divinity. We tell the scholar what the motives of Columbus was, we leave him to judge of the wisdom of the motive. We place an extract from the Phædo in the hands of a youth, we direct his attention to the eloquence of its tone; we leave him to judge in after years as to the soundness of its philosophy. To exclude the Bible as a whole in each and all of its parts; to prohibit alike the sublime poetry of Job, the pastoral poetry of the book of Ruth, the elegant narrative of Esther, the severe oratory of the address to the Areopagites, the simple beauty of the Sermon of the Mount to the youth of this Republic seems to us to be a crime against the liberalism of the age.—Inter Ocean.

HOW GREAT AND GOOD NAMES ARE USED BY MASONRY.

The Daily Telegraph of London, England, printed April 28, 1875, contains the following in an editorial:

Another contemporary newspaper, speaking of Freemasonry, writes as follows: "Hard as it is for men to believe that it is so diabolical abroad, it is harder still, it is simply impossible, for them to think it other than a mere 'friendly society' at home, when thousands well known for their principles, for honor and honesty of purpose in their own circles, have willingly, nay gladly, placed their names on the rolls of its various English lodges. Englishmen, loyal and Protestant, could never lend themselves or their names to support the ends for which Freemasonry is said to exist; yet many such are actually Masons, and sworn members of that same society which is so numerous and so widespread abroad. That society, then, cannot be the evil it is said to be; or else Freemasonry here is not the same as elsewhere. This latter would appear to be the general opinion, and to rest upon a basis of something like fact; for the craft is too wary to overlook the English love for law and order, too sharp not to recognize in this character an obstacle to its own final success, and too cautious, therefore, to admit any but those who have been well tried and sounded to a knowledge of its present actions and future aims. Here, as abroad, the multitude of the brotherhood have little more idea of the scope of Freemasonry than the general public has; they are kept at play in the ante-chamber, like children in the nursery, whilst real business is transacted in the inner chambers by the older members of the family. Men are slow to allow that they can be duped, and it will be no easy matter to get those who have joined the craft to relinquish their membership, or to deter those from joining it who are so inclined, on the strength of what certainly is, to say the least of it, a well-founded suspicion of dark dealings. But the question is not a matter of mere judgment or prudence; it is one of morality and conscience."

But a still stronger testimony is that of one of the most eminent of the French Freemasons, M. Louis Blanc. He says:

"It seemed good to sovereigns—to Frederick the Great—to handle the trowel and to put on the apron. Why not? Since the existence of the higher grades was carefully hidden from them, all they knew of Freemasonry was that which could be revealed to them without danger. They had no reason for concerning themselves about it, seeing that they were kept in the lower grades (though nominally the highest), in which they perceived nothing but an opportunity for amusement, joyful banquets, principles forsaken and resumed at the threshold of the lodges, formulas that had no reference to ordinary life—in a word, a comedy of equality. But in these matters comedy closely borders on tragedy; and princes and nobles were induced to offer the cover of their names and the blind aid of their influence to secret undertakings directed against themselves."

"Can any reasonable man doubt, after reading such an explicit admission as this, that kings and princes, statesmen and legislators, may be found in grades of high honor and dignity—provided by Freemasonry for their especial benefit—may assume the first place in its public manifestations and the external direction of its government, and may yet remain in ignorance of its hidden designs as unconscious and complete as that of the 'profane,' who are altogether excluded from its lodges?"

In spite of all their caution, however, the real nature of Freemason doctrines occasionally becomes revealed to their noble dupes; and an instance of this is to be found in the resignation of Frederick, Prince of Orange, second son of William I., King of the Netherlands, who had been chosen on the 4th June, 1816 (when he had scarcely attained his nineteenth year) as National Grand Master for life of the Grand Lodge of the Hague. The next year he was elected, in the Grand Orient in Brussels, to the Grand Mastership of the Southern—now called the Belgian—Lodges. Although he had only been made acquainted with a very small portion of the impious legendary teaching of the craft, yet that little was enough. He resigned his dignities instantly, and alleged the following reasons, of which we will give a short extract: "I am a Christian, and will ever remain one. Everybody will understand how extremely painful it is for me to be compelled to speak of the abuse made in the Masonic Legend of the teaching of my Divine Master, the Son of the Heavenly Father. . . . How could I write the story of thy life, O Divine Jesus, and then call it the Legend of the Degree of Rosierucian?"—Translator's note to Dupanloup's "Study of Freemasonry."

THE TYRANNY OF LABOR UNIONS.

There exists in Montreal a Stonecutters' Union, to which the entrance fee for Canadian workmen is $5, the subscription 25 cents a month, with benefits of $3 a week if disabled, a funeral allowance of $20, and a gratuity of $75 to widows. So far good, but there is a clause which compels all foreigners to pay no less than $50 entrance fee. In decreeing this impost the Montreal Association acknowledges its disgraceful subservience to the New York Union, which refuses to acknowledge Montreal workmen going there unless the rates charged are equalized. Discerning as we do in so many of these combinations the greatest danger of the age, we are tempted to ask how long persons interested only for themselves or the particular trade or clique to which they belong, are to be allowed at their own crude and irresponsible wills to take action damaging to the whole body politic?

The utterance of a Scotch stone-mason on the subject conveys a world of meaning: "I should have no objection," he says, "to pay $5, but $50 is a terrible dose." No doubt it is a terrible dose, and one of which it is a sheer iniquity to enforce the swallowing. "I knew," he continues, "that New York was doing this, because they sent notices all over Great Britain that after six months they would put on that charge, but I did not know that here in a British colony there was any such thing to encounter." No, indeed, how could the poor fellow know that Montreal unions were only the ignominious vassals of New York combines? "Yes, I promised to pay. What could I do?" What could he do but submit to the abominable know-nothingness of a narrow greed? There is little excuse for this sort of boycott in Canada. The United States, whose commercial notions run in this line, can of course do as they please, but Canada essentially requires building up in population by precisely that highly respectable class of labor to which our Scotch friend belongs. Are these narrow exclusives to be allowed to work their "wicked will" to the detriment of the whole Dominion without let or hindrance? We say No! Such arbitrary compulsion requires legislative check. Canada has now arrived at that pitch when all such labor can easily be absorbed, more especially, as regards this particular craft, in Montreal, which prides itself on its constantly increasing building operations. Look at the effect. "Some Scotchmen have been driven off, I am told." "Aye, there were fifteen of them from Peter Lyall's job a fortnight ago, four more from another. They were told there was a good job at St. John, and there they went rather than pay the $50. It is an outrageous price!"

It was well no doubt that there was a good job at St. John. The Dominion did not lose an excellent class of citizens, but Quebec did.

We cannot too often or too strongly present to thinking men the great danger of the age—the rapidly extending tendency to the suppression of individual freedom and enterprise by associated cliques worked in the narrowest spirit, too often by interested propagandists. No tyranny of the absolutism of Czar or Kaiser is comparable, to the instincts of free-born citizens, to that which we are coming to groan under of all sorts of cliques and combinations. Not by such methods have been built up those great mercantile industries which afford steady and remunerative occupation to so many thousands of estimable mechanics and workmen of all sorts.—From the Critic of Halifax, N. S.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The Evangelical Alliance, which is "The Church United in Reforms," has moved into larger and more beautiful quarters in the renovated Bible House, representative of its enlarged and ennobled work under the new leadership of Dr. Josiah Strong and Dr. Frank Russell. The valuable and thrilling report of their recent Boston Conference has just been published by Baker, Taylor & Co., of this city, and it is almost the only "Report" that is also a standard and salable work. Anthony Comstock, whom we love for the enemies he has made, Secretary of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice," and Fraud should be added, for he fights the gamblers as much as the corrupters—who began his work seventeen years ago in a little room, hardly bigger than a pantry, in the American Tract Society building, and extended it into two adjoining rooms subsequently, is just moving into ampler quarters in the beautiful Times building. He started out this year with forty-nine convictions in two months, and his office is visited every hour by fathers and mothers and good citizens seeking his aid in the suppression of the evils which he is so ably fighting.

Time would fail to tell of the almost countless organizations for charity and reform which exists in this city. It has been aptly said that there is hardly a form of wrong-doing or misfortune, for the removal of which there is not some society, national or local, in New York. An English lady, Miss Synge, however, has discovered two neglected fields, one of them the messenger boys—2,000 of them—to whom she has become a missionary, reaching them by literature and personal interviews and an organized society for their moral and religious benefit. She ought to have the help of the law to a larger extent than she does, for there is scarcely any form of child-labor more demoralizing than that to which the messenger boys are doomed. Not only do they have the handling of money before they have fairly learned the rights of property, but they are sent at all hours of the night to all sorts of places, the worst oftener than the best. Workingmen and philanthropists should recommend the adoption of the English system, by which after night-fall all messages are carried by full-grown men. This earnest lady, reaching out for still further usefulness, has inaugurated a Sunday afternoon meeting for postoffice clerks and letter-carriers, another class whose work takes them to all sorts of places except churches, from which they are largely debarred, like the messenger boys, by Sunday work.

The recent noon Bible lectures of Phillips Brooks in Trinity Church, at the head of Wall street, which was crowded to the doors with business men, and the equally-thronged noon meetings of Dr. R. R. Meredith and Joseph Cook in Boston, and those of Dr. Pentecost for several months together in Glasgow, suggest as a new method in city missions the establishment of half-hour noon lectures on the Bible in the busy centers of our great cities all over the country, not for once a week or one week in the year, but for every day. Very many who never attend a noon prayer meeting would thus receive a practical application of the Bible principles to business life in the very heart of each business day. Such a lecturship should be endowed as are the preacher-ships of Harvard and Cornell.

The Presbyterian Social Union, having disposed of the creed discussion for the time being, lately turned its attention to one of the practical reforms of the day, the Indian question, listening to addresses by Herbert Welsh, Gen. Armstrong, Gen. Howard and Rev. Mr. Hill, of the Indian Territory. The addresses strikingly illustrate the fact that all the great reforms are interlocked. It was shown that the chief need of the Indians is a common school education on the reservations, supplementing the distant schools, Hampton and Carlisle and the rest, which might serve as normal schools to supply Indian teachers for the common schools. Incidentally it came out that the opposition to Gen. Morgan's confirmation as Indian Commissioner, was simply the fight of the parochial school advocates against the common school system. It was also shown that the lack of Civil Service Reform has caused the largest political difficulty in the solution of the problem by allowing the appointment of spoilsmen for Indian Agents, without regard for their fitness to represent American civilization for the savage. It was also shown that the serving of government rations was an evil only second to ignorance itself, and that charity reform is needed to enable the Indian to help himself, by giving him, instead of food, tools and farming implements by which to support himself. Gen. Armstrong claimed that the present generation of adult Indians can be put on their feet by putting among them one teacher of farming to each hundred men, and that the future can be provided for by putting the 30,000 youth to school. He believes that in addition to Indian common schools, in which there should be both mental and manual education, "contract schools" are also needed to afford adequate moral and religious education. He therefore advocates the English system by which a definite allowance per child shall be made by the government to every charitable private school which comes up to a fixed grade of excellence. Mr. Welsh strikingly illustrates the value of the Indian Rights Association," by saying that in 1882 it prevented Congress from passing a bill to open 11,000,000 acres of the Sioux reservation to settlers, paying the Indians the very unjust price of eight cents an acre, the very acres which recently, because of the efforts of the Indians' defenders, have been voluntarily sold by them at $1.25 an acre. These speakers believe that not only the Indians, but even the border whites may be civilized. Gen. Howard went to the foundations, in closing the discussion, by saying that what was most needed was that the Indians and the white men, and even the politicians, should be "born again." Christianity is the supreme remedy.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Many of these societies profess to be religious. They have a ritual of worship. So far as their members are members of the church, they neutralize to a great extent the influence of Christianity. It is not in the nature of things that a man should go into the lodge and ignore the name of Christ in conforming to its religious requirements, and then go into the church with a heart to honor the Son even as he honors the Father. Men who make the attempt are endeavoring to serve two masters, and God will reject the services professedly offered in the name of Christ and in the rejection of his name. Secretism, therefore, constitutes an element of disloyalty to Christ, and of opposition to his truth. Yet it is marvelous that the church is harboring so many of those who worship on Sabbath in the name of Christ and on the week day in rejection of that name. The tendency is toward a Christless church.—Christian Instructor.

In proof of the statement that prohibition does prohibit is the fact that the proprietor of a brewery at Grand Forks, N. D., has petitioned the legislature of that State for the sum of $10,000. His brewery, he claims, is damaged that amount by the adoption of the prohibition Amendment.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 26, 1890.

There is no lack of zeal on the part of Bro. Conant and the few friends at Willimantic, Conn., where I spoke twice on last Sabbath. Before leaving I made a hasty call on Rev. Mr. I. Coker, pastor of the Baptist church. He told how he had been deceived and his confidence betrayed by an infidel, who, under pretext of a temperance lecture, had obtained the use of his audience-rooms and the endorsement of a notice from the pulpit, to advocate the organization of a secret lodge in Willimantic. He spoke to me in positive terms of opposition to all secret and deceptive methods for promoting any good work, and I hope his voice may be heard publicly declaring his sentiments as freely as they were expressed to me in the privacy of his home.

At Putnam I found Bro. Buck, Bro. Cutler and the old friends on duty, and spent a few hours scattering Bro. Grant's speech among the people. A very cordial welcome awaited me at the home of Bro. S. A. Ives, pastor of the Baptist church at Thompson. I was disappointed in not meeting Bro. Joseph S. Perry, but it was no fault of his, and I am sure he will regret it as much as I. Bro. Ives had posted notices of the lecture in the Town Hall. I visited and left Bro. Grant's tract at each house in the village before the lecture, and gave a personal invitation to attend. There was a small audience, but those present listened with marked attention, and as they were mostly young men, good may follow and some be saved from the "snares spread in secret."

While visiting at the depot I learned from the ticket agent that the Grangers keep a lobbyist and vigilance committee of one in Congress to influence legislation, watch movements and to report; and where any man did not vote right, according to the Grange standard, "He is SPOTTED, and gets no more Granger votes." He said further that it was optional with N. E. Granges to use the manual or adopt such form as the exigencies of the case required.

An Irishman, whom I took for a R. R. "walking boss," was much interested and disposed to talk. He said we were going to have a change in railroad management soon. That the real owners would take the control into their hands, and that after next June we would see the workmen on the road with flags on their hats, and that they would get four dollars a day for their work, etc. The fellow didn't say what secret lodge was going to upset the present system and bring in the working man's millennium, but intimated that it was widespread, and felt sure that there was no such thing as a failure.

While delayed in changing cars at Blackstone for an hour, I went into the town with tracts. I met here upon the street Rev. D. E. Land from Sugar Hill, N. H., an evangelist now holding meetings in one of the churches. He said, "Wherever I go I find these ungodly, Christless lodges sending people to hell in platoons. My soul is stirred within me, and I must cry out and denounce them, though they tell me it is hurting my influence." Bro. Land is a colored man, but seemed devoted, earnest and fearless in defence of the truth.

At Providence I found Bro. Paul as genial, as cordial, as hopeful and as helpful as ever, and after a brief interview I repaired to "Bethesda," No. 317 Friendship street, where were about twenty women and two men waiting in prayer for the induement of the Spirit for the Master's work. The conference proper opened in the evening, and is expected to continue three or four days. I hope to present our work at some of the sessions.

MARCH 26.—The National Christian Union has been holding sessions since the opening services last evening. Every meeting has been characterized by deep and earnest piety. After a morning session for prayer, the necessary business was taken up, which occupied most of the forenoon. After devotional services in the afternoon, on request of the program committee I presented some of the anti-Christian features of the Secret Lodge System. Bros. Ryder, H. Davis, and Sister A. T. Fiske of Hartford followed with faithful and stirring words, when I again took the stand to answer questions. I have seldom, if ever, been plied with more intelligent questions, covering the field of unequal yoking together with unbelievers. The Good Templars, the Sons of Temperance, the Grangers came in for their full share; and, what was best of all, the devout and sweet spirit of love continued to the last. At the close many earnest souls came forward to talk with me personally about some special case,—a husband, a father, a brother, a son, or the Freemason lodge, the Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, or some case of peculiar danger or trial. All were willing to bear testimony and to distribute literature, and it was certainly a most blessed season of the communion and fellowship of God's people, who are free in Christ Jesus.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE ILLINOIS SCOTCH SETTLEMENT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Princeton I went to Sheffield. The Free Methodist pastor was holding a series of meetings. I preached for him twice while canvassing the town and the adjacent country. I also visited the adjoining town of Annawan. There will be an opening for lectures at these towns some time in the future, I think.

I returned to Wyandot and called upon an old friend of the cause, who assured me that he meant to remember the N. C. A. in his will. He is also donating what he can afford from year to year. I then came to Kewanee, and went three miles into the country and called upon Bro. Russell, who donated liberally to send the Cynosure to the Illinois ministers, with a report of the addresses to be delivered at the April Convention. He took me to Elmira the next morning to call upon the United Presbyterian pastor, who invited me to preach in his church Sabbath morning, on the antagonism of the secret society system to the Gospel of Christ. I went with Bro. Russell and did some more work about Kewanee, and then returned to Elmira on Saturday afternoon and filled my engagement for the Sabbath. A good congregation, mostly Scotch and their descendants, were present to hear. I remained until Monday afternoon and attended the meeting of the session, and obtained several contributions for the work. On my way to Kewanee from Elmira I received donations from the Turnbull brothers for the same purpose.

I visited the Swedish Lutheran minister in Kewanee, who expressed hearty sympathy with my work, and a desire that I should, at some future time, speak on the lodge question in his church.

I then came on to Galva and made some calls. The Lutheran minister was not at home, or a conference with him might have resulted in an arrangement to lecture there. I then came to Hopewell, and have arranged with Rev. O. C. Bedford to speak here and at Bethel the coming Sabbath.

During the month of March I have sent in 396 short-time subscriptions to the Cynosure. I hope to get a few more before the month is finished. The pastors of the churches must be awakened to realize the antagonism of the secret society system to the Gospel.

C. F. HAWLEY.

FROM WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Mrs. Ellen Foster spoke in the First Congregational church of this city yesterday (Sabbath) afternoon, in behalf of her new W. C. T. U. At the same hour, in the Foundry M. E. church, a meeting was held in the interests of the old Union. Mrs. Foster opened her address by telling of her family. How she had fostered and cared for her little ones that were now grown. She purposed to give her life to the temperance work, and was now willing to foster all the women who would join her non-partisan party.

She said there was no difference between the old and new unions in that they both believed in total abstinence, and that the traffic in alcoholic liquors should be abolished. They differed, however, as to the methods. Some did not believe in signing the pledge, but she did. She was anxious to see the liquor traffic overthrown, and she wished the right method adopted. She had come from New York to Washington on the train because the engineer used the the right methods. Had he not employed the right methods the train would have gone to smash. Some thought this traffic should be abolished by State legislation, others by national. She believed the latter to be the best. She did not believe in license, high or low. License has proved a failure. Under high license in Philadelphia, said she, there are 1,500 licensed and 4,000 unlicensed saloons.

The reason she did not favor the Prohibition party was because she did not favor making any moral question an issue between political parties. In the Tariff question there was nothing moral involved. It was simply a question of expediency. If one party adopted a moral question, members of the other felt that they must oppose it, although in sympathy, for if the moral issue succeeded it meant the success of the party that adopted it. The inference was, if they were not allied to either of the great parties in the field they could use both in securing their end. Seemingly forgetting that the cases were not parallel, she cited the Prohibitionists to their opponents, the liquor dealers. They refuse to combine in either party, but hold the whip over both. When the Prohibitionists have the whip the cases will be parallel, but now they have not even the whipstock. She spoke highly of the National Reformers. She believed they gained great strength by not allying themselves to any political party.

In short, she was much in favor of political action in regard to the liquor traffic, but not party political action. She could not work with the old Union because it was allied to a party, and now she purposed to run her own party.

MARCH 27.—A few days ago I called on a thirty-three degree Mason of this city who subscribed for the Cynosure. When his attention was called to the killing of Rev. Johnston while taking the Royal Arch degree he expressed surprise, and said that he agreed with Col. Enoch T. Carson, "that there is less danger about the Royal Arch degree than any of the others." Col. Carson says, "In taking one of the degrees there is a drop of over sixty feet." (See Cynosure, March 13). This thirty-three degree Mason says this is not necessary for any of the degrees that he knows anything about. Ten feet will answer all practical purposes. So the devil gets the fellow at the bottom, I don't suppose the distance he has dropped will make any material difference.

Last Sabbath evening I addressed an audience of about 100, gathered in the colored Presbyterian church. Of the half dozen or more with whom I shook hands at the close not one belonged to an oath-bound secret society, and nearly all were interested in our work. I have since found there are a few secretists in this church, but they were largely at home, I judge, on this evening. Here was further proof of the fact that when the lodge absorbs a man's time and interest it is lost to his church and home. I expect to address these friends further on next Thursday evening. Twelve have already subscribed for the Cynosure and others will. I am convinced that there is no good reason why a hundred or more colored families in this city should not have the truth of the Cynosure if the proper effort is made to secure their subscription. It is emphatically their paper. And I am sure when they realize this they will help sustain it.

It is our privilege to entertain Rev. R. C. Wylie, of Ray, Ind., who is here as a John the Baptist for the National Reform Convention, to be held next week. He reports the outlook as very encouraging. A canvass of the pastors assures him that there will be general local interest and co-operation. Bishop Newman is visiting the M. E. churches in the interest of the purposed university to be erected here by this church. He is thus far reported to have received pledges of local support to about $35,000. He hopes to secure one-half the cost of the ground, which it is said will be $100,000. In his Sabbath sermon he represented John Calvin as turning in his coffin while John Wesley, his John, was marching on. He had reference, of course, to the creed revision. If this university is to better fit men to win souls for Christ, it will be a blessing. If simply to magnify one John's teachings above another's, can it be other than a curse? W. B. STODDARD.

The Chicago Champion is calling on the friends of the liquor traffic to come to the front with their money to help defeat the Amendment in Nebraska, and says that even though it should cost $100,000 it would be worth ten times more to the trade of the United States than it would cost.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

GARNETT, Kan., March 22, 1890.

Mrs. J. B. Lidgett of Girard takes the Cynosure and sends it to the Y. M. C. A. reading-room. She is a United Presbyterian, and dates her interest in the anti-secret reform to the first State Convention held at Monmouth, Ill., when she resided there. She is a sister of Rev. James Brown, D.D., and Rev. Thomas Brown, so well known in her church.

While spending a few days last week in Kansas City, I thought it would be a good place for an Anti-secret Christian Conference. Dr. John A. Brooks says he has gone back on Masonry and never expects to enter the lodge again. Dr. Geo. P. Hays, pastor of the largest Presbyterian church, spent half an hour before his church service answering a variety of questions handed in by his people. One question handed in a short time before Dr. Hays left for Palestine was, "Would you advise a man to join the Masons?" Dr. Hays answered emphatically in the negative, and proceeded to make two strong points against the lodges,—their sham charity, and their absorption of time and money that should be consecrated to the church.

The pastor of the Presbyterian church at Garnett, Kan., Rev. W. H. Pumphrey, made a scathing arraignment of the lodges in a sermon to his people recently. The anti-lodge sentiment is making more rapid progress than any other reform sentiment. While lecturing in this part of Kansas, I have found fruits of a lecture, by Pres. C. A. Blatchard, years ago at Garnett. Dr. W. T. Meloy, of Chicago, swung around through this part of the State last winter on a lecture tour. The people highly appreciated his eloquence; but if he had taken some of the great reform issues that are absorbing the minds of the people, he would have made a more lasting impression.

The agitation for resubmission is sweeping the State, and the most thoughtful men fear it will carry, and Kansas must fight her battle for prohibition over again,—a battle to which the former was but a skirmish on the picket line.

During the past week I have lectured at Richmond, Edgerton, Greeley, Glenlock, Welda, Beulah and Pittsburgh. This week I lectured at Girard and Berea, and Wednesday and Thursday we wound up these meetings with a Sabbath Rest Convention at Garnett, which filled the largest church both evenings, and it was well filled during the day sessions. Garnett is the best convention town I have found in the State. The dates of my meetings were published in the Statesman, which led the Seventh-day Adventists to get on my track. It seems that it is impossible for them to arrest attention except they work in connection with our meetings. They canvass towns before our meetings, putting their anti-Sabbath literature in the homes, and getting as many as possible to sign their anti-Sabbath petition; then the next evening after our meetings they give their lectures in reply. My experience is that their opposition helps our work by wakening the people to the real issue.

The Covenanter preacher at Olathe, Bro. J. H. Wylie, gave an excellent address at the convention, on "Objections to the Blair Sunday Rest Bill." He promises to be a first-class platform speaker. Other ministers who gave able addresses were E. Marshall of the Baptist church, W. H. Pumphrey and Wm. Coleman of the Presbyterian, A. O. Penniman of the Congregational, C. H. Stong, H. B. Turner, and I. C. Rankin of the United Presbyterian church.

At Berea I spoke in the Seceder or Associate Presbyterian church to a full house. These people are radical on reform questions. Their pastor, Bro. Boyd, was a fellow student with me at Monmouth College. He left that institution at the close of his junior year because of the secret society influence, and finished his course in an Iowa college. He lectures to his people and has them well educated on this issue. It was very gratifying to me to speak out emphatically at this place on the danger from secret societies. In most churches where I lecture, to say anything on this subject is like striking a bee tree,—they all come out and light on you.

M. A. GAULT.

GOD'S CAUSE MARCHING ON IN MEMPHIS.

LIFE AGAIN THREATENED.—THE RIGHT PREVAILING.

MEMPHIS, March 12, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—When I last wrote you I was in Brooklyn, N. Y. I returned home Feb. 22, and since that time I have been very busy. I had to spend one week at the bedside of my wife, who was very ill, but God has spared her, and she is now about her household duties.

When I reached home I found the Master had work for me to do. I was called on to assist in the ordination of a young man to the work of the ministry. This young man had been a student of our school; the church gave him a unanimous call. He accepted only on provision they separated themselves from the influences and associations of secret societies. They agreed so to do. Some came out at once, and others followed reluctantly.

The ordination council was composed of the following persons: Elders Brinkley, Lott, McMichael, Traver (Principal of the school) and myself, all of us anti-secret society men. In a history of twenty-two years in the city of Memphis, no such council had ever convened before. The church was addressed on the subject. The pastor, after being ordained and installed as such, was charged on the subject; and it was a glorious time and a glorious victory; for this church, composed of nearly 500 members, is in the very heart of a large society element. Every man in it was a society man, and every woman also, and when father and mother belong, the children in their cradles are members also.

One of the old ladies, a member of the church, called on me yesterday and said, "Bro. Countee, I must tell upon what I said about you a few years ago. I was a strong society woman, and I said your neck ought to be stretched, and my husband made me hush. I told him I did not believe that God had sent you to preach any such foolishness as holiness and separation from sinners. But two years ago I got tired. Two of the members of your church lived near me, and they appeared to have more religion than I had, more faith, and more grace, and they went clean and nice; and when I would talk with them they would tell me of your preaching. Finally I saw that I was not in the ring, and did not occupy as prominent a place as I thought I deserved in the society,—in fact, I was scarcely noticed; and suddenly it came over me I ought not to be noticed at all. I had no business there, and thus I awoke to the fact that I was not so good as the two sisters of your church, neither so happy, because I was mixed with the world while they were free. And now I see you were led out of the lodge to save me and our church. We owe all to you. God bless you as 'his mouth-speaker.'"

Every once in a while the devil bobs up apparently as serene as can be, but we know him every time he comes. The following reached me by mail a day or two since:

"Mr. Countee:—I send you this to warn you, so you may be on the lookout. The Masons and Odd fellows are not through with you yet. We are only abiding our time. We laid for you last Monday night. You do not hold up your infernal abuse of our orders, and we are determined to get you. The end is not far off."

Of course a document of this kind is always anonymous. But, like Paul, I read and say, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself." I realize more and more that I am not my own. I am bought with a price, and I glory in the cross of Christ my Saviour.

I want to be a full-grown man for the Master and in his service. I often feel embarrassed because of my stature and avoirdupois, but I never want to be embarrassed on account of any direliction of duty on my part for his holy cause. I am in the war, on the field ready to battle for truth and righteousness at any and all times, and I feel that the people who love God are bearing me up in their prayers.

We are surrounded on all sides with high water. The Mississippi has left its channel and, using a home expression, "It has taken to the woods," and hundreds of families from the threatened bottom lands are pouring in upon us, and it seems that times were never so dull, nor money never so scarce as just now.

OUR SCHOOL WORK.

This is now one of the most important factors in our field. All of the entire country, covering an area of nearly 300 miles, is directly influenced from the school, and indirectly 500 miles are covered, and the possibilities for further extension is very great. Whisky, beer, and all kinds of alcoholic beverages are attacked in the primary department, and its baneful influences are exposed daily in a catechetical way and impressed on the minds and hearts of 150 little ones in that department. Tobacco comes next, and then secret societies. The preachers' class is where we sow the seed of truth. The preachers among our people are the ones that shape to a great extent the destiny or character of nine-tenths of all of our people. Our minister or preachers' class has not been so large this winter as it was last because of the shortness of crops and scarceness of money. I have been using the salary my church gives me to live upon to help carry on the school work.

God has dealt with us very mercifully this winter. We have had scarcely a fortnight of real cold winter. The earth has not been frozen three inches deep. If it had been otherwise, there would have been great suffering among our people. The white people are very much interested in the school, but they give us no aid financially. The ministers come and lecture every day in the week. Three of the leading physicians of the city give gratuitous lectures to the nurse-training class, and seem to be delighted in our course of work. Our tuition is $1.25 per month, and at this low price many have been compelled to stop for lack of means. We are unable to do the good we desire, but HE KNOWS, and HE WILL, is our only hope. I must close this, but let me thank the readers of the Cynosure for $26.50 since the first of February to date. God bless all. Pray for the prosperity of our work. Yours, R. N. COUNTEE.

THE NEW JERSEY M. E. CONFERENCE MAKES A RECORD.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Mar. 21, 1890.

EDITORS CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The New Jersey Methodist Episcopal Conference has just closed its 54th annual session in this city, Bishop D. A. Goodsell presiding.

The session is said by the local press to have been "one of the busiest in the history of the conference," and would doubtless have been detained much longer but for the excellent abilities of the Bishop as a presiding officer. In fact, it is the unanimous opinion of all who were permitted to see or hear much of this excellent man, that the General Conference of 1888 not only made a very wise choice in selecting him to his present high office in the church, but that it would have been exceedingly difficult for them to have made a better choice. His words of admonition and counsel to the young ministers, whom he ordained to the offices of deacon and elder, were gems of wisdom and goodness which were lacking in nothing, not even the much needed injunction to be sure and get and stand upon the right side of the great national question of the day,—the prohibition of the liquor traffic.

An amusing incident occurred in the telegraph office the afternoon previous to the reading of the appointments which took place in the evening, richly illustrating not only the kind disposition of the Bishop, but—may we not say—also the manner in which some ministers preempt information of which they are rightfully supposed to be ignorant. A clergyman was using the telephone, telling a party that he had been appointed to a certain charge, when on turning round saw the Bishop at his elbow writing a telegram. The clergyman, it is said, came near fainting, while the Bishop quietly laid his hand on the wise brother's shoulder and kindly said, "Brother, the appointments have not yet been announced."

There were many other distinguished guests in attendance, some of whom were scarcely less popular than the Bishop himself, among whom were Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, who spoke on different topics some eight different times, Mrs. Fisk, Dr. J. M. Buckley of the Christian Advocate, Dr. Kynett of Philadelphia, the President of the Pennsylvania Non-partisan Prohibitory League, and Mrs. W. B. Osborn of New York city, who is a returned missionary to India and is now at the head of a missionary training school in that city.

The subject of temperance was often touched upon, and at the regular conference temperance meeting some pretty heavy prohibition chain-shot was used by Gen. Fisk and Dr. J. B. Graw, the editor of the New Jersey Temperance Gazette, the official organ of the prohibition cause in this State. Tobacco-using preachers were also rubbed pretty hardly, while on the last night Masonry also got a rebuff, which it is hoped will not soon be forgotten.

Bro. — Lewis of Camden, a superannuated clergyman, arose and said that the corner-stone of two new church edifices, erected within the limits of this conference during the last year, had been laid by the Freemasons. It was his opinion that this thing had ought not so to be, and it was his desire that the conference should pass a resolution against all such proceedings. A resolution was drawn up providing that the rituals of the church should be read at the laying of the corner-stones of all church edifices, and such like occasions in the future.

But of course this did not cover the ground; so Bro. Lewis again arose and requested that the word "only" be inserted, so as to make it read that "the rituals of the church only" should be read, so excluding those of all other societies. This created some stir, when the Bishop arose and said that it was his opinion that the resolution ought to be so worded, when it was carried by a small vote after some little balloting. Freemasonry was also touched at a previous period by one of the ministers, who said on the conference floor that he did not have to belong to that order. We are proud of this record of the New Jersey M. E. Conference on this subject, meager as it is, and we are looking for a much more bountiful harvest in the near future. Yours for the conflict, DEMPSTER TOWER.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been requested to answer the following questions by a friend in California:

"1. Is it right to figure up interest that accumulates on the Lord's day?"

Ans. Is it right to eat what grows on the Lord's day? We must not sow, we must not reap, on the Lord's day; but we may eat it all the same. In like manner we must not lend money, we must not collect money, on the Lord's day; but we may use what we have all the same.

"2. Is it right to collect interest on government bonds and mortgage notes?"

Ans. Is it right to take pay for labor performed for the Government? or for work done on a two-hundred acre farm? Yes, that we have a right to receive. In like manner, if we give them the use of a hundred days' labor in money, we have a right to receive a suitable compensation for the same.

"3. Is usury right or wrong?"

Ans. By the word usury we understand, at present, illegal interest; and of course it is not right to take that. But I understand the question to be: Is it right or wrong to take interest? for that is the old meaning of the word usury. Our great Father gives us instruction as to taking interest. If you have a hundred dollars, the wages for many days of toil, you may lend it to the traveling merchant, the great land owner, the great manufacturer, or to any one who uses money in gathering up riches; and you have a right to a reasonable compensation for its use. This is lawful interest. But whoever has food and raiment, or money, and lends to the widow, or fatherless, or unfortunate poor, who are starving, and exacts interest or compensation for the same, he is guilty of usury. And God will hold him accountable for grinding the face of the poor. Deut. 23: 19, 20; Matt. 25: 27; Luke 19: 23. Yours truly, S. F. PORTER.

PITH AND POINT.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

I am thankful that the portraits and testimonies of Washington and his Co-patriots are printed in such convenient form. Such evidence will have a good influence against the evil lodge system and show that some great minds detest the silly works of Freemasonry, and keep some sensible young men from joining the lodge. The snow blockade in the Siskyou Mountains in Northern California, and also between Rogue River and Umpqua River in this State (Oregon), has caused much delay in mail matter, as the cars were stopped for near two months, and mail (after several weeks) was transferred over the high mountain passes on sleighs and wagons and taken on cars on the opposite side.—J. M. CRUMRINE, Woodville, Oregon.

COME OUT OF BABYLON.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You are much appreciated in my household for your brave and grand work of opposition to the secret lodge system with all of its anti-Christ abominations and all the evil roots of wickedness that it has planted. It is my conviction that if Christian churches will cast out this evil root of anti-Christ and leave it with the apostate church from which it emanated, that it will be shorn of much of its power to harm, and will be a cleansing of the sanctuary of the Lord. Has not its leech-hold on the Christian church, on pastor and parishioner, a tendency to lead all alike down into the condition the tribes of Israel were before their captivity, when idolatry prevailed, and when the prophet Hosea said, "like people like priest," Hosea 4: 9, and when the prophet Jeremiah said, "and my people loved to have it so," Jer. 5: 31? With love and kindly regards for pastor and people in all evangelical churches, for the honor of Christ's crown and kingdom, and for the good of souls, pray you in love to obey the injunction of Revelation, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues," Rev. 18: 4.—WATERMAN.

LECTURE WORK CALLED FOR.

I love the Christian Cynosure more and more because it stands out boldly against all modern evils and abominations, and I believe it does more to build up Christ's kingdom than any other newspaper that I have any knowledge of. As long as it keeps up such a solid front, and defends the right and opposes the wrong, God will abundantly bless its mission. Could not some one of your agents, or some minister or advocate of reform, be sent to this wicked little city to labor somewhat in the interest of reform and Christianity? We have 4,000 inhabitants, 27 saloons, 2 Masonic lodges, 2 Odd-fellow lodges, 1 Royal Arcanum, 1 Tontii, 1 Modern Woodman, 2 United Workman, 1 Knights of Pythias, 1 G. A. R., 1 Sons of Veterans and 1 Temple of Honor. There are many infidels, and the churches are worm-eaten by the several lodges and fairly stink of whisky, beer, tobacco, etc.—HERMAN L. GLOEGE, Monroe, Wis.

A GOOD VETERAN TESTIMONY.

I have had the bright pages of the Cynosure from its first number, and it has testified to the truth. As my brother was one of the Morganites, I was led to a thorough investigation of secretism. I know what it is in courts, politics, churches and in business life. It is the bane in every department of life. I distribute my papers among friends and neighbors and have some fifteen individuals as yearly subscribers, and while I live I purpose to pray that God will send this monster back to his own home.—JOSIAH SHAW, Durand, Wis.

LITERATURE.

The April Missionary Review has a wonderfully interesting story of the opening of Korea to the Gospel by Rev. John Ross who had a most prominent place in it. The conversion of a Korean, who by accident was brought to a condition where he was willing to work upon a translation of the Bible. While reading Luke's description of the words and works of our Lord he was converted as another proof of the power of the Word. The address of Mrs. W. F. Armstrong, on life in Burmah, is a thrilling narrative. A letter from Dr. Pierson speaks of the addresses of Archdeacon Farrar on the subject of missions, and points out some of the inaccuracies of the archdeacon. Rev. Edward Storow contributes an article on Foreign missions in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Rev. D. L. Leonard gives us a glance at Mormonism in Utah under the suggestive title, "Babylon is falling." A. P. Happer, D.D., explodes the idea that Thibet is the only country where Protestant missionaries are not preaching the Gospel. An extensive extract is taken from the Morning Post (London) of a recent date regarding the revolution in Uganda where the missionaries were killed. The departments of general missionary intelligence and of missionary correspondence are full of interest.

The Statesman for March presents in an article on Tariff, by W. T. Mills, the proposal that this national affair be taken out of politics and given to a commission to settle. What will the old parties have left to quarrel about in that case? and is not Congress a large commission on the business? Pres. Beaton, of Redfield College, S. Dakota, writes earnestly for the poor man's right to the accumulations of labor, which will be a great question in our "Coming Politics." Prof. Craig, of Perdue University, continues his discussion of the "Organization of Federal Government." D. D. Thompson assumes to write a "History of Labor." Other articles which have much interest are "Drainage and the Chicago River" and "Manual Training and the Way to Get it."

Bulletin number 7 from the University of Illinois, Agricultural Experiment Station devoted to the biology of ensilage and experiments with oats, is bound together with number 8, experiments with corn, is full of interest to practical farmers.

OBITUARY.

REV. ELI TAPLEY was born in Lowndes county, Miss., May 9, 1839, and died in the same county and State March 2, 1890.

Mr. Tapley's parents removed to Alabama when he was 8 years of age. His early youth was noted for industry and decision of character. He professed religion when 17 years of age at a night service in Mount Nebo Methodist church in Alabama. He was eight miles from home, but hastened back that night to tell the joyful news to his mother. She, knowing his decision of character, handed him the Bible the following day and he conducted family worship. He united with the Asbury Methodist church in Alabama, and was soon appointed class-leader, which office he filled for several years with faithfulness and zeal. Soon after his conversion he began to search the Scriptures with new eagerness, and often told with what beauty and sweetness and glorious heavenly light they seemed to open up before his mind. He always loved the pure Word of God and prized it as worthy of frequent perusal above all literature. He was licensed to exhort in 1861, and labored in different localities among both white and colored people as Sabbath-school teacher and exhorter, until he was licensed to preach a few years afterward.

He steadfastly resisted every effort to induce him to take any part in the war of the rebellion, being a firm friend of the whole Union. He distinctly remembered what his mother told him of a conversation between his grandfather Francis Adams and John Quincy Adams, who were relatives, which was held when the latter visited his grandfather and uncle Samuel Adams. J. Q. Adams told them that the Freemasons had certainly murdered Wm. Morgan, and spoke of the wickedness of that order. Mrs. Nancy Adams Tapley, Mr. Tapley's mother, always opposed Masonry and taught her son it was wrong; but during the war this order made great boasts of its protective benefits, and he was made to believe that the Masonry of that time and place was altogether different from that which had murdered Morgan, and which he knew to be wrong. Thus deceived, and also advised by an aged Methodist minister in whom he had confidence, he united with the order. He was disgusted, but was informed that it was still better and better farther on, and that it would be of great advantage in understanding the Scriptures. He took the second and also the third or Master Mason's degree. He was especially disgusted to find that every Master Mason was sworn to keep a Master Mason's secrets, murder and treason excepted. Finding Freemasonry, as he expressed it in his own words, "opposed to justice in church and state, and to the religion of Christ," he withdrew from the order and publicly renounced and exposed it. Through the pulpit, the press, the sale and distribution of reform literature, and lectures, he earnestly warned all against secret orders. This created much excitement and brought upon him great persecution. Guns were fired near his home. Threats, curses and slanders innumerable were heaped upon him, and at one time his house was stoned and his fence torn down to a considerable distance. Before he renounced Freemasonry he sat down and counted the cost and was never heard to regret that step, but was often cheered by the thanks of those whom he had saved from the gins of oath-bound secrecy.

He united with the Congregational church, and was ordained to preach after he moved into Mississippi and labored as a home missionary among the colored people of that State and Alabama for many years: a part of the time without any assistance, and part under the appointment of the Christian Commission, and for some years past under the A. M. A.

He was married July 4, 1865, to Miss M. A. Feemster, daughter of Rev. S. J. Feemster, and grand-daughter of Rev. Wm. C. Davis.

From youth the temperance cause found in him a warm advocate. Believing in no compromise with the devil, he was always outspoken against whatever he thought was wrong.

In the last ten years of his life he often endured great physical suffering, but resolutely prosecuted both his labors through the week and his pulpit and Sabbath-school work whenever it was possible. He leaves a wife and one daughter and four sons.

When one spoke to him during his last sickness of the extension of the work against the secret orders, he said calmly, "God has spoken against them." Exulting in the near prospect of heaven, he sang, "Home, sweet home! My long sought home," and repeated with rapture:

"The glory of God, the city of light,
The home in heaven, Oh, how bright."

At another time, looking upward with the light of the celestial city on his countenance, he exclaimed, "Heaven! through Christ!" To those who were acquainted with his life and heard from the pulpit his exulting descriptions of the glory and victory of the redeemed in heaven, the following lines will be deemed a fitting close to this sketch:

"Oh! well it is forever—
Oh! well forever more:
My nest hung in no forest
Of all this death-doomed shore.
I have borne scorn and hatred,
I have borne wrong and shame;
Earth's proud ones have reproached me,
For Christ's thrice blessed name.
Where God's seals set the fairest,
They've stamped their foulest brand;
But judgment shines like noon-day
In Immanuel's land."

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

The following are among the papers and addresses that have been promised for the Chicago Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System, to be held April 22 and 23, 1890, in the First M. E. church, corner Washington and Clark streets:

Secret Societies.—A general discussion of the whole subject, by Prof. Henry C. King, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Secret Lodges Out of Harmony with Christian Churches.—By Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, D. D., pastor Reformed Presbyterian church, Denison, Kansas.

Subject to be Announced.—By Rev. P. S. Henson, D. D., pastor First Baptist church, Chicago.

Secret Orders and Revivals.—By Col. George R. Clark, Superintendent Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago.

College Secret Societies.—By C. S. Bullock, Theological Student, Evanston, Ill., and by ex-President A. A. Smith, Northwestern College, Naperville, Ill.

Jesuitism as a Secret Oath-Bound Organization.—By Rev. John Lee, pastor M. E. church, Lockport, Ill.

Civil Government and Secret Societies.—By Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor Earnest Christian and Free Methodist, North Chili, New York.

Have Our Best Men been Masons?—By Prof. Joseph Moore, Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

Secret Beneficial Societies.—By Rev. W. P. McNary, D. D., pastor United Presbyterian church, Tarkio, Mo.

What is the Duty of the Church Concerning Secret Societies?—By Prof. C. M. Esbjorn, Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill.

Mormonism as an Oath-Bound Organization.—By Rev. Thomas D. Wallace, D. D., pastor Eighth Presbyterian church, Chicago.

The Relation of the Minor Secret Orders to the Christian Church.—By Rev. Halleck Floyd, D. D., bishop of the United Brethren church, Dublin, Ind.

The Jesuit Policy.—By Prof. Joseph L. Daniels, Olivet College, Olivet, Mich.

Subject to be Announced.—By Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., pastor First Congregational church, Chicago.

Unity of the Ancient Mysteries and Freemasonry.—By Prof. David McDill, D. D., United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio.

The Exaltation of Christ, as Lord and Saviour, Our Purpose.—By President C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill.

RAILROAD RATES TO THE CONFERENCE.

To every friend who will attend the April meeting:—If you think that you may possibly attend the Conference on April 22 and 23, you ought to inquire of your railroad station agent whether he has on hand the blank receipts, which will show that you have paid your full fare to Chicago, and hence are entitled to the return at one-third rate. It would be better to inquire AT ONCE of your agent, so that if he has no blanks he may get them. No reduction will be given by the railroads unless you have this certificate. If you are on some little branch railroad there is all the greater necessity for attending to this matter at once.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS

at the Chicago Conference, April 22 and 23, can be secured at reasonable rates either before you come or after arriving in the city. A room only can be had at the Palmer and other first class hotels at $1 per day. Good rooms can be secured near this office, and also near the Hall in which the Convention is to be held, for 50 cents per day. You can secure your room in advance by addressing this office, and remitting the amount you wish to pay for your room for one day. If you secure your room in advance you will have full directions sent you so that you can proceed at once to your hotel from the train. As the time for the Conference is near, please let us hear from you soon.

THE PETITION to Congress for the suppression of the un-American oath-bound societies condemned by Washington in his Farewell Address should be pushed with all enthusiasm these pleasant days of spring. There is time for several weeks' work before adjournment of Congress. Notice will be given in these columns when to return them. Meantime let all work.

There can be but one moral system of the Universe, whose author and executive is God. And for this plain reason, that a second Infinite, if distinct, must displace the first. And the badge and binding-force of this moral system, the very bottom on which right and wrong rest, is worship, which binds mind to the God of mind. Now the one point which we make is that these secret societies, by substituting another worship for the true, in effect displace God from his own moral system, and so destroy it; that, in short, horrible as it may seem, there is no obligatory right and wrong in a lodge!

THE BIBLE AND THE SCHOOL.

A good New England brother raises the question whether the Cynosure is not departing from its proper course in the discussion of prohibition, Romanism, Bible in schools, etc. We hardly agree with him. Nothing that concerns the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is foreign to the work we have in hand. As for Mormonism, we have clearly proved, both from its record and from its principles, that it is thoroughly Masonic. Prohibition we have shown to be most endangered by lodge influences. Romanism is controlled by the Jesuits, the oldest and most despotic of the secret societies, if we except the groups of anarchists and nihilists, which have been known as Internationals. The Bible-in-school question is a lodge question, as we endeavored to show last week. As it is important that this be clearly understood, we return to it.

The three judges of the Wisconsin Supreme Court say in their unanimous opinion:

"The question seems to narrow down to this: Is the reading of the Bible in the schools, not merely of selected passages therefrom, but the whole of it, sectarian instruction of the pupils, in view of the facts already mentioned, that the Bible contains numerous doctrinal passages upon some of which the peculiar creed of almost every religious sect is based, and that such passages may reasonably be understood to inculcate the doctrines predicated upon them? An affirmative answer to the question seems unavoidable."

We argue that if the reading of the Bible is "sectarian instruction," the religion founded on that instruction is sectarian, and therefore not the true. To get a true religion, therefore, we are compelled either to wait for a new one to be revealed, or invent one, or accept something beside Christianity, which is already invented: and there is none better of this sort than the "higher religion," which Masonic writers tell us includes all the rest, and in which "all men can agree." This is all there is left us.

The decision is Masonic because it deals with the Christian religion exactly as does Freemasonry. If we are to oppose the Masonic religion, we may not pass by the decision of courts which would, if possible, establish that religion by law.

But this decision cannot stand, not only because it is contrary to truth and fact, but because it is contrary to that agreement of intelligent public opinion, the vox populi, which becoming the vox Dei, settles finally all questions of human law. The decision of the Wisconsin court is the opinion of three judges, fallible men. Their successors may disagree with them and overturn their work. The best expression of American opinion is against them.

Let us begin with that opinion stated in terms of law. The fundamental constitution of the territory of the State of Wisconsin is the Ordinance of 1787, which says:

"ART. III. Religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged."

This was adopted by Congress before there was any United States Constitution, and no State court or legislature can repeal it. The constitution of the State of Ohio is of like sentiment:

"Religion, morality and knowledge being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship and encouraging schools and the means of instruction."

Of the same tenor is the constitution of New Hampshire:

"As morality and piety rightly grounded on evangelical principles will give the best and greatest security to government . . . the people of this State have a right to empower, and do hereby fully empower, the Legislature to authorize, from time to time, the several towns, parishes, bodies corporate or religious societies within the State, to make adequate provision at their own expense for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion and morality."

A decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1824 says:

"Christianity is part of the common law of this State. It is not proclaimed by the commanding voice of any human superior, but expressed in the calm and mild accents of customary law. Its foundations are broad and strong and deep; they are laid in the authority, the interest, the affections of the people."

If we appeal to individual sentiment, we must begin with him whose deliberate and careful opinions have—and may they ever have!—the force of law. Washington, in his Farewell Address, says:

"Of all dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens."

A friend of Rufus Choate, examining the private library of that great lawyer, expressed surprise that while he found on the shelves not a single copy of the U. S. Constitution, there were no less than seven different editions of the Greek Testament. "Ah," responded Mr. Choate, "you forget that the Constitution of my country is in every one of them." John Adams, the orator of the Revolution and second President, may certainly speak for us on this subject:

"Religion and virtue are the only foundations, not only of republicanism and of all free governments, but of social felicity under all governments and in all combinations of human society."

As an interpreter of law James Kent, Chief Justice of New York, and Chancellor of the State, may be ranked with the Wisconsin court. He wrote:

"The general diffusion of the Bible is the most effectual way to civilize and humanize mankind; to purify and exalt the general system of public morals; to give efficacy to the just precepts of international and municipal law; to enforce the observance of prudence, temperance, justice and fortitude, and to improve all the relations of domestic and social life."

Joseph Story, for thirty-four years judge of the U. S. Supreme Court, and commentator of the Constitution, has left this word:

"One of the beautiful traits of our municipal jurisprudence is, that Christianity is a part of the common law from which it seeks its sanctions of right and by which it endeavors to regulate its doctrine."

John McLean, also of the Supreme Court, and the only member of that body who dissented from the infamous Dred Scott decision, is no less emphatic:

"The superior civilization, moderation and justice of modern times is attributable to the benign influence of Christianity. The ancient republics were destitute of this power. They were united by military powers, by the glory which arises from the butchery of our race and from acts of injustice, rapine and plunder. Physical force was the abiter of right and the dispenser of justice. But now there is an element of moral power which more or less pervades all civilized nations and which has its foundation in the Bible."

Benjamin Rush, the father of American temperance, and the good angel of the yellow fever plague of 1793, has left his testimony:

"That the Bible contains more knowledge necessary to man in his present state than any other book in the world." "That knowledge is most desirable and religious instruction most useful when imparted in early life." "That the Bible when not read in schools is seldom read in any subsequent period of life."

The illustrious name of Webster, the expounder of the Constitution, whose interpretation of national law was equal to the decision of courts, pronounced this grand eulogium upon Christianity as the law of our land in respect to religion. The judgment of the Wisconsin court is contemptible in comparison:

"The general principles and public policy are sometimes established by constitutional provisions, sometimes by legislative enactments, sometimes by judicial decisions, and sometimes by general consent. But however they may be established, there is nothing that we look for with more certainty than this general principle, that Christianity is part of the law of the land. This was the case among the Puritans of New England, the Episcopalians of the Southern States, the Pennsylvania Quakers, the Baptists, the mass of the followers of Whitefield and Wesley, and the Presbyterians; all brought and all adopted this great truth, and all have sustained it. And where there is any religious sentiment amongst men at all, this sentiment incorporates itself with the law. Everything declares it. The massive cathedral of the Catholic; the Episcopalian church, with its lofty spire pointing heavenward; the plain temple of the Quaker; the log church of the hardy pioneer of the wilderness; the mementoes and memorials around and about us; the consecrated graveyards, their tombstones and epitaphs, their silent vaults, their mouldering contents; all attest it. The dead prove it as well as the living. The generation that are gone before speak to it, and pronounce it from the tomb. We feel it. All, all, proclaim that Christianity, general, tolerant Christianity, Christianity independent of sects and parties, that Christianity to which the sword and the fagot are unknown, general, tolerant Christianity, is the law of the land."

Such a declaration as that of Commissioner Smart of Ohio in 1875 must not be overlooked:

"If there should exist in any community a school which exerts no moral influence and in which no moral instruction is given, such school is an injury to that community and to all communities, since the power of influence reaches out without limit."

Nor do we forget the words of eminent ministers of the Gospel. Dr. George B. Cheever yet lives to confirm this word written years ago:

"Now we affirm that no nation on earth has more indisputably secured and entrenched itself in this right and duty of self-preservation by the freedom and protection of religious teaching under the Christian religion than our own. Both the duty and the right of religious instruction, and the perpetual protection of its freedom are in our constitution and our laws so plainly imbedded and inwoven, that any judge or superintendents or boards of education, whether town, or State, or national, undertaking to expel the Bible and the Lord's prayer, or either, from the place they have always occupied as fixtures of instruction, from the knowledge or admitted practice of the children, do themselves violate the law, and lay themselves open to the penalty. They set the example of such violation; and, therefore, whenever and wherever the cause is tried, the Supreme Courts will have to decide that, by the Constitution, our children are to be protected forever from such an invasion of their guaranteed rights. The invasion is a crime against both our public policy and our private interests. This security of the rights of our children, and this shield in the Constitution over them, ought to be our national pride and boast; and if it were not in the Constitution, it ought to be there, so plainly that he who runs may read."

Dr. Talmage says:

"Put the Bible in the school. Palsied be the hand that would take the Bible from the college and the school. Educate only a man's head and you make him an infidel. Educate a man's heart and you make him a fanatic. Educate them both together and you have the noblest work of God. An educated mind without moral principle is a ship without a helm, a rushing rail train without brakes or reversing rod to control the speed."

Dr. McAllister of Pittsburgh has written much and ably on this topic, but nothing better than the following:

"In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary we find this definition: 'Education is properly to draw forth, and implies not so much the communication of knowledge, as the discipline of the intellect, the establishment of the principles, and the regulation of the heart.' If education, then, lies within the sphere of the state's action; if the state undertakes to educate children in its schools, it must employ such means as will enable it best to establish the principles and regulate the hearts of its scholars. It must develop and cultivate, not only the intellectual, but also the moral faculties of its youth. Can it do this without the aid of the Bible and the Christian religion? The definition above given from Webster is founded on the nature of humanity. It would be a misuse of words to speak of the education of a mere animal. There must be a rational and moral nature to admit of education, properly so called. To build up a system of education in which there is no reference to moral principles is naturally to deny the moral nature of those who are to be educated."

Prof. George H. Gould, D.D., of Amherst College, wrote nothing more truly than this:

"There is no book which strikes so directly at the foundation of all true government, the self-government of the individual. Indeed, it is from this book that the world has received its first just notions of human liberty. . . . This free Protestant Bible, to-day, more than all other forces beneath the sun, is steadily preparing the way for the downfall ultimately of the last fabric of political despotism that now curses the earth."

There are testimonies from other lands also which add force to the foregoing. "There are no politics like those in the Bible," wrote John Milton, first of poets, Secretary of State for England in the notable days of Cromwell. An eminent political writer has declared John Calvin to be the founder of the American Republic, not because of his theology, but because in the renowned church at Geneva were so clearly developed in the minds of the Puritan refugees the rights of opinion and freedom of conscience. Hume, the infidel, bitterly confessed that to these men of the Bible England was indebted for all the liberty in her constitution. Macauley has written more eloquently of the same men and their time:

"Then were first proclaimed those mighty principles which have since worked their way into the depths of the American forest; have roused Greece from the slavery of two thousand years; and from one end of Europe to the other have kindled an unquenchable fire in the hearts of the oppressed."

The eloquent De Tocqueville, the ablest political writer of his time, adds to this cumulating evidence:

"It is religion that has given rise to the Anglo-American communities. In the United States religion is blended with the national customs and with all those feelings that one's native land inspires; this gives it a special influence. . . . Religion, which among the Americans never directly interferes with the government of society, should be regarded as the first of their political institutions which singularly promotes the exercise of liberty."

In these extracts we have quaffed deep from an exhaustless fountain. If the stains of the Wisconsin decision can be washed out from American records, it will be because these sentiments prevail in American hearts. Each of the three judges who signs this stultifying decision thinks it necessary to put in a pettifogging plea to sustain it, for it is most evident that it is too untruthful and dishonest to stand alone. These special pleadings show under what restraint these unworthy men are laboring. They fear the Roman Catholic vote; but it is beyond controversy that the Romanists care little about the question of this or that book in our public schools—it is the school system itself which they wish to overthrow. The Bible question is but an episode. Indeed, in the early part of this century, the New Testament was read in the Catholic schools of Germany; and in the preface to one edition is the direction of Pope Pius IV. given in the year 1778 requiring the daily reading of the Scriptures in Catholic schools. This book was known as the "Schul-bibel" (School Bible).

It is significant of some hidden power working to overthrow our American institutions, when at the moment we are running up the flag above our schools with shallow huzzas, the very foundations of our school system is being undermined. While we are making laws to enforce the teaching in our English tongue of the primary and indispensable parts of an education, the first principles of that education are being repudiated. But we cannot think this decision will be allowed to dry upon the records of Wisconsin. To declare the Bible and its religion sectarian and untrue is a falsehood too outrageous to common sense and subversive of American principles to be allowed to stand.

—The ladies' prayer meeting of the First Congregational church last week, which had for its object of prayer the April Conference of Christians against the lodge, was an eventful and successful meeting. It was the first of the kind in the city, and some were amazed at it. Mrs. E. A. Cook presided. There was the utmost freedom and deep interest. Several spoke earnestly against the lodge, while a few were in its favor. We trust it may be the beginning of much prayer and inquiry on the part of Christian women.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. Dr. Lewis Davis, the faithful counselor of the United Brethren denomination, honored as an able theologian and beloved as a noble man, died Sabbath evening, March 23, in Dayton, O., aged 77 years. He was twenty-five years president of Otterbein University at Westerville, O., and fifteen years senior professor in the Union Biblical Seminary.

—Our old friend John Sleeper of Senecaville, Ohio, is a worker who would rejoice the soul of John Quincy Adams, if that heroic defender of the right of petition were yet upon the floor of Congress. Bro. Sleeper has secured about five hundred names to the petition to Congress for the illegalizing of the secret orders, such as condemned by Washington in his Farewell Address. That is a grand record. We doubt if it has been equalled in the history of our reform work. But why should we not have a hearty emulation in circulating this document. While Congress sits work for it.

—Rev. Eli Tapley, whose obituary appears elsewhere, was one of our oldest and firmest friends in the South. He was one of the first, if not the very first, to reveal the Masonic oaths after our present effort against the lodge was inaugurated. With the aid of Rev. S. C. Feemster, his brother-in-law, his revelation was published in 1868 or 9 under the title, "Satan's Cable Tow." For over twenty years he has borne a consistent Christian testimony against the lodge, and has in every way possible to his limited means aided the reform, and is now gone to meet the reward of a faithful servant.

—Mr. John Brown of Madera, Cal., whose advertisement for colonists for that State have appeared from time to time in the Cynosure, is in Chicago. He will be here until the 10th inst., arranging for an excursion for all the patrons of his colony, and may be addressed at Room 21, No. 59 Dearborn street. It gives us pleasure to recommend Mr. Brown to all who have a home in California in view. He has been known to us by correspondence, and the warm commendations of his many friends are all verified by a brief personal acquaintance. The raisin culture, which he is hopefully developing, will offset the vicious wineries which have been earliest planted, but which must shrink before the onward march of temperance sentiment.

—After eighteen years' service as president of Geneva College, Dr. H. H. George has notified the College Board his purpose to resign at the end of the present collegiate year. Some time since he gave the trustees notice that he must soon close his labors with the institution on account of his health. The Board on receiving notice of his final withdrawal in June, adopted a paper stating their grateful acknowledgment of Dr. George's services for the College, having undertaken the charge when it had few students and no endowment. It has now fine buildings, a large endowment, and an excellent reputation for its educational advantages. The Board emphatically refutes the statement that the difficulty attending last commencement had any influence in the retirement of the President. They justify him fully in his conduct as an executive officer on that occasion, and express warm sympathy with himself and his family in the necessity which compels him to retire. Dr. George has made as great a reputation as teacher as he has as executive officer; and outside of college work he has generously and nobly given aid to various reforms that stand for a pure church and a free state. Especially has his aid been given to the work of the N. C. A., of which he was two terms president. He has several times given powerful addresses at our national conventions. We trust that he will be able to do no less in the future for us than in the past.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Prohibition notes—The Congregational churches of Boston and the Negro question—Municipal suffrage for women—The society of Good Fellows in trouble—Some interesting disclosures—Cheering words from a W. C. T. Union.

In Laconia, N. H., the Law and Order League has been raiding the beer establishments, one of which was owned by a man named Chamberlin, who has been in the beer business in this same town ever since 1862, and now has the novel sensation of appearing in court for the first time. May the good work go on, and never stop till the Christian sentiment of mankind has blotted out the whole nefarious business, whether beer, whisky, or alcohol, masquerading in the guise of patent medicines. The southern California White Ribbon makes a good point in reference to the oft-repeated falsehood that prohibition in the State of Maine is a failure. Even the greatest enemies of the cause do not pretend that there is any liquor manufactured now in Maine, whatever the quantity may be that is smuggled over the border from States where it is manufactured. It must necessarily follow, then, that with just such a law in every State, and just such a failure, there would be none manufactured in the United States, which would certainly be practical prohibition.

I do not know whether the Congregationalist feels obliged to Senator Morse, of Massachusetts, for defending Congregationalism against Mrs. Hoffman's attack in her recent Washington address, by saying that the Congregational churches do not endorse the anti-prohibition attitude of their Beacon Hill organ; but it ought at least to set the editorial staff of that paper to thinking whether it is good policy to continue to antagonize the principles of so large a portion of its constituents, and in every question of reform play the part of the obstinate mule which persists in heading the wrong way. But two such stalwart sermons as were preached last Sunday from Congregational pulpits on the Negro question, one by Rev. David Gregg, of the Park Street Church, and the other by Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, are certainly cheering indications that the church of the Puritans is not dead, even though it has too often seemed to be sleeping. Both were strong and earnest appeals for justice for the Negro on the broadest humanitarian ground, and not as a question of partisan politics, but of religion, which, as Dr. Gregg finely said, "was to put it into the highest possible sphere, requiring us in the settlement of it to lock hands with God." It is also refreshing to see clergymen of note, like Dr. Gordon, giving his unqualified endorsement to the work of the Salvation Army, and promising to do all he could before the Legislature to give it the freedom of the streets, as he did at a late meeting held at Tremont Temple in the interests of this organization. Last Sunday was also the commencement of Rev. Rolland D. Grant's new city pastorate, which begins under very bright auspices; for though the weather was unfavorable he was greeted by one of the largest audiences that has ever gathered within the walls of Harvard Street Church, which, by the way, is among the oldest Baptist churches in Boston.

The question of municipal suffrage for women has again come up to have its annual hearing. Of course nobody expects anything new to be brought forward on either side. The old stock arguments on the remonstrants' side have been so often repeated they have grown stale, and on the other no improvement can be made on what Theodore Parker said fifty years ago: "Looking at it as a matter of pure right I know no reason why woman should not be a voter. I do not see how I can shut myself into political privileges and shut women out, and do both in the name of inalienable right."

The Royal Society of Good Fellows are in much trouble over the action of the Supreme Secretary, Dr. Wilson, in calling for an extra assessment. A mass meeting was lately held in Boston, at which a majority advocated seceding to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Very bitter

THE HOME.

MOTHER'S ROOM.

'Tis the cheeriest room in the household,
With window-seat battered and bruised,
Where the carpets, the chairs, and the table
Are never too good to be used.

Here little ones come with their sorrows,
Or babble with laughter and noise,
Bring sweetest caresses and kisses,
And scatter their books and their toys.

There's an unceasing patter of small feet,
And opening and shutting of doors;
And the room that was sweet and garnished
Is covered with spoils and stores.

In the dawn of a summer morning
There's a scampering down the stairs,
And every one knows they are coming,
They whisper so loud their affairs.

And when the day's lesson is over,
They come, with their chatter and song,
To the sunniest room, where dear mother
And all that is lovely belong.

If the threads of their lives get tangled,
She quietly straightens them out,
And gathers them, sweetly united,
Her little low rocker about.

Dear mother, o'er all presiding,
O honored and beautiful queen,
You gather your loving subjects
With a grace that is rarely seen.

Then who, to keep spotless and tidy
The carpets and windows and doors,
Would lose the sweet laughter of childhood,
And love from such beautiful stores.

THE TAKING-CARE-AS-YOU-GO SOCIETY.

"I think we need a taking-care-as-you-go society," said Aunt Azubah as she folded the morning's paper and laid it by Uncle Jonathan's seat, in readiness for him when he came back from his regular morning walk, which extended to the end of the street and back.

"What kind of a society?" I asked as I took the duster from its bag, which had been carefully embroidered with the word "Dusters," so that its use could not possibly be mistaken. Aunt Azubah replied to my question by repeating her first remark and adding:

"I have just been reading that they are going to start a 'White Cross Society' here; now, that is all very well as you look at it in one light, but it is my opinion that they have organized the life out of Christian energy in this town; nobody acts, or thinks, or reads to himself. It's always in company, always under exact drill, and to the music of the drum, if not to that of the fife, and the end is always sounded with a trumpet. I said the end, I should have said the beginning, perhaps, for there's nothing at the end in most cases."

Aunt Azubah sighed as she finished, and there was a silence of a few minutes which was broken by my asking, "And what would you have your new society do?"

"I'd have it do individual work; each member should begin on his own account and work as God directs him; but, first of all, I'd have this society formed right at home. Now this 'White Cross Society,' as I understand it, is to set up and encourage a high standard of personal purity; but what is the good of societies if they don't teach that the mother is the first and most powerful teacher, or should be, of purity. It is alone with the mother, with her hand upon its head, when the child must hear those words which will make a lasting impression upon its young heart and mind, and must bear in some degree of strength upon all its after life. Then there is the taking care each day of the children in the way of purity. Pure manners and words must be looked out for in the boys as well as in the girls. Yes, I repeat we should not see the necessity of so many different organizations to keep the morals of the community at par, if the home guardians did not so often neglect their duty."

Uncle Jonathan just then came in and took up his paper. It was not long before his eyes lighted upon the "White Cross" paragraph.

"Well, Azubah, there's another society," he began. "I can't see what time is to be left for anything but taking care of organizations. I've made up my mind that most of the women are wanting speres."

"Spheres, you mean, Jonathan," said his wife.

"Well, speres or spheres, just as you like as to that, but it's all one to me. I never took the dictionary as a separate study, and perhaps it's a providence that I was blessed with a wife who seems to know it by heart; but to come back to this new society, these women do seem to be stirring up something all the time. I got my education at my mother's knee—my education upon purity. I've had my temptations in life; I met them before I got out of boyhood, but always my mother's voice came between me and sin. My mother taught her boys as well as her girls. I don't believe mothers always do that. I can't see why they don't, either, but I've heard many a man speak of this fault in their training. Then, as I was saying, women seem to be looking out for spe—spheres; my mother wasn't one of that kind, thank God for it! Her sphere was born with her; it belonged to her; she found it just where she was, and it's my opinion that each woman will find her spe—spheres (you will excuse my tripping, Azubah) without forming societies or stirring up the town for it. We want women for the great places who have been willing to stay in the quiet ones and be happy there!"

Uncle Jonathan became interested in other news and was silent.—Intelligencer.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

A boy came in from school a few days ago, and rushing up to the sitting-room held up to his mother's view a four-bladed pocket-knife.

"See, mother," he exclaimed, "what a splendid bargain I made at recess to-day! I traded off twelve marbles with Willie Bradley for this new knife!"

"I hope you didn't cheat," said the mother, as the boy gave a chuckle of delight over his new treasure.

He made no reply. The words of his mother evidently did not carry much weight with them. After he had passed out of the room the mother smiled, and said to the visitor, "That boy is the shrewdest fellow in a bargain you ever saw. I have no fears as to his making his way in the world."

That mother did not think of the enormity of shadow-playing. The boy is the father of the man. It was only a small beginning of a dishonest manhood.

The facts of the case, which the mother should have immediately inquired into, were these: The boy who had driven this sharp bargain had taken advantage of a younger and weaker schoolmate. He depreciated the value of the knife, and had over-estimated the value of the marbles with which he had made the exchange. It was a clear case of fraudulent dealing, yet the matter was passed over as a trivial circumstance, and its evil influence left upon the mind of the young trader. It is the large aggregate of little things that make up the sum of character. A mother should inculcate in the hearts of her children the necessity of being honest, not because it is the best policy, for Bishop Whately says that he who is honest because it is the best policy is no better than a rogue, but because it is right and Christ commands us to deal justly with all.

In the first place, a mother must be strictly honest and just herself. The friar who preached honestly with a stolen goose in his sleeve, did not make much impression upon his audience. There are some mothers who drive shrewd bargains in their household management, take an advantage of those whom they employ to do different kinds of work, and try to get the better of those they deal with. These examples are not lost upon the children. They are quick to notice inconsistencies. Some mothers are careless about paying little debts, putting them off from one time to another, necessitating great inconvenience to the persons they owe. What may seem only a small sum to the employer, is oftentimes the money for the loaf that keeps a poor family from going hungry. Be very careful about little things in your own character as well as that of your children. Teach them to deal justly not only in matters of money, but in everything that regards the welfare of their companions, and they will be just to their fellow-men in after years.—Evangelist.

EARLY FIRMNESS.

A beautiful boy of 3, who had been most carefully trained, was, on the coming of warm weather, given the liberty of the yard. A little neighbor, who had not been so carefully reared, often came to play with him. The mother watched the little friend closely, to decide with justice whether he was a fit playmate for her child. She saw nothing wrong, and gradually the little fellows became firm friends. Drawing nearer one day than usual, she was startled at hearing foul words, words unfit for any ears, from the mouth of the boy. Snatching up her child, she sent the offender home, telling him he could never come into the yard until the evil habit was conquered.

Then came the slow and laborious extracting of the poison; for she discovered, to her horror, that her boy's innocent lips would sometimes repeat the loathsome words, though he tried hard to forget them. Weeks passed, and the child, protected by his mother's vigilance, and obedience, had again the blessing of pure speech; and, more, he had gained by the dangerous experience a knowledge of the evil, and a firm conviction that he must avoid it. One day, in the absence of his mother, he was again visited by his friend. They played happily for some time, when he was seen to run suddenly and swiftly to the house. When asked the cause the child said simply: "Willie said a bad word, and I had better come in." Great was the mother's reward for her painstaking care, and great was her rejoicing over its fruits.—Babyhood.

NOT A SLAVE TO HER CHILDREN.

A lady visited a pleasant home where there were two daughters, aged sixteen and eighteen respectively. There was no servant in this house, yet the mother had plenty of time to chat with her guest; she did not rise till breakfast was ready, and, in fact, seemed seldom to visit the kitchen, or trouble about the meals, while everything came unto the table in good style. Both of the young ladies were educated, could play the piano well, and were, as the term goes, "accomplished."

The guest, marveling a little at the novel arrangement of the household, one day questioned the hostess.

"My friend," said the latter, "if a mother wishes to be a slave to her children, and kill herself to save them from work, they will think nothing of it, because all young people are thoughtless. They would be horrified if they knew that their mother was working herself into the grave for them; they simply do not think. But train them up to work, and they will think nothing of it; they will accept their share of the labor as a matter of course. A mother who saves herself for her children is a great deal kinder to them than one who kills herself for them. We can afford to keep a servant, but I think the house is pleasanter without one. Besides, I want the girls to learn how to work. They may be obliged to some day. I waited on them while they were small, and now they are very willing to wait on me."—Sel.

HOW TO READ BOOKS.

A TALK WITH CHILDREN.

[John Dennis, in Good Words.]

Have you ever thought of the great pleasure that is to be gained from reading? Have you ever tried to imagine what life would be to you if there were no books in the world, or if you could not read? Every child knows, I hope, the joy of having a true friend, whose company is dear to him, who can be interested in what he is interested, no matter whether it be work or play. Now a book is not quite like a friend. The author can talk to us as he pleases; he can make us sorrowful or glad; he can make us cry or laugh; he can give us knowledge and he can make us think; but we cannot talk back to him, we cannot tell him what we feel, and he cannot sympathize with us as a friend can. On the other hand, friends may change; they may go far away; they may cease to care about the things we care for. Books cannot change, though our interest in them may; and if they are great and good books—for there are bad books, just as there are false friends—it is impossible to know them too well or read them too often.

I dare say you have heard people speak of a taste for reading. Some children read greedily any book that comes in their way. A biography, a volume of travels, a poem, a history, even a cookery-book will attract their attention, and be read from the first page to the last. I even knew a boy who found inexhaustible pleasure in the study of Bradshaw's Railway Guide. Such little people have, no doubt, a taste for reading. But this taste, to be of much good, needs to be cultivated. A child may have what is called a natural ear for music; but this will never make him a good musician. He must be taught his notes, and learn a great deal besides, before his ear for music will prove of much service. Just so does the young book-reader need training in order that he may read wisely. Now I shall try and tell you, as well as I can in a few pages, how to read, and the good that is to be gained from reading; but there is something to be said first. You must learn:

How to use Books.—Books deserve to be treated with care. Think of the labor it has cost to produce them! The author's head-work is the hardest labor of all; but the paper-maker, the printer, the binder, the publisher, and sometimes the artist, have each to use brains and hands in the making of a book. If it be a good book, which our poet Milton calls "the precious life-blood of a master-spirit," no toil is too great to expend upon it. If the words are beautiful, so also should be the form, and many of our publishers take delight in bringing out editions of famous poets and prose writers that it is a luxury to handle and to read. Now, not only books like these, but every book we read, should be used in a careful manner. We are gentle towards everything we love, and people who love books will be sure to treat them gently. Here are four rules to remember: 1. Never turn down the leaves of a book. 2. Never play with the leaves so that they become dog-eared. 3. Never read a book with dirty or inky fingers. 4. Never place a book upon the table face downwards, lest you should crack the binding. A book that has been well read will no doubt show signs of use; but if it has been read with proper care, it will not show signs of neglect.

Suitable Books.—Young children with a craving for books cannot always gratify their special tastes, but must be content with what they find in the family bookcase. Pious people, who really want to do children good, will sometimes give them tracts or little books which teach them what a wicked world they live in, and how—which is, indeed, quite true—pain and sorrow and death are evils common to all men. A happy, healthy child, who has been taught to love his heavenly Father, who enjoys the sunshine and the flowers and feels his life in every limb, may read books of this kind, and for a moment be made unhappy by them; but he looks up to see his mother's smile, or he runs out into the fields and hears the birds singing, and the belief that he has been born into a happy world is once more strong within him. The tracts, you see, make no impression, because they are not fitting food for a joyous child; and just so, books that will do you good service must be books you can partially understand and appreciate. I say partially, because it is not necessary you should understand all a book teaches in order to gain delight from it, and wisdom also. It is a great pity when a boy or girl who really likes reading is forced to read dull books or books that are unsuitable. And it is a terrible pity when all the literature open to boys and girls is of a trivial, feeble sort, or, worse still, of a corrupting character. Happily good books for the young are numerous, and there are few children, whether in country or town, that have not access to some well selected parish library.

The Bible.—And here, perhaps, I may remind you that there is one book good for all ages and for all circumstances in life. The first book an English child will learn to read is the Bible—that is to say, THE BOOK which ranks above all other books as containing the word of God. It would be easy to fill these pages with good words about the Bible; but that is not my object now. All I want to say is that, apart from the great purpose with which it has been given to us, this book, or rather these books, for the Bible consists of many volumes composed in different ages by historians, prophets, poets and apostles—this book, I say, is the most interesting that has ever been written. There is, no doubt, much in it hard to be understood; but there is much more which a child can understand and enjoy. The beautiful Old-Testament stories of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, of Samuel and David, of Elijah and Daniel, are told in our translation of the Bible in the most beautiful English that was ever written. Then in Job, the book of Psalms, and the prophecies of Isaiah, we have the devout thoughts of good men expressed in the highest strain of poetry; and passing on from these, we come to the simple Gospel story—the story of glad tidings—with our Lord's parables and precepts, his gracious deeds and divine words, followed by the Acts of the Apostles, and the letters they wrote to the first Christian disciples. Our English Bible is not only the first book that should be read by the child, because it tells him what no other book can, but because it is the key to so many other good books—that is to say, it opens them and makes them plain. Nobody who has read this wonderful book carefully, and who loves the wise and beautiful lessons it contains, will like to read what is coarse and evil. He will have a taste for something better.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS AS A SCHOOL-BOY.

John Quincy Adams had a wonderful boyhood. The rare gifts which came to him by inheritance were developed by wise parental training, and by association with some of the most scholarly minds of the age. A writer in Harper's Young People thus describes his school-days:

That he was a diligent boy, anxious to learn, is shown by a letter he wrote when he was ten years old. In this he deplores his fickleness, says that his thoughts are "running after birds' eggs, play and trifles," and asks the gentleman to whom he is writing, "I wish, sir, you would give me some instructions with regard to my time, and advise me how to proportion my studies and my play in writing, and I will keep them by me, and endeavor to follow them." He also asks his correspondent to favor him with a blank-book, in order that he may inscribe the most remarkable occurrence he meets with in his reading, and so be able to fix them in his mind.

In 1779 his father was appointed Commissioner to the Court of France. He took his little boy with him, sending him to a school in the outskirts of the city of Paris, where he perfected himself in the ordinary branches of education, and in course of time acquired a thorough knowledge of the French language. About this period, at the suggestion of his father, he began to keep a journal and keep copies of his letters. In a letter to his mother he says: "A journal Book and a letter Book of a Lad of Eleven years old Cannot be expected to contain much of Science, Literature, arts, wisdom, or wit, yet it may serve to perpetuate many observations that I may make, and may hereafter help me to recollect both persons and things that would otherways escape my memory."

The youthful period of Adams' life was spent abroad. He studied in Paris, at a school in Amsterdam, and then at the famous University of Leyden. When only 14 years of age he was appointed private secretary to Mr. Dana, the minister to the Russian Court. At the age of 16 he made a journey through Sweden, Denmark, Hamburg and Bremen alone, and in the winter time. He formed the acquaintance of distinguished men, with whom he was a great favorite, for he was polished, refined and educated. He left Europe at the age of 18, and studied law at Harvard University, graduating at the age of 20.

BETTER THAN GOLD.

"I will give that to the missionaries," said little Billy, and he put his fat little hand on a tiny gold dollar, as he counted the contents of his money-box.

"Why?" Susie asked.

"Cause it's gold. Don't you know the wise men brought Jesus gold? and missionaries work for Jesus."

Susie said, "The gold all belongs to him, anyhow. Don't you think it would be better to go right to him and give him something else he asks for?"

"What is that?" asked Billy.

Susie repeated, "My son, give me thine heart."

TEMPERANCE.

A SACRIFICE TO WHISKY.

A New York dispatch of March 25, says: An officer was summoned by the occupants of a flat house on Second avenue, near Seventy-second street, this afternoon, who excitedly informed him that something was wrong on the third floor. Quickly ascending the stairs he obtained entrance into the apartment designated through the kitchen door. Standing by the table, and steadying herself by her right hand, which was resting against the wall, was a tall, well-built woman, with a strongly masculine cast of features. The deathly pallor of her face was intensified by the big splashes of blood that marked it. Her left arm, which hung down, terminated at the wrist in a ragged and bleeding stump, and the blood which came from the severed veins made little pools on the oil-cloth on the floor. The officer stepped forward, and as he did so the woman fell on the table, upsetting it, and rolling with the dishes and cakes and bits of meat to the floor. Picking a sheet from out of a pile of soiled clothing which lay in one corner, he hastily tore it up into strips and began to bandage the woman's arm. An ambulance conveyed the woman to a hospital, but she refused to answer the inquiries. The missing hand was found in the parlor, lying on a pretty Brussels carpet, embedded in a thick clot of blood. All around were blood marks, and drops and spatters had even fallen upon the furniture and stained the white marble of the center-table. Upon a sewing machine, about a foot and a half from the mass of blood upon which the severed hand lay, was a big broad knife. Its keen edge shone through one thin coating of blood which covered the blade, and the wood of the handle was stained a bright red. It is not known exactly how the woman mutilated herself, but she must have knelt in the parlor, between the sewing machine and the marble center-table, and pressing her left wrist on the carpet hacked away at it until the knife and carpet met. It required a tremendous amount of strength, but she was a strong woman, and as powerful as a man. If the trail of blood is followed she evidently went to the sofa, some few feet away, and lay down, while the blood dripped until it made a little puddle on the carpet. From there she went to the kitchen, where she was found by the officer. The housekeeper said the woman's name was Mrs. Mary Agnes Giles, and that her husband had left her about a year ago on account of her heavy drinking habits. She had three children—Maggie, aged 12 years; Joe, aged 8, and another son aged 18. The latter did not live with her. Her sickening self-mutilation is the culmination of a drunken orgie, begun last Sunday. She alternated between drinking and beating her children until they were forced to seek safety in flight to one of the neighbors. She kept up her solitary orgie all Sunday night and yesterday, filling the air with maudlin songs, yells, prayers and sobs. This afternoon the housekeeper peered through a key-hole and discovered Mrs. Giles on her knees praying. Soon after she looked again and was horrified to see her lying on the sofa, her face covered with blood. Then she summoned the police. Mrs. Giles died late in the afternoon.

A new notion in the way of temperance reform is going on in Berwick, Pa. Most of the men in the place are employed in the car shops of a great manufacturing company. Recently the president of the company called the hotel-keepers and other licensed liquor sellers together and proposed to pay them the amount they would make by the sale of liquor for one year, on condition they would not apply for licenses nor sell liquors. They assented, and the amount to be paid was fixed by agreement at about six thousand dollars. The company believe they can afford that sum to have the taverns and restaurants kept on temperance principles for one year. The benefit to their workmen will be several times six thousand dollars.

Combination and organization is the most essential requisite for a successful war on the liquor traffic.

commentaries were made on the course pursued by the Supreme Secretary, and with reason, judging from the remarks made by the members, who are only wrong in supposing the features they condemn are peculiar to the Good Fellows. As it is, they suffice to give an inside view of the workings of the lodge machine generally. One member is reported as saying: "A select few have always kept the reins in their own hands, and made such rules as they saw fit. There have been over 19,000 applications, and every one of them pays two dollars, one of which Wilson gets, and sometimes both. A salary of $3,000 must be added to this, and then there is the $2 initiation fee for every admission. That is never heard from again. Say 19,000 at $1, $19,000; 12,000 at $2, $24,000; salary, $3,000; total, $46,000—would be nearer the mark." Another member offers this very significant explanation: "I do not so much blame Dr. Wilson for acting in his own interest. In his place any one of you gentlemen would be apt to do the same. He has autocratic authority and he employs it, not primarily for his advantage, but for his own." It is very singular that intelligent men do not see that the lodge makes autocrats, and when they are made they will act like autocrats.

From another of the leading white ribboners of Massachusetts, who has just had her attention turned to the subject by some of the N. C. A. leaflets, comes these strong and cheering words: "I cannot see how Masonry can be otherwise than a protection to liquor dealers, a hindrance to piety and the work of the church, and thus one of the powers that delay the coming of the kingdom of Christ. As such it necessarily comes under the ban of our organization, which stands for reform on all lines. God hasten the day when all the W. C. T. U. shall see as clearly, and be as ready to express their convictions as their clear-eyed sister."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, March 26, 1890.

Congress is by no means idle. There is not so much actual legislation in progress as one would like to report, for it is difficult to satisfy the people in this respect; but the way through which legislation must come is being planned and worked as rapidly as is possible. Congressional Committees are all the time busy with important measures, and daily bills are being reported to the Senate and House.

Among these comes one favorably reported from the House Committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic. It is a bill providing for the appointment of a commission on this subject. It provides that this commission shall consist of five persons, to be appointed by the President, who "shall be selected solely with reference to their personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial and thorough investigation of the alcoholic liquor traffic, who shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed two years from the time of their appointment."

It shall be the duty of the commission to "investigate the alcoholic, fermented and vinous liquor traffic in all its phases, its relation to revenues and taxation, its effect upon labor, agriculture, manufacturing and other industries, and its general economic, criminal, moral and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, the effects on the different nationalities and races and on the general welfare of the people, and also to inquire into the practical results of license, prohibitory legislation and the various methods of restraint and taxation relied upon for the prevention of intemperance in the several States and Territories of the United States and in the District of Columbia."

It is provided that all of the commissioners shall not belong to the same political party and shall receive a salary of $2,000 a year with per diem expenses. The commission shall also have power to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, etc., and employ a stenographer. The result of the investigations shall be reported to Congress.

A bill has recently been introduced in the Senate by Senator Ingalls which makes divorces cheaper than ever. It provides that a soldier who has lost both eyes, or one arm or one leg, may get married at any time he may so desire to some one to take care of him, and at his death his widow shall receive $12 a month as long as she remains single. If the soldiers' wife refuses to live with him and care for him, he may, after her absence of six months, procure a divorce from any county court upon the payment of $5.

Senator Blair was greatly surprised and disappointed at the result of the vote on his Educational Bill last Thursday. He says the fatal blow was dealt his favorite measure by the Senators from Ohio. He had confidently relied upon the votes of Senators Payne and Sherman, and he says he cannot understand their defection. He still clings to the belief that his bill did not receive fair treatment at the hands of the press of the country, and thinks its defeat was in a large measure due to the opposition of the Jesuits.

The temperance people of Washington are attacking the canteens-for-the-soldiers proposition. Congressman Morse of Massachusetts, who is a remarkably ready and eloquent temperance lecturer, spoke last Sabbath at the Foundry church on the subject of the "Duty of the Hour." He said we would soon become a nation of outlaws if we did not do a little outlawing ourselves. He regarded the proposition, already favorably reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs for the appropriation of $100,000, for the purpose of establishing in every Army post a Government store or canteen, as an outrageous proceeding and an insult to the American people. His advice to temperance people was to harmonize and work together. In all kinds of suasion he was a firm believer, but without unity of action but little could be accomplished. Pledge signing he regarded as a great work in the temperance cause. The signing of a pledge was often the beginning of a new and better life, and the saving of a soul for time and eternity.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The public nature of Christ's miracles, vs. 11-15. Christ was now in the zenith of his fame and popularity with the people. Wherever he went crowds thronged his steps. His miracles were not done in a corner. He came to work the works of his Father as well as to speak his message to men; and, like his Father, he "did not speak in secret, in a dark place of the earth (Isa. 45: 19) like the necromancers of those days, or the pagan priests who, under the name of 'mysteries,' hid the highest rites of their religion from the common eye. Some infidel writers claim that he was merely a wonderful 'medium,' but had this been the case he would have wrought his miracles like all mediums of the past or present, in semi-darkness; throwing over them such a veil of mystery and secrecy as would effectually prevent any close investigation. Instead, Christ always wrought his miracles in open day, very often on the public highway, and almost invariably before the gaze of assembled multitudes—friend and foe alike. We can draw but one conclusion from such a fact: that God does not approve of using secret methods to advance any good cause. As George MacDonald beautifully says, "The Son of his Father had nothing to conceal, but all the Godhead to reveal." So the Christian whose life is patterned after Christ's will have nothing to conceal in the secret chambers of a lodge, but everything that the Spirit or the Word teaches him that humanity needs to know, he is bound to reveal. We notice (1) Our Lord's compassion. In all our afflictions he is afflicted. If he felt so deeply for this stricken widow, whose only son lay cold in death, what must be his sympathy for the widows and orphans made such by the rum traffic? And is there not reason for our nation to tremble at the thought that their cause is in the hands of one so compassionate, to whom "the Father hath committed all judgment." (2) This young man was a type of the spiritually dead. He was carried outside the gate of the city. So they who are "dead in trespasses and sins" are outside the pale of spiritual life and everything pertaining to a higher existence. They are dead to God, dead to heavenly joys; but Christ came to give life unto such. (3) When Christ says, "Arise" to a dead soul, motion and activity are the first signs of the new resurrection. "The dead sat up and began to speak." The spiritually dead are dumb; they have nothing to say about the things of the kingdom, but the spiritually alive speak and praise God. (4) "He delivered him to his mother." Christ came not to destroy family affection, but to sanctify it and make all our human relationships doubly blessed. (5) Christ's miracles were always improved opportunities. He did not go out of his way to seek occasions for miracles. There was nothing melodramatic about them, no seeking for effect,—an element which is never lacking in accounts of bogus miracles. The noblest lives are the resultant sum of simple opportunities daily improved. We do not need to leave our home or our business to speak the word of life to dead souls. As the microscope shows every drop of water, every square inch of earth teeming with vegetable and animal wonders, so the most commonplace existence may be seen in the light of eternity to be crowded with chances for Christian work.

2. The effect of the miracle, vs. 16-18. The effects were manifold. (1) It made men glorify God. (2) It made them remember the prophecies of Scripture. (3) It led them to recognize more in Christ than the popular mind had yet acknowledged. (4) It came as a messenger of comfort to the imprisoned John the Baptist. So all wonderful manifestations of grace have powerful secondary results outside of the souls actually saved.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

JESUS THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE.—(See John 11: 25, 26.) He that believeth in me, even though he have died, shall live; and he that liveth [physically, "is not yet dead"] and believeth in me, shall not die forevermore; i.e., "faith in me is the source of life, both here and hereafter; and those who have it, have life, so that they shall NEVER DIE;" physical death being overlooked and disregarded, in comparison with that which is really and only death.—Alford. (1) We are assured that death does not end all, that the soul has an existence separate from the body. (2) That Jesus is the source of that immortal life. (3) Only eternal life begun here gives any hope of eternal life beyond the grave. (4) We shall be the same persons there as here, only changed; our bodies, renewed, transformed, as a seed is transformed into a flower (1 Cor. 15). (5) The change will bring new powers, new developments, new sources of life and joy, as much beyond our present life as the life of a flower in the sunlight is above the life of the seed in the ground.

THE SPIRITUAL RESURRECTION.—(1) The one great need of those dead in sin is new life, the spiritual life, the heavenly life, something imparted to them, for nothing dead can create life in itself. This is the new birth commanded in John 3: 3, 5. (2) Jesus Christ is the one source of this new life. Indeed, he is the fountain and source of all life, animal, vegetable, intellectual, spiritual, eternal (Col. 1: 17; John 10: 10). It is interesting to note that science to-day confirms this statement. Every effort after spontaneous generation, to produce new life by the forces in nature, is an acknowledged failure. Only from life can life come.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Though, when the evangelist, D. L. Moody, closed his very successful series of meetings in Brooklyn last month, he came to the Collegiate church, Fifth avenue, corner Twenty-ninth street, in this city, to give a series of four Bible addresses, so eager were the people to hear him, and so interested did they become in his sermons, that instead of one week, the meetings have been continued one month with unabated interest; and the desire is to have him remain longer. Although admission has been by ticket, the large church has been completely filled at each meeting, and to accommodate all who wished to hear him it was found necessary to open the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church at Fifty-third street, to which Mr. Moody would immediately repair after his service in the Collegiate church. These services have not been distinctively evangelistic; rather a series of Bible readings with a view to stimulating Christian people in systematic Biblical study, and to a deeper consecration.—Christian Intelligence.

—Protestant missionaries began Christian work in Corea in 1885. The first native convert was baptized by the Rev. Horace Underwood, July, 1886. In 1887 a Christian church of the Presbyterian polity was organized. This had, in October, 1889, nearly one hundred members.

—At a meeting in Newcastle, England, under the presidency of Bishop Wilberforce, a resolution was unanimously adopted protesting against the manufacture and sale of opium in India by the British Government, either for export to China or other countries or for consumption in India itself, except for legitimate medical use.

—Six young ladies from Canada have recently departed for China, in connection with the China Inland Mission. They sailed via Vancouver.

—A deaconesses' home is to be founded at Washington, in honor of the late Lucy Webb Hayes.

LODGE NOTES.

Carpenters working on the Boston Brotherhood's Club grounds struck Monday on the ground that the officers of the team had not kept an agreement to provide work only for union men at union wages in return for an indorsement by the Federation of Labor.

The Washington Evening Star of the 24th ult. notices: "The men of the dancing class will give an assembly on the evening of Easter Monday, April 7, in honor of the chaperons and girls of the dancing class at Masonic temple." This is a characteristic mixture: Masonry, superstition and revelry.

State Auditor Pavey has decided that the Order of Tonti, under its rules and regulations, is not entitled to do insurance business in this State, and that any one soliciting business or receiving money on insurance in this State for the order is liable to prosecution under the law. The organization has decided to discontinue further efforts to do business in Illinois.

W. J. McGregor, teller at the Fourth National Bank, private secretary of S. D. Herron, Jr., cashier of the same institution, and treasurer of a number of secret orders in Pittsburg, Pa., is missing. The missing man was the financier of Pittsburg and Duquesne Conclaves, Improved Order of Heptasophs, Order of the Golden Chain, and Franklin Council of the Junior Order of American Mechanics.

The Grand Encampment Knight Templar Masons of the United States have the following officers: J. P. S. Gobin, of Pennsylvania, grand master; Hugh McCurdy, of Michigan, deputy grand master; Very Eminent Sir Warren Larne Thomas, Kentucky, grand generalissimo; Very Eminent Sir Reuben Hedley Lloyd, of California, grand captain general; Very Eminent Sir Henry Bates Stoddard, of Texas, grand senior warden; Very Eminent Sir Nicholas Van Slyck, of Rhode Island, grand junior warden; Very Eminent Sir H. Walles Lines, of Connecticut, grand treasurer; Very Eminent Sir William B. Isaacs, of Virginia, grand recorder." Gobin is State Senator from Lebanon, Pa., and general of the Third brigade of the national guard of Pennsylvania.

A member of the Knights of Honor writes to the organ of the order how to serve the wives and daughters of members: "At the beginning of 1890 we resolved to contrive some plan to encourage our members to take a better interest in our lodge meetings, and think we have struck upon the plan. Our lodge meets every Saturday evening, and we have set apart the fourth Saturday evening of each month for our wives and daughters over 15 years of age to meet with us. After we open and close lodge, we hold a meeting for their benefit, as they say, "Turn the goat loose." We have a password, which is given them, and also a simple sign. The night of our ladies' meeting is the night that assessments fall due, and if the wife is coming to lodge, it is a reminder to the husband of his duties and assessments. Then the ladies can tell where their husbands are at least one night in the month. The ladies in reality cannot become members of the lodge, but they can in effect.

The Royal Society of Good Fellows, incorporated in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, is an organization similar to that of Odd-fellowship, with the exception that in this society is paid a larger funeral or death benefit than is paid in the Odd-fellows. The Odd-fellows usually pay from the local lodge from $50 to $100 as a funeral benefit on the death of a member, while this society pays from the Supreme Treasury $1,000, $2,000 or $3,000, as agreed upon at time of initiation. The fund from which these large benefits are paid is made up from small monthly assessments from each member. This Royal Society of Good Fellows makes the following stupendous offer. The only question is where is all the money to come from? Read: "Therefore, you see that although you may live to be 100 years of age, you will never be able to pay into the Supreme Treasury so much money that your beneficiaries will not be able to draw out three dollars for every dollar you have paid in. Therefore, it is evidently an excellent investment, as one is certain to receive at least three dollars for every dollar invested. Of course, if you should die earlier, the profit would be much greater, perhaps $1,000, $500 or $300 for $1."

The Chief Reason for the marvellous success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the fact that this medicine actually accomplishes all that is claimed for it. Its real merit has been for Hood's Sarsaparilla a popularity and sale greater than that of any other blood purifier. It cures Scrofula, all Humors, Dyspepsia, etc. Prepared only by C. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from March 24 to 29, inclusive:

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

PREMIUMS.

For ten new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Cynosure, sent on or before May 1st, 1890, the Original Webster

Unabridged Dictionary will be sent free. Express charges paid.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

HOME AND HEALTH.

PREPARING BREAKFAST.

A good breakfast to be prepared easily, must be planned and provided for beforehand, and over night. This is one of the trite maxims of good housekeeping, but it is often forgotten, and breakfast-getting thereby becomes a dread and a burden. In every case where early breakfasts are imperative, or where the housekeeper is fond of morning naps, all possible preparations should be made the night before. Of course, kindlings will be made ready, and of course the teakettle and coffee-pot are at hand and clean. Besides these, the table should be set, the coffee measured, potatoes pared, and sliced for warming or chopped for hash, oatmeal cooked tender to be heated again, and bread sliced for toasting, if toast is planned. With varying tastes and appetites, the morning bill of fare even for households in kindred circumstances, and whose members follow the same occupations, will differ widely. Each family must be a law unto itself.—Prairie Farmer.

SUNLIGHT FOR SWEETNESS.

Few seem to realize that it is the oxygen of the air that purifies the venous blood of its effete matter, and that it is a powerful disinfecting agent, out of the body or in, and that sunshine itself is one of the most valuable disinfectants. Dark, unventilated stables, therefore, should be avoided; also dark, family living-rooms. True, dark rooms can be given good air, but sunlight is as necessary for health. The inmates of public institutions enjoy little sunshine, and consequently have pale, sallow complexions, and do not possess full health. If a potato be permitted to grow in a dark room, no matter how pure the air, the stalks are without that color of health which sunshine gives. Ordinary barns have but one or two windows, and some not any. If stock is kept in them, windows should be supplied in almost every available space, especially on the south side. The well-being of stock suffers in darkened stables, and their condition and growth are below what they would be in sunlit quarters.

Wasted sunshine is a serious loss. In the construction of country dwellings sunlight is seldom taken into consideration. If the dwelling faces south, the kitchen, which is usually the farmer's living-room, is generally placed on the north side, as though purposely to shut out sunlight, and likely enough there is a veranda attached to that, obstructing the light still further. On a dark day it is difficult to read or sew in the average farmer's kitchen. Bay-windows should take the place of verandas almost everywhere. They can be protected from hot sun in summer by awnings. A large bay-window in the corner of a residence facing south, on one of the streets I travel, is the subject of much remark. It is the living-room, and looks cosy when the family is gathered there on a cold day. Those people appreciate the blessing of sunlight. If cross, peevish persons, who live in the north part of the house, will move to the south side, throw open the blinds and remove the veranda, their sour tempers will be wonderfully sweetened.—Galen Wilson.

FRIENDLY PERSECUTION IN SICKNESS.

How many invalids would protest, if they dared, against the persecution they are compelled to endure from friends who feel it their duty to call and condole with the sick. One sufferer breaks out in this manner:

"I feel as if I had just been to my own funeral, and it was a very sad affair."

"How so?"

"I was killed by a friendly call. My neighbor over the way, with a face as solemn as an owl, has just been in to see me, and he kindly remarked that I was so changed he shouldn't have known me, and hoped I'd pull through, which meant I'm sure you can't last long, poor fellow; and had I heard that J——, who was taken sick at the same time I was, had been given up by the doctors? He mentioned several other equally cheerful items, which made me feel as if I should fly into a thousand pieces!"

"A call like that is enough to kill

"I WILL FIGHT IT OUT ON THIS LINE IF IT TAKES ALL SUMMER."

The bull-dog is not an animal to be admired, yet he possesses one trait that at least entitles him to our respect. His tenacity of purpose is proverbial. It makes him a formidable adversary. A like trait has often enabled man to overcome great obstacles and win victory under the most trying circumstances. In fact, it is only by tenacity of purpose and indomitable will-power, that many of life's battles are brought to a successful termination.

Disease, like man's more material enemies, is often an obstinate adversary, and it is only by the most determined persistency in the use of the best remedy that victory is attained over it. While Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is guaranteed to benefit or cure in all diseases for which it is recommended, yet in ailments of long standing, which are usually alike slow in their inception and progress, the cure must likewise be effected by slow degrees and regular stages. This can only be accomplished by a persistent use of this wonderful remedy for a reasonable length of time. When so used, it conquers the worst cases of Salt-rheum, Eczema, Tetters, Erysipelas, Scalp diseases, and all manner of blood-taints, no matter of how long standing, or from whatever cause they have arisen. All Scrofulous affections, as Old Sores, or Ulcers, White Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, Enlarged Glands and Tumors disappear under a protracted use of this greatest of blood-purifiers.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood medicine, among the scores that are advertised, possessed of such positive curative properties as to warrant its proprietors in selling it, as they are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee of benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. anybody who doesn't know how to resist the influence of such sympathy. Heaven save the mark if that is sympathy! I call it torture. I do wish my friend would talk to me of something besides myself, and how I look, and how I feel, for I am reminded of all that far too often. If they want to show their friendship and help me get well, they will help me to forget myself and my difficulties. REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man.

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and sixty-eight cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

HUMANE HARNESS.

The author of the following is unknown to us, but from personal observation and contact with farmers, we know it is too true a picture of the way many a faithful farm team is treated.

If the owner took half as much pains to fit his harness to his horse or mule as he does to get a good fitting coat for himself there would be fewer sores, scabs, scars and hides with the hair worn off. Harness is bought haphazard, when it can be bought cheap at auction; or when there is immediate use for it the purchase is made at a shop that doesn't keep an assortment; so it happens that the animal, big or little, long or short, is put into the gear that pinches in one place and hangs loose at another. This is the way faithful, hard-working beasts of burden are treated. The privileged class of horses that draw elegant carriages or show their speed to the delight of owners and lookers-on wear harness made to order, made to fit, every strap of right length, in the right place; especially the collar and hames conform to the neck and breast, bearing evenly on all parts that should sustain the pressure. Every work-horse has an inalienable right to such a harness when put to service; his owner can't afford to work him in a different kind. Scarcely less important is it that the harness be made as light as may be without sacrificing strength and durability; most harness is heavier than need be. The terrible hardship of carrying useless weight, especially in hot weather, should on no account be inflicted on the working teams; that is freight that does not pay.

Scarcely anywhere is superabundant weight more damaging than in harness carried for ten years on a working animal's back—carried when weary with exhausting labor, and when taxed to his utmost strength. Work harness is often much heavier than need be, because the wood and iron in the harness and the leather must be increased in size to make up for poor quality. Using the very best leather, and keeping it properly oiled, straps of the same size will have double the strength of common harness-leather, in its usual condition. Harness usually fails first where the buckle-tongue goes through the tug, and where the leather is joined to the hame. Better methods of adjusting these parts than those in common use have been devised to strengthen and lighten the harness and make it more durable. A road harness when used for plowing, cultivating and for drawing wagons on level grounds may dispense with several of its parts. Very often the back pad, or part that goes over the back, is so short that in plowing there is heavy pressure on the backbone, causing sores plain to be seen. It's a pity we don't feel the pain. The tortures of ill-fitting harness are intensified by exposure to sun, dew and rain, making it about as rough and hard as it would be if made of cast-iron. Keep the harness out of the wet as much as possible; keep it soft and pliable with neat's-foot oil, especially the collars, which should be kept clean from dirt and hair.

FAST WALKING HORSES FOR FARMERS.

In purchasing or hiring a plough horse, stake of a mile of road. Mount the horse and see how many minutes it will take him to walk a mile. A horse that will walk three miles an hour is worth at least three times as much as a horse that walks but two miles. The three-mile horse not only does as much work in two days as the two-mile horse does in three, but he enables the man behind the plow to do fifty per cent more work in a day than he can do behind the two-mile horse. And the man and horse consume with the slow team fifty per cent more rations in doing the same work than the fast walker does. In twelve months, the man would do no more carting and plowing with the slow horse than he would do in eight months with the fast walker.

Suppose a farmer hire a man and a two-mile horse to do an amount of plowing and carting that takes three months to perform, and pays $3 a month for a horse, $3 for his feed, and $18 for the

"Like Magic,"

THE effect produced by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Colds, Coughs, Croup, and Sore Throat are, in most cases, immediately relieved by the use of this wonderful remedy. It strengthens the vocal organs, allays irritation, and prevents the inroads of Consumption; in every stage of that dread disease, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral relieves coughing and induces refreshing rest.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children have been subject."—Capt. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"From an experience of over thirty years in the sale of proprietary medicines, I feel justified in recommending Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One of the best recommendations of the Pectoral is the enduring quality of its popularity, it being more salable now than it was twenty-five years ago, when its great success was considered marvelous."—R. S. Drake, M. D., Beloit, Kans.

"My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine; saying that he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with the most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This has given me unbounded faith in the preparation, and I recommend it confidently to my customers."—C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The secret union carpenters are working for an 8-hour-day and threaten to strike if their demands are not conceded. The plumbers are expected to strike for higher wages during the present week.

Eight persons were killed outright and eighteen badly injured by an explosion of mill dust in the starch annex of the Chicago Sugar Refinery, at the foot of Taylor street, Thursday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock. The explosion was caused by the combustion of fine particles of mill dust in the air, ignited by a sudden blaze in some accumulations about a hot steam pipe.

STORMS.

Shortly after 9 o'clock Thursday evening a tornado swept over Louisville, Ky., wrecking two or three hundred houses and killing two hundred people. The wind came from the southwest. The Union depot at the foot of Seventh street was lifted from its foundation and turned over into the Ohio river. Falls City Hall, on West Market street, was wrecked. In the hall were over a hundred people, and but few of them escaped alive. Many buildings, after falling, caught fire and the inmates were burned. All streets are blockaded with the debris of the fallen buildings or the telegraph and electric-light wires. The limit of the death list has been reached, it is believed, and is ninety-two up to Monday morning.

The same storm extended from Kansas and Nebraska to Lake Erie. The greatest destruction from wind was in the southern parts of Illinois and Indiana and in Kentucky. From Dixon, Ky., a dispatch says: "The most terrific storm that ever invaded this section of the State passed through Webster county Thursday afternoon about 6 o'clock. The storm made its appearance as an ordinary storm usually does, but its clouds soon assumed a light red color, with a dark cloud hanging in the center and funnel-shaped. Then a rumbling sound ensued, accompanied by thunder, lightning, hail, and rain, and the storm burst forth in its full fury. It was about twenty minutes in duration, but in that time eight lives were lost and about thirty persons were wounded, some of whom will die, and about $150,000 worth of property was destroyed."

The chairman of the relief committee of the Louisville Board of Trade has sent out the following: "The calamity that has overtaken the city of Louisville by the cyclone of last night about 9 o'clock spread over a territory of our city covering a space of ground some 400 yards wide and three miles in length, through the business and residence portion of our city. The loss of life is in the neighborhood, it is believed, of some seventy-five persons, and the loss to the city in damage to houses and goods is believed not to exceed $2,000,000. While the calamity is a great one, our citizens feel able to cope with it, and are not cast down, but will at once proceed to repair and resume in the channels now interrupted. In all other portions of the city business is resuming its usual channels."

COUNTRY.

Judge Ryland, of Marshall, Mo., has decided that playing progressive euchre for prizes is gambling and in violation of law.

At Rochester, N. Y., Thursday, John A. Davis, ex-city treasurer, who pleaded guilty to embezzling $60,000 of the public funds, was sentenced to five years in Auburn Penitentiary.

The Democratic liquor license bill was debated in the Iowa House Thursday. It provides that if the residents of any city or town vote for license at a special election, held on the petition of two-fifths of the voters, the District Court of the county shall grant a license to any applicant whose character and citizenship are vouched for by the residents of such city or town, after two weeks' notice, by publication, has been given of the application. The license fee is fixed at not less than $500 per annum, which shall go to the county, and any sum over that fixed by the municipality shall go into its treasury. The District Court is empowered to grant a permit to druggists to sell liquor for medicinal, mechanical, or chemical purposes.

About $300,000 loss was occasioned by the prairie fires which swept over Rooks, Phillips, and other Kansas counties Sunday and Monday.

As a result of drinking an embalming fluid by mistake for mineral water, Professor Richard Dale Owen, well known in geological circles, died Tuesday at New Harmony, Ind. A. H. Fretageot, a merchant of that place, was poisoned by the fluid so that it is thought he cannot recover.

Mrs. Mary A. Giles, whose husband left her a year ago because of her love of liquor, hacked her left hand off yesterday at her home in New York, and died from loss of blood. It is said that for two days she had been indulging in drink, her two children taking refuge with a neighbor.

As a tribute to his father's memory William Waldorf Astor will place massive bronze doors at the Broadway entrance of Trinity church, New York City. The memorial will cost $100,000.

Reports are current that Western railways have decided to fight the interstate law, having secured legal opinion that the prohibition of pooling and the attempt to regulate long and short haul rates are unconstitutional.

It was reported Wednesday that an English syndicate has obtained options on several large tobacco factories in Lynchburg, Va., and is negotiating for eight factories in Danville, Va.

Sister Leo, who attempted to escape Tuesday from the Villa Maria Convent at West Chester, Pa., died Wednesday of paralysis of the heart, superinduced by exposure. It is said that she had been crazed by an attack of the grip, and sought flight while her mind was affected.

FOREIGN.

Advices from Peru state that in the early part of February a battle took place at Huanta between the respective adherents of Senor Rosas and Colonel Bermudez, rival candidates for the presidential nomination of the constitutional party, who had gone to Huanta for electioneering purposes. Many on both sides were killed and many houses were pillaged by drunken Indians. The killed included the chiefs of both parties in the town, namely, Senor Lazona, deputy of congress and head of the revolution, and Dr. Urbina, chief of the Rosas party. The government holds the leaders of the parties responsible. No other part of the republic was similarly disaffected.

A Vienna correspondent says that the Czar leaned toward mercy in the case of Madame Tschebrikova, whose pamphlet on Siberian prisons was found smuggled into his room, but was overruled by the Minister of the Interior, who ordered that she be exiled to Siberia. The students' agitation has extended to the universities of Kieff and Charkoff. Altogether 700 students have been arrested. It is probable that the St. Petersburg University will be closed. In spite of strict precautions taken by the government the agitation spread to other institutions, and students have been holding meetings at all the universities. There is a general upheaval of the student world. Arrests of students suspected of being leaders in the agitation have been made at every one of the principal universities throughout Russia.

Prince Bismarck's passage through the streets while on his way to visit the Emperor and the Grand Duke of Baden was a veritable triumphal procession. The people wanted to unharness the horses and drag the carriages themselves. Those nearest the carriage thrust in their hands to grasp the hands of Bismarck, and it was with the utmost difficulty that a passage could be made through the crowd. It was the pressure of the throng upon the carriage that caused the accident which delayed the Prince's progress.

The daily press reports from the Washington Conference of the National Reform Association state that on Wednesday last the meeting adopted a platform declaring in favor of employing the teachings of the Bible in the settlement of public affairs, and of the insertion of the name of the Supreme Being in the Constitution. The platform also approves the Blair Sunday Rest bill and all measures against gambling, pool-selling, and the liquor traffic. A committee from the Conference reported that a call had been made upon the President, who had received them kindly. The President, they reported, said that for good reasons he did not wish to be compelled to make a response to their address setting forth the objects of the Association, and had added that its objects were so complicated that he would require time for their consideration.

The result of the city election in Milwaukee is to make more intense the feeling of all parties respecting the compulsory school law. The war upon the enactment, begun by the Catholic priests, has enlisted the German Lutherans; and finally, seeing an opportunity for temporary success the Democratic party in the State has joined the foreigner element. With such a piebald following a Democrat was elected mayor of Milwaukee, and the leaders of the movement hope to carry the State. It is a strange and pitiful sight to see the Lutherans, whose fathers withstood Roman Catholic domination to the death, deluded into an alliance with their old foes in a crusade against the American free school. But the result cannot be doubtful. There may be temporary success, but it will arouse the American spirit of a people too often pre-occupied with meaner matters. Already the leading Democratic papers are calling upon their party in Wisconsin to halt. They are rushing blindly toward a precipice, and ruin cannot be avoided if they do not turn. Democrats—all parties are equally bound to stand by our free-school system as an American institution. To oppose it is to overthrow our liberties, or to invite political destruction.

While the question of the Bible in schools, as decided in Wisconsin, is agitating the whole country, an Illinois case has arisen which involves similar issues. A student named North, son of an infidel lawyer long resident in Kewanee, has petitioned the Supreme Court to restore him to the privileges of the State University. He was to graduate from that institution in June, 1885, but was suspended six weeks before the event because he refused to attend religious worship in the chapel. He alleges this was his sole offense; and, inasmuch as the University is controlled by and supported by the State, whose constitution forbids compulsory attendance on a place of worship, he claims religious services in the University are illegal and the rule under which he was ousted void. If the government of the State of Illinois is infidel or Masonic the young man may win his case; and he has an ally in the Chief Justice Shope who is popular with the lodges. But we doubt if our Supreme Court will repeat the Wisconsin folly.

The stockholders of the Columbus Fair of 1893 held a stormy meeting in Battery D, Chicago, last Friday. The object of the meeting was to elect directors who should, under law, be in control of the whole enterprise. The only disquieting feature was the attempt of a number of small demagogues, who have done their best in the past to make Chicago notorious, led by Carter Harrison and a German named Hesing. They were quickly buried under an indignant vote, and ought never to be resurrected. Forty-five directors were chosen who were fairly representative men. The work of preparation will now go readily forward. The proper observance of the Sabbath day during the fair is a subject neither forgotten or neglected. Ministers' meetings in this and other cities and the Sabbath unions are moving strongly. It is rumored from Washington that the question is already decided in favor of opening, but the politicians of that city will not altogether guide the affair. We trust the popular voice will be heard so emphatically in favor of preserving the Sabbath rest, as in every world's fair England and America have done, that it cannot be denied.

The annual convocation at Lake Mohonk, N. Y., has exerted a very definite and humanizing influence on the Indian question. It is safe to say that had it been established forty years we should not have our history blotted with such pages as describe the Indian hunts of half-savage and melodramatic characters as Custer. This convocation promises to take up the Negro problem at its next meeting, June 4th to 6th next. It will consider ways and means to elevate the Negro race by means of education and Christian religion. A full and free discussion of the problem involved will be had, with a view to the adoption of some general plan or system for carrying forward this important work. Political issues and discussion will be avoided and attention will be confined entirely to the religious and educational problem. Ex-President Hayes will preside at the conference. Ex-Justice William Strong, Hon. John C. Covert, Rev. Drs. Joseph E. Roy, of Chicago; J. G. Hartzell, Cincinnati; A. G. Haygood, of the Slater Fund; ex-Governor D. H. Chamberlain, General Armstrong, of Hampton; General O. O. Howard, and many others are expected to be present and take part in the discussion.

The experience of Cincinnati in fighting the saloon has been duplicated in Denver, and is being duplicated in Chicago, with reference to the necessity of carrying the reform to the ballot-box.

Reformers are learning that they must send to places of power "petitions with boots on." In Denver, after trying in vain to close the saloons by the pressure of newspaper articles and public meetings upon officers elected by the saloon influence, a distinct issue of law enforcement was made, and carried the day, by uniting men of all parties who were against the Sunday saloon. In Chicago the same plan of campaign has been carried out. In every ward where it was possible pledges were secured from all candidates of the Council to support the Sunday-closing movement. Where the candidate would not pledge himself, an independent candidate, selected from the dominant party, was put up and supported by the Sunday Rest League. These are hopeful indications that good citizens of large cities will some day learn to leave out politics at the local elections, uniting friends of law and order against the hosts of crime and anarchy. The problem of the hour in our great cities and our States, and in the nation, is: "How can we bring good citizens into a resistless union?"

A FEW MORE STEPS BEYOND.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

A few more steps beyond,

And then thy pathway o'er the wild will brighten,
And flowers will bend, all dewy at thy feet;
The hills all dark with storms, will blaze and lighten,
And music fill the hours with gladness sweet;
Just a few steps beyond.

A few more steps beyond!

Art weary now, my brother? dost look sadly
Behind thee where thy youthful footsteps trod?
Art tempted to lay down thine armor? Gladly
Look up where lie the mountains of our God;
Just a few steps beyond.

A few more steps beyond!

Stilled be each vain regret, each gloomy shadow,
Shall brighten every hour that's passed in pain,
Hope spring resplendent in high heaven's meadow,
Smiles be where tears were shed in fiery rain;
Just a few steps beyond.

A few more steps beyond!

Art weary, brother? Is thy way so lonely?
Fear not, despair not. He is still thy guide;
Tears, pain and death, are but for this life only,
And then the gates of heaven will open wide;
Just a few steps beyond.

A few more steps beyond!

We know the bowers of heaven are green with splendor,
We know there's sunshine on that farther shore,
We know the Father's love is ever tender
For those who've traversed life's dark journey o'er;
Just a few steps beyond.

A few more steps beyond!

Up, brothers, wake! ere night shall settle round thee,
Clasp the bright sword, and in the fight be strong!
Be strong and brave! when once the chains which bound thee
Are severed, thou shalt hear the conquerer's song;
Just a few steps beyond.

DO WE NEED MORE WAR VESSELS?

BY JOSIAH W. LEEDS.

The New York Independent, in discussing lately upon the desirability of "penny postage," reinforces its plea with the following argument: "Why does Secretary Tracy ask for a score, and ultimately perhaps a hundred millions, to build war-ships—seven times more than would pay the immediate expense of one cent postage? There is not even a probability that these war-ships will ever pay a dividend, but we want them as an investment against a possible time of war, and Congress is glad to vote the money, and everybody—unless it be our Quaker friends—is pleased."

The weekly journal of large circulation above quoted is a little too general, it appears to me, in its reference to the pleasure which the proposed appropriation of a hundred million, or of several hundreds of millions, of dollars for navy purposes is likely to give to the people of this country. When the dread calamity of two months ago desolated the home of the Secretary of the Navy, there were many people up and down in the land who, while keenly sympathizing with the terrible loss which the Secretary had sustained, were, nevertheless, solemnly and pointedly impressed with the thought that to embark upon a project of war preparation involving an eventual outlay of untold millions of money upon armored cruisers, monitors, battle-ships, etc., meant ruin, desolation and anguish to many, many homes. For I think it scarcely supposable that, with this great increase in our navy, and the spirit of elation and self-assertion accompanying, there would long wait the occasion for the public exhibition of our great prowess.

Now, the Independent is supposed to write for the information and profit of the religious people of the country, and it might reasonably be assumed that the argument used by it upon such a subject as that which we are considering, would notably, or at least noticeably, differ from the pleas put forth by daily papers which treat their readers to popular Sunday editions, and are not in the habit of editorially endorsing the Scripture injunction that when our enemies smite us on the one cheek we are to offer to them the other. So we may compare the extract given above with that of a metropolitan daily, which says:

"It is nonsense to say that because we are a peaceable people, and mean to remain at peace with the world if we can, this country does not require a navy capable of fighting, if fighting there must be. The most peaceable and well-disposed citizen buys the best revolver he can obtain when he arranges for the protection of his household; and when he invests in a bull-dog he is careful to see that the dog hasn't lost its teeth. The McCann board has made no mistake. The splendid fleet it proposes to build is the right sort of peacemaker, and the right sort of peace preserver."

One more quotation from a daily, which goes a step further than the defense of home and country, and includes the necessity of maintaining "the prestige of the nation." This is from the Trenton State Gazette of yesterday: "The necessity of this country equipping itself with a new and powerful navy, capable to defend our seaports and to maintain the prestige of the nation on the sea, is conceded by all." But it is not so conceded. A telegram of ten days ago mentioned the presentation to Congress from South Dakota and New Hampshire of protests against increased expenditures for the navy and coast defenses; also similar protests from various meetings of the Society of Friends throughout the country. Further, at the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, held last week at Carlisle, this subject of war preparations was referred to a special committee, who reported "in favor of a peace policy in our civil government, and against enlarging our coast defenses and building more war-ships." An excellent article on "The Increase of the Navy," quoted in the Christian Cynosure as from the United Presbyterian, was one of the papers submitted to the special committee.

I need only add, as indicating the prevalence of a deep feeling of opposition to the scheme, not yet publicly expressed, that in a note received from George Dana Boardman, the eminent Baptist minister of this city, that faithful witness for peace and righteousness says: "I addressed a note to each of the United States Senators, protesting against the additional expenditures as needless and harmful. I will gladly direct the attention of our Ministers' Conference to this matter at the earliest possible moment."

Philadelphia.

When these claims are all adjusted, may we not hope that the most fruitful pretext for war will cease, and the time for disbanding the colossal armaments will have come? The folly, as well as misery of the present state of things, becomes apparent when we reflect that even in times of peace the military and naval expenditures of the European nations are nearly a billion of dollars annually. Even little Holland expends seventeen millions and a half, while Russia's outlay is over $230,000,000, England's nearly $170,000,000, and France's $155,000,000. Ships of war cost as high as four and a half millions. Guns discharge projectiles weighing a ton, with powder half a ton in weight, of the most costly material, and have become too expensive to be fired for mere practice. Germany has expended nearly a hundred millions in coast defenses within a dozen years, and England as much as sixty millions. And all this in addition to the incalculable waste of wealth involved in the partial or complete withdrawal of at least six millions of able-bodied men, in the prime of life, from productive industry, from marriage, and from the conservative influence of home and fixed habits of life.—Intelligencer.

DOUGHT CHRISTIANS EVER TO ENGAGE IN WAR?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

In considering this subject I wish to notice first in what the wickedness of war does not consist. It is not that it destroys human life. It has been held that since life can never be restored it ought never to be taken. I think this position untenable, and, in any case, regard it as a separate question. Nor is it whether individuals or nations have the right of self-defence. This, too, is a distinct question. They doubtless have the right to defend themselves by all methods in harmony with Christian principles. Neither is it whether governments may have a police force and compel obedience to all righteous enactments. This will be considered farther on, but at present I concede the amplest powers to governments that are consistent with the well recognized principles of civil law. Nor is our principal indictment based on the vast expense, constituting three-fourths of the cost of the governments of Christian nations; the immense destruction of life and property, and the terrible burden of debt and taxation under which the nations groan; its corruption of public and private morals; and its hindrance to the spread of the Gospel of Christ. All these are evils of immense magnitude, but the wickedness of war does consist in this, that the methods of war are necessarily un-Christian and can never be otherwise.

It will be conceded that no object, however desirable or praiseworthy, ought to be secured by any other than lawful methods. The end does not justify the means, for we may not do evil that good may come.

"Who noble ends by noble means attains,
Or failing, dies in exile or in chains,
Like good Aurelius, let him reign or bleed,
Like Socrates, that man is great indeed."

It is right that I should clothe and educate my family, but I have no right to steal that I may do so. It were far better that my family should be ignorant than that I should be a thief. No apparent or real evil ever justified crime. There never was any real necessity for disobedience to God. No object is righteous except as it is promoted by righteous methods. I insist on this point because it is right here that the world has made its great mistake.

It has been held that a righteous end justified the use of the necessary means to secure that end. War, it is said, is sometimes necessary to secure human liberty, and is therefore justifiable when this is the object. This is a mere begging of the question. Human liberty may be sought for by all legitimate means, but not otherwise. It is far better that a man should be a slave than that he should disobey God. If war is wrong the love of liberty is not an excuse for engaging in it. The great Daniel O'Connell said, "Remember, my countrymen, that no change of government is worth a single crime or a single drop of human blood." Cowper wrote,

"Nay, dear as freedom is and in my heart's
Just estimation prized above all price,
I had much rather be myself the slave
And wear the bonds than fasten them on him."

That a great and crying sin against both God and man is involved in the very nature of war is apparent when we consider that it necessitates the subordination of the will and the conscience to the control of another, so that at his bidding the soldier may be required to commit terrible crimes against his fellow. The one invariable condition of all war, without which an army would be but a mob, is that every soldier shall swear unconditional and absolute obedience to his commanding officer, without any reservation of the rights of conscience or of private judgment. His officer commands him to shoot certain persons that are in the ranks of what is called "the enemy;" and he may not stop to inquire whether they are there of their own choice, whether they have been guilty of any crime that is worthy of death, or whether they have not just as good a right to life and its enjoyments as he has to his own. His only reason for killing them is that he has been commanded to do so, and is sworn to obey. They may have been actuated by as purely patriotic motives as himself. They have done him no personal wrong, and if they had he has no right to kill them. If he has duly studied the causes of the war (and few soldiers do know all the facts), he may be satisfied that the government that brought them into the field was guilty of a great wrong, and that its leaders ought to be punished. But these, of all others, are the ones that escape, while the men that have been deceived, coaxed or forced into the field are to be slaughtered by other men just as honest and simple-minded as themselves. He is commanded to plant a battery and throw shells into a city that is five miles away, but in easy range of his guns. He may not wait till he finds out whether there are not helpless women and children who will be murdered. He is ordered and must obey, or be court-martialed and shot.

Vast multitudes of men sacrifice their consciences and their lives for what? On the altar of their country? No: but to gratify the behests of those who trifle with human agony. History is full of illustrations. When Napoleon Bonaparte, in his Egyptian campaign, commanded his surgeon to poison 400 of his own wounded soldiers, he had only to obey. In a few minutes they were dead men. When at Jaffa, in the same campaign, he took 2,000 Turkish prisoners, he ordered them shot and thrown into the sea. The soldiers who executed the murder had only to obey. During our late war one of our gunboats, cruising in the Gulf, saw a large ship with the Union flag. They ran alongside, and asked, "What ship is this?" The answer was the "Alabama," and a succession of broadsides sent our vessel to the bottom.

Is it said that some of these things were contrary to the laws of war? But who is to judge? Can the private soldier find out whether every command is in harmony with these laws? Surely not; and if he could, it by no means follows that the laws of war are the same as the laws of God. It is neither the laws of God nor the laws of war that he is sworn to obey, but the absolute will of another. Now I hold that no man has a right to make a promise to do wrong, or to do anything that he is not sure is in harmony with the laws of his Maker. If he does so, he is guilty alike for the wicked promise and the wicked deeds included in its fulfillment. Surely no man has a right to swear to do what will probably be wrong; and it is always probable, if not certain, that war will work injury to some who are innocent. Every man is subject to divine law. He is bound always to obey God irrespective of any promise or commands, and hence has no right to make any promise that may involve disobedience.

It is sometimes said that a soldier takes his oath with a mental reservation that nothing shall be required of him that is contrary to God's law of justice and mercy. But military law knows nothing of such reservations. If it did who is to be the judge? If a soldier should plead this reservation as his reason for desertion, they would shoot him none the less. But, it is said, men have a right to disobey a wicked law and suffer martyrdom for their disobedience. But they have no right to promise to do what they know will be wicked, even if they are willing to suffer for their disobedience. If martyrdom comes in the line of our duty we may not shun it, but we have no right to seek it.

Surely the oath of a soldier involves what may be wrong, and hence he ought not to take it. But if it is wrong for him to take such an oath, then no government has a right to ask him to do it, and hence no government has a right to engage in war. All enactments, says Blackstone, that are contrary to fundamental morality are in their nature void. Individuals and governments alike owe supreme allegiance to God's law.

CAMPAIGNS AGAINST IGNORANCE AND SLAVERY.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

I have lately been studying a chart representing the relative illiteracy North and South, the amount of money spent for education, and the financial ability of each State. Ohio has five per cent ignorant; Alabama has fifty per cent. Ohio spends $2,500,000 on public schools; Alabama $500,000. The first has five times as much taxable property as the second. Verily, Ohio owes it to Alabama to help remove her ignorance. The contrast between New York and Georgia is far greater. Three-fourths of the illiteracy in our country is in sixteen Southern States. The resources of the South are being developed rapidly. But labor is fifty per cent cheaper in the South than in the North. The reason is, it is ignorant labor in the South and educated labor in the North. We have a protective tariff to protect Northern labor against the ignorant labor of Europe. But we can have no tariff to protect it from our own ignorant labor in the South.

What is the remedy? Educate Southern laborers. The churches are doing this. The M. E. church has spent $2,000,000 in the last twenty years, establishing and maintaining colleges and academies—Clark University, New Orleans, Little Rock, Central Tennessee, etc. The American Missionary Association (Congregational) has spent $2,000,000 in Atlanta University, Fisk University, Howard University, Talladega, Straight and others. The Baptist and Presbyterian churches have spent about $1,500,000 each.

It was my privilege to visit Nashville, Tenn., an educational center in the South. Here is Vanderbilt University, under the control of the M. E. church South, with a campus of seventy-six acres, buildings costing $500,000, and an endowment of $1,500,000. On the other side of the city is the old Nashville College. During the war it was abandoned, but since then it has been run as a Normal College. The buildings are ancient, but substantial. They get the use of the old Peabody fund, and will probably have it all ($1,500,000) for an endowment soon. These two are for whites, and have 500 students each. Near the former is Fisk University. The Fisk Jubilee Singers canvassed America, and sang in the courts of Europe, and cleared $125,000. With this the ladies' dormitory was erected. The gentlemen's dormitory cost $60,000, and the gymnasium cost $5,000. They expect to break ground for their main building soon. There are over 500 students here. Near the latter is Central Tennessee College, with nearly 600 students. These four institutions are on the most friendly terms. The students and professors of each visit each other. Here is the solution of the race problem. Educate and Christianize both, and they will dwell together in perfect peace. It was also my privilege to speak in the last two colleges named, and arrangements have been made for more than one lecture in the Normal College.

I next visited Chattanooga, a growing city of 55,000. My mission here was to lecture in U. S. Grant University. This is a place of historic interest. From the college window I saw Lookout Mountain, where Hooker fought above the clouds, Mission Ridge, which Sherman tried all day to ascend but could not, Cemetery Hill, which Phil. Sheridan scaled and broke the enemy's line, and Pea Ridge, where Thomas, reinforced by Hooker, turned the enemy's left. Beyond are Crab Orchard, distinctly visible, and Chickamauga Creek, where Garfield distinguished himself.

Near us is the old fort where Grant witnessed this fearful carnage. Grant recognized the strategic importance of Chattanooga. When he took command of the army of the Tennessee he telegraphed from Louisville: "Hold Chattanooga." The fearless reply came: "We will hold it till we starve." All the Union army of the West was gathered here. If Bragg had not blundered at Chickamauga, and failed to follow up his advantage, he could have swept the whole Union army into the river. But that was not to be. Atlanta, 150 miles southeast, soon fell, and the backbone of the rebellion was broken. The same strategic points are taken in attacking the ignorance of the South. Nashville, Chattanooga, Knoxville and Atlanta are educational centers.

FRATERNITY INSURANCE.

BY REV. HOWARD S. WILSON.

At a public meeting of the Heptasophs, an insurance fraternity, held in Mount Pleasant last night, S. A. Will, of Pittsburgh, Supreme Archon of the order, and its highest officer, made a statement to which I wish to call your attention. It impressed me as a candid confession of the falseness of the usually advertised benevolent aim of fraternities, and a very significant admission of improper objects and unfair methods of work. The confession is important, because it is made by one of the highest officers of a leading fraternity, and in his official speech to the conclaves of his order. Mr. Will was arguing against the old-line insurance companies, and attempting to overcome prejudices against assessment and fraternity insurance. He said that the orders were formerly at war with one another, but recently there had been a conference of the officers of the leading orders, and now all these fraternal assessment societies acted together for their common benefit. "Why," said he, "the legislature has been in session at Harrisburgh but a little while, and there have been several bills introduced which would injure fraternity assessment societies, but, though it may not be known, those bills cannot be passed, for we have a majority of the legislature members of assessment fraternities."
